The $1,000 reward for the apprehension of the three bandits who held up and robbed the Farmers and Merchanta bank at Spencerville on the afternoon of October 2, has not been turned over as yet to the claimants. Nine persons have made claims as being instrumental in the capture of the robbers. The bank protection committee of the DeKalb County Bankers' association which will determine the award is still investigatting the circumstances and the money will not be turned over until all angles are gone into thoroughly.

HEALTH NURSES TO VISIT COUNTY SCHOOLS

Two Indiana University public health nurses are conducting a special health week program this week (Oct. 22 to Oct. 28) in DeKalb County under the direction of Miss Edna Gabriel, DeKalb County public health nurse. The two nurses, who represent the I. U. extension division and hospitals, are Miss Winifred Sink and Miss Fern Keeler, both graduates of the Indiana University training school for nurses.

DeKalb County is the first county to be visited this fall by the I. U. public health nurses and the nurses plan to conduct health week programs in 21 additional counties over the state before they close their work the middle of April. When they visit these 21 counties, the I. U. extension division and hospitals will have conducted health week programs in each of the 92 counties of the state. During the past four years of this work, 70 counties have been visited by I. U. public health nurses. Steuben county will be visited next by the nurses.

The health week program being put on in DeKalb County by Miss Sink and Miss Keeler is divided into two parts. The first part of their program is a regular health one and will consist of talks on general health to the younger school children, talks on contagious diseases to the high school pupils and the showing of films and slides, in addition to lectures before civic organizations and clubs.

The second phase of the health week program will be devoted to the Riley hospital and will include an explanation of the services which the university hospitals can give, a film on "A Trip Through the Riley Hospital," and slides on the life of Riley.

The two I. U. nurses will conduct special inspections of cases desired by Miss Gabriel.

Chevrolet test cars at General Motors Proving Grounds have been driven upwards of five million miles, according to James M. Crawford, chief engineer of the company, who declared last week that the use of this outdoor laboratory has been one of the principal reasons for Chevrolet's consistent success. "An average of 12 cars are in constant operation, purring up steep inclines, plowing thru sand, mud and snow, driving into the teeth or heavy winds, testing speed and endurance on the track and subjecting themselves to every known performance trial," he said. These cars are not retired until they have been driven 30,000 and 50,000 miles. "After an experimental model attains this mileage it goes to the experimental laboratory to be dismanteled. Two Cows Complete a Long "Bunion Derby"

Two cows, Tomboy and Alice, have just completed a 1,275-mile walk from Brandon, Vt., to St. Louis, Mo., which began last June. Accompanied by three young men who rode in a "dairy on wheels" alongside the bovines, these Ayrshire cows demonstrated their hardiness by tramping over mountains and bad roads and finishing in excellent condition. The animals were milked daily in a portable pasture set up every night at the end of ten to twelve miles of hiking.

CASSEROLE USEFUL FOR SLOW COOKING

Meat or Poultry Especially Adapted to Dish.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Meat and poultry that requires long slow cooking is especially tasty when baked and served in a casserole. The oven heat throughout the cooking period may be fairly low. From 300 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit is a good oven temperature for casserole cooking. All the extractives and juices of the meat are retained in the gravy in the dish, and the steam from this liquid enclosed under the tight lid helps to make the muscles of the meat tender. The best results are usually obtained by adding relatively little water. At the time of adding raw vegetables do not add water, as sufficient moisture will cook out of them. The flavor of any seasoning used—tomatoes, onions, celery, and other vegetables, as well as condiments—will penetrate the entire dish.

Still another advantage of cooking in a casserole is that extra dishwashing is eliminated. There is no baking pan to dispose of after the meal. The casserole goes directly to the table. If vegetables are cooked with the meat, serving dishes are eliminated. As most casserole foods are cut into individual portions for quicker cooking, no carving is done nor are carving implements needed.

The busy housekeeper appreciates the casserole because after the food is once put in it, very little further attention is necessary. For an hour and a half or two hours she is free to attend to other things. She may precook the meat in the casserole early in the day, and as she can easily reheat it at dinner time in the same dish, she can go out for the entire day if she wishes. Foods served from a casserole remain hot at the table longer than those spread out on a platter.

Brown stew of beef, Hungarian goulash, pot roast and many other slowly-cooked meats may be prepared in a casserole. Advantage may thus be taken of the fact that the oven is in use for something else, to plan a casserole dinner. Chicken is perhaps most often served in this way. This method of cooking by slow moist heat, blending with other flavors, makes it possible to serve many an old tough bird palatably, the bureau of home economics points out. Rabbits are cooked in most of the ways chicken is cooked, and a casserole rabbit is always excellent. A slice of ham can be laid in a casserole, covered with tomatoes and cooked until it is deliciously tender.

Sweet Potato Puff Made Most Appetizing Dish

The dryness of some varieties of sweet potatoes can be overcome by mashing them after cooking and making them into a sweet potato puff. This is cooked in a baking dish and comes to the table most appetizingly browned. Potatoes that are irregular in size or shape or that have had to be trimmed can be utilized to make sweet potato puff. Here is a recipe from the bureau of home economics.

5 or 6 medium-sized sweet potatoes.	2 tbs. milk 1 tsp. salt
2 tbs. melted butter
2 eggs

Boil the sweet potatoes in their skins. When tender remove the skins and any discolored portions and press the potatoes through a ricer. There should be about one quart of the potato pulp. Mix until smooth with the milk and butter. Beat the yolks and whites of the eggs separately. Stir the yolks into the potato and then fold in the well-beaten whites. Pile the mixture lightly into a greased baking dish and bake in a moderate oven for 45 minutes or until light and fluffy and brown on the top.

Calf's Tongue Cooked in Casserole Is Delicious

Calf's tongue is one of the "small meats" especially palatable if cooked in a casserole with sliced vegetables, as suggested in this recipe from the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Casserole of Calf's Tongue.

1 calf's tongue	½ cup sliced green peppers
¼ cup butter	1½ tsp. salt
2½ cups sliced carrots	3 cups hot water
2 cups sliced onion	⅛ tsp. pepper
1 cup sliced celery	½ cup stuffed olives sliced thin

Cover the tongue with water, bring to the boiling point, and simmer for about ten minutes. Drain and remove the skin and gristle and place the skinned tongue in a large casserole. Melt the fat in a large skillet and add all the vegetables except the olives, and cook until lightly browned and somewhat dry, stirring constantly. Season with the salt and pepper, put the vegetables over and around the tongue in the casserole, and add the hot water. Cover the casserole and bake in a fairly hot oven for about one hour, or until the tongue is tender. Remove the cover and put the olives over the top of the tongue and vegetables and serve.

Smothered Chicken of Most Delicious Flavor

A heavy broiler is sometimes more satisfactory if "smothered" rather than simply broiled under the flame in a gas oven. Those who like gravy with their chicken will also prefer this method of cooking because of the fine flavored sauce. Directions for preparing it are from the bureau of home economics:

1 broiler chicken weighing about 2 to 2½ lbs.	2 tbs. flour ½ tsp. salt 1 pint milk
4 tbs. butter

Put the chicken in a greased shallow pan with the skin side down and sprinkle lightly with salt. Prepare a sauce of the butter, flour, salt and milk. Pour this sauce over the chicken. Put the pan into a moderate oven and cook for one hour. Turn the chicken and continue the cooking for one-half hour longer or until the chicken is tender and lightly browned. Serve from the dish in which cooked, garnished with chopped parsley. If the gravy is slightly curdled remove the chicken, add a little flour and milk, stir until well blended and smooth, add the chicken, reheat and serve.

ICE CREAM SANDWICH IS TASTY DESSERT

Ice Cream Sandwich Served as Dessert.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Ice cream need not always be served in the same ways—sliced from a brick, or dipped up by the spoonful. Borrow a suggestion from the caterer and treat the family to an "ice cream sandwich" once in a while. As it's a dessert, the substantial part of the sandwich is appropriately made of cake—sponge cake, or angel food. Make the sponge cake by your own preferred recipe, or by the one herewith, given by the bureau of home economics. Bake it in a square or oblong pan, in a layer thick enough to split horizontally with a sharp knife when you are ready to combine it with the ice cream. Use any flavor of ice cream you like to put between the layers. One large "sandwich" on a platter makes an attractive dessert when it comes to the table, or you may find it more convenient to cut the cake into individual portions or to bake it in muffin rings and fill each one separately with the ice cream.

Other variations are easily made. Chocolate, butterscotch, or fruit sauce may be served with the "ice cream sandwich," or whipped cream, sweetened and flavored. Any form of ice cream sandwich should be put together just before being served. If in one cake on a platter it should be cut with a thin, sharp, broad-bladed knife.

Sponge Cake.

4 eggs	1 tsp. baking powder.
1 cup sugar	¼ tsp. salt
3 tbs. cold water	¼ tsp. vanilla
1 cup sifted soft-wheat flour.	¼ tsp. lemon juice

Separate the egg yolks from the whites and beat the yolks well. Gradually beat in the sugar. Add three tablespoonfuls of water and continue the beating until the mixture is very thick and light. Sift the dry ingredients together and then fold them into the egg and sugar mixture. Then fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs, and add the flavoring. Grease a shallow pan slightly, pour in the cake batter, and bake from 45 to 50 minutes in a moderate oven at the temperature of 325 degrees Fahrenheit.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

By The Baroness Orczy

WNU Service

"Malediction!" But Raffet got no further. Astonishment not unmixed with terror rendered him speechless. The Scarlet Pimpernel! Ye Gods! And the chief of section and his friend at the mercy of that fiend! Even now his straining ears seemed to perceive through those calls for help a triumphant battle cry in a barbaric tongue.

"Here!" he cried to the troopers. "Two of you are sufficient to bring these rascals along; and you corporal, and two men come with me. Citizen Lauzet and his friends are being murdered even now."

He hurried down the road followed by the corporal and two men of the gendarmerie, while those that were left behind saw to it that the perpetrators of all this additional outrage and of all this pother were duly started on their way.

To them Raffet shouted a final: "Three of you remain to guard the prisoners and make ready for an immediate start when we return." Then he disappeared round the bend in the road.

The shouting had ceased as Raffet and his troopers hurried along. Indeed, at first he might have thought that his ears had deceived him, had not that agonized call for help still risen insistently through the gloom. He searched the darkness, and suddenly a sight greeted him by the roadside which caused the hair to stand up on his head. At first this seemed nothing but a bundle lying half in and half out of the ditch in the mud, with the drip-drip from the trees making a slimy puddle around it. It was from this bundle that the calls for help and the curses proceeded.

It was appalling! Almost unbelievable for there were the chief of section in the rural division of the department of Seine et Oise, Citizen Lauzet, and his friend from Paris whom Captain Raffet knew as Citizen Chauvelin, a man who stood high in the estimation of the government, and they were lying in a muddy puddle in the ditch like a pair of calves tied together for market. Raffet might have disbelieved his eyes, had it not been for the language which Citizen Lauzet used all the while that the rope which bound him was being cut by the corporal.

"Thank the Lord," Raffet exclaimed fervently, "that you are safe!"

"I'll have 'em flayed alive, the rascals!" Lauzet exclaimed in a voice rendered feeble and hoarse with much shouting, as well as with rage. "The guillotine is too mild a death for such miscreants. They attacked me, citizen captain, would you believe it? Me! Chief of section in the rural gendarmerie! Have you ever heard of such an outrage? They shouted at us from behind. My friend and I were riding along quite slowly, and we had just turned into the bridle path from the road. We heard the cart and all the shouting, but we thought that they were just a pack of drunken oafs returning from market. So we paid no heed; not even when anon we heard that on the road the cart had drawn up and, chancing to glance back at the moment, I saw those louts jumping helter skelter out of the cart. And the next moment they were on us, the lot of them. Ten or a dozen of them they were, the rogues!"

"The miserable scoundrels!" Raffet ejaculated fervently.

"They dragged us out of our saddles," Lauzet continued, "they beat us about the head."

"Name of a name!"

"And all the while they kept on shouting, 'Traitor! Traitor! Give up the English spy to us.' In vain did we cry and protest. They would not hear us, and what could we do against a dozen of them? Then finally they bound us with ropes, wound our cravats about our mouths so that we could scarcely breathe, and lifted us into that jolting cart, where we lay more dead than alive while it was driven by a lout at breakneck speed."

"Have no fear, citizen," Raffet put in forcefully, "their punishment shall be exemplary."

"I have no fear," Lauzet retorted dryly, "for I'll see to their punishment myself. The scamps, the limbs of Satan! But I'll teach them! There we lay, citizen captain, at the bottom of the cart, my friend Citizen Chauvelin, who wore the tricolor scarf of office around his middle, and I, chief commissary of the district, and those ruffians actually dared to wipe their shoes on us! So we drove for a kilometer and a half through the forest. Then presently the cart drew up and all these louts jumped down like a pack of puppies and ran away up the hill with shouts that would wake the dead. The last I remember, for in the jolting and my cramped position I had partly lost consciousness, was that my friend and I were lifted out of the cart as unceremoniously as we had been thrust into it. We were then thrown into the ditch by the roadside, in the mud, just where you ultimately found us, and our cravats were loosened from round our mouths. Immediately we started screaming for help, but there was such a din going on up the road that we felt the sound of our voices could not possibly reach you. Fortunately in the end, you did hear us, or maybe we should have perished of cold and inanition."

"Malediction!" Raffet swore viciously. "And you might have been attacked by those cursed English spies while you lay helpless here. We thought we heard them, and their battle cry, and hurried to your assistance."

Chauvelin showed no emotion. As soon as the rope that held him had been severed he had sat up on a broken tree stump, staring straight out before him into the mist, and meditatively stroking his sore wrists and arms.

When first those abominable louts had thrust him and Lauzet in the bottom of the cart and he lay there bound and gagged, nursing his stupendous wrath and hopes of revenge, he had become aware that the driver, who still sat aloft just above him, had suddenly turned and, leaning over, had peered into his face. It had only been a brief glance; the next moment the man was sitting up quite straight again, and all that Chauvelin saw of him was his back, with the great breadth of shoulders and a general look of power and tenacity. But it was the brief vision of that glance that Chauvelin now was striving to recapture. The blue-gray eyes with their heavy lids that could not be disguised, and the mocking glance which had seemed to him like rasping metal against his exacerbated nerves. And suddenly he called to Raffet. "The driver and the cart, where are they?"

CHAPTER VIII

Charles-Marie

The captain's sharp eyes searched the mist that was rising in the valley.

"The driver seems to be on the box," he said. "I shall want him to drive these rascals back to Mantes."

"Send him to me at once," Chauvelin broke in curtly.

Raffet gave the necessary orders, although inwardly he chafed at this new delay. The prisoners slowly continued their way, and Chauvelin waited, expectant. For what? He could not have told you. He certainly did not expect to be brought face to face with his old enemy. And yet. But whatever vague hopes he might have entertained were dissipated soon enough by an exclamation from Raffet.

"Charles-Marie! What in a dog's name are you doing here?"

And a weak, querulous voice rose in reply. "He told me I was to run along and drive the cart back to Mantes for him. He—"

"He?" queried Raffet sharply. "Who?"

"I don't know, Citizen Captain," replied Charles-Marie.

"Who ordered you to leave the diligence and your horses?"

"I don't know, Citizen Captain," protested the unfortunate Charles-Marie. "It's God's truth, I don't know."

"You must know why you are not sitting on the box of the diligence."

"Yes. I know that, for I scrambled down as soon as I saw Gaspard fall on you, Citizen Captain."

"Why did you scramble down?"

"Because the horses were restive. At the first pistol shot they started rearing and I had a mighty task to hold them. Fortunately, some one came and gave me a hand with them."

"What do you mean by 'some one came'? Who was it?"

"He was a drover from Aincourt, Citizen Captain, and so he knew all about horses; and how could I keep four terrified horses quiet all by myself?"

"You miserable fool!"

"All very well, Citizen Captain, but I never was a fighting man, and I didn't like those pistol shots all about me. One of them might have caught me, I say, and it was only right I should find cover somewhere, lest indeed I be hit by mistake."

"You abominable coward!" Raffet rejoined savagely. "But all that does not explain how you got here."

"Well, citizen, it was like this: The drover from Aincourt saw that I was not altogether happy, and he said to me, 'There'll be a lot more fighting presently, when the English spies come to attack.' I said nothing at first. All I could do was to groan, for as I say, I'm not a fighting man. I went out of the army because I was too ill to fight, and my mother—"

Oldest Road in America

The old Spanish road, built across Mexico in the Sixteenth century, is believed to be the oldest road in North America. It was built in the form of a letter "Y" with the lower point starting at Vera Cruz on the gulf. The northern prong touches the Pacific at San Blas and the southern tip at Acapulco. Because of this road the west-bound convoy lines from the Philippines were spared the dangerous navigation around Cape Horn. There still is evidence that this old trail was used by the Indians before the Spaniards broadened it from a pack-mule path to a highway.

Lesson for October 27

THE CHRISTIAN'S VIEW OF RECREATION

LESSON TEXT—Jer. 31:12, 13, Zech. 8:16, Mark 2:18-28, Mark 6:30-32, John 2:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Right Way to Play.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Right Way to Play.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Play Does for Us.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Recreation in Community Life.

In the last lesson we saw that work was God's primal law for man. In work there is a certain breaking down of cells which needs constant repair; therefore, in order that work may continue there must be recreation. Recreation means re-creation. Failure to discern this truth has made of recreation dissipation. In this light let us view the salient points in the scripture selected.

I. The Coming Golden Age (Jer. 31:12, 13).

Though Jeremiah was the weeping prophet, and presented dark pictures of Israel's condition, God gave him a view of Israel's golden age. He made known how that through the mighty hand of God the chosen nation should be delivered from bondage and brought into their own land where peace, prosperity and gladness should prevail. The source of all real recreation is right relationship with God. God is the source of all joy. Nothing so powerfully affects the physical organism in its renewal as joy in God. In this coming age the streets of the city will be safe for old people and children (Zech. 8:4, 5).

II. The Christian's Relation to Fasting (Mark 2:18-23).

1. A question asked (v. 18).

The very joyfulness of the disciples of Christ in contrast with the disciples of John and the Pharisees, moved an inquiry as to the reason. The law of Moses only required fasting on the Day of Atonement. John the Baptist was in prison, therefore it is clear as to why his disciples were fasting.

2. Christ's answer (vv. 19, 20).

He declared that the children of the bride chamber could not fast as long as they had the bridegroom with them. The joy of present companionship with Christ prevented their fasting. This shows that Christ is the real source of joy. He recognized that when the bridegroom was absent, there was occasion for fasting. Christ is now away, therefore fasting is permissible. In times of great need the early church fasted. Before sending out the first missionaries they fasted and prayed (Acts 13:1, 2). More fasting and less feasting would be helpful today in the ordination of Christian workers.

III. The Christian's Relation to the Sabbath (Mark 2:24-28).

The disciples were charged with lawlessness because they plucked ears of corn as they walked through the fields on the Sabbath day. In Christ's defense against this charge, He

1. Cites a precedent (v. 26).

It was the case of David, their great king, who in time of need ate the shewbread which was only lawful for the priests. The principle set forth is that the higher law of human need warranted David in doing this which was out of the regular line of duty.

2. Showed the nature of the Sabbath law (v. 27).

The Sabbath was made for man, therefore its right use is determined by what it contributes to man's good. The Sabbath should not be man's cruel master, but his helpful servant.

3. Jesus is Lord of the Sabbath (v. 28).

It was He who instituted it when creation was finished; therefore He had the right to use it as it pleased Him for man's good.

IV. The Need of a Vacation (Mark 6:30-32).

The tragic death of John the Baptist had just occurred, and the disciples had just returned from a strenuous missionary tour. Christ, perceiving their need, invited them to come apart with Him for rest.

V. Jesus Attending a Wedding (John 2:1-11).

This is a striking sidelight on the spirit of Christ. A marriage feast was graced by His presence. In this act He set a mark of honor upon marriage, which is the most joyous of earth's occasions. In this act man's holy Redeemer lifted the holy ordinance of marriage into its dignity and beauty. In the course of the feast, when the wine was exhausted, He wrought His first miracle rather than have its festivities marred.

Glorious

Earth has not a spectacle more glorious or more fair to show than this—love tolerating intolerance; charity covering as with a veil even the sin of the lack of charity.—F. W. Robertson.

Overcoming Obstacles

An easy life is not likely to be a very valuable life to itself or to others. Strength comes by overcoming obstacles, and it is the strong life that can best help those about it.

ATWATER KENT RADIO

SCREEN-GRID [BATTERY . . . OR HOUSE-CURRENT] ELECTRO-DYNAMIC

Tune in, sit back and listen—2,500,000 have done it!

No time out for trouble . . . no lost programs . . . in the millions of homes that boast Atwater Kent Radio. Atwater Kent owners don't worry about service because they so seldom need it. And they banished costly repair bills the day they decided to treat themselves to the world's leader in radio.

All you want in radio . . . without a bit of bother

WHY will you find more Atwater Kents on farms than any other set? Why will an Atwater Kent owner tell you that the only set he would swap for it is another Atwater Kent? Because it brings in everything on the air as it ought to sound—with trouble-free operation.

And what a thrill you get every time you tune in, sit back, and listen to the mellow tone of the new Screen-Grid, Electro-Dynamic Atwater Kent Radio—the greatest in Atwater Kent's years of leadership. What a thrill when you sense its giant power, its fabulous reach, its needle-point selectivity.

See it, hear it, the next time you're shopping in town. Designed for central station current or battery operation.

Why Idea of Fireman's Life Appealed to Him

The visitor, as is usually the case, put the inevitable question to little Billy:

"What are you going to be when you grow up to be a man?"

Billy was right there with his answer:

"A fireman."

The boy's father swelled up with pride.

"You see," he told the visitor, "my boy's ambition is to be a regular he-man, and none of these sheiks and drug-store cowboys. He's going to be a man of action."

"And why do you want to be a fireman?" pursued the caller further.

"Aw, because all they do is to sit around the station house all day and loaf," was Billy's reply.

And the discussion ended there.

The Flapper

James H. Carrier, head of the international beauty contest, said on descending from the President Harding with his international beauties:

"This is the age of the flapper. We worship girls today as the Athenians used to worship boys.

"The flapper in consequence is suffering from swelled head. A flapper the other day was heard to say in a night club to a millionaire:

"'A man is like a telescope to me. I draw him out, see through him and then shut him up.'"

Quite Different

"Let's see! Your nephew attained his majority several months ago, didn't he?"

"Yes," replied honest Farmer Hornbeak, "but it ain't a working majority even yet."—Kansas City Star.

His Modest Conclusion

The great trouble with the people who don't like us is that they have such poor taste.—Los Angeles Times

Oldest Known Will

The oldest will in existence is the one executed by an Egyptian named Uah in 2548 B. C. The will was written on papyrus in hieroglyphics and sealed with a scarab. It reposes in the museum attached to London university. The will is remarkable for the clear and definite way in which it disposes of the maker's property, and interesting in that his estate is left to his wife, giving her discretion about the manner in which it was to be divided among their children.

For Best Results in Home Dyeing

You can always give richer, deeper, more brilliant colors to faded or out-of-style dresses, hose, coats, draperies, etc., with Diamond Dyes. And the colors stay in through wear and washing!

Here's the reason. Diamond Dyes contain the highest quality anilines money can buy. And it's the anilines that count! They are the very life of dyes.

Plenty of pure anilines make Diamond Dyes easy to use. They go on evenly without spotting or streaking. Try them next time and see why authorities recommend them; why millions of women will use no other dyes.

You get Diamond Dyes for the same price as ordinary dyes; 15c, at any drug store.

The outlook for Thanksgiving turkey was pronounced bright today by economists of the department of agriculture. Estimates place this year's crop at 9 per cent larger than a year ago. The increase, it was reported, though general throughout the turkey producing states, is largest in the eastern and southeastern states where the crop has been small in recent years.

The new 1930 license plates are the same size as those in current use but a reversal has been made in the combination of colors. The plates for the next year are orange on a nevy blue background. A program and lunch was enjoyed. A very liberal quantity of good things was presented the pastor. Due to inclemency of the weather Harlan Church did not participate.

Albert Bainbridge, residing in Grant Township near Moore, died suddenly Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the yard at his home from heart trouble. He was found by his granddaughter after he had fallen off of a bench upon which he was sitting. Mr. Bainbridge had been painting the house and worked all day Friday. Toward late afternoon he went into the house to rest; but a short time afterwards he walked into the yard and sat down on a bench. Within a few minutes he fell upon his hands and knees and was found almost in this position.

With the Churches

THE CHURCH

Let's take the church apart for a minute and see what it is made of. Usually we refer to the church as an impersonal thing. Let us take off the roof. Take down the walls and look inside and see what is in the church. We just find one thing in that church. That one thing is you. Let's think about the church made up of what it really is made of—you—and you and the you's put together make up the church. The only way for us to get a mental grasp of it is to break it up into these small units. This small unit is me. Turn it around and it is you. If the church is made up of you then you are not going to have quite so much satisfaction in standing off and criticizing it, are you? If I am responsible, if I am it, I will be a little more lenient. Whatever is the weakness of the church it is the weakness you put into it. Whatever of value is in the church is you. Wherever the church is failing to measure up, it is you. That is not a pleasant thing to face. And yet I am saying to you we had better face the Father and have him look at us and say, "You failed to do your part in the church." Why crucify — slay — persecute yourself because you refuse to bear your own cross?

Every member a worshipper, every worshiper a worker, every worker a giver and every giver a spiritual force, is the ideal set up by the One who died to establish the church. Let us make it our ideal and do it today.

Quick, Quiet and Flexible!

You can have no conception of the high quality of Plymouth behavior until you have driven this amazing Chrysler-built car.

Plymouth is smooth at all speeds—and amazingly quiet and flexible. Take the wheel—drive as you will. Throttle it down, step it up, run the whole range of speed. Not a flutter—not a tremor. A new crankshaft, dynamically and statically balanced; lengthened engine stroke and increased piston displacement; larger main bearings and connecting rods and light aluminum-alloy pistons. All these play a big part in creating Plymouth's new smoothness.

BLOSSOM TIME IN FORT WAYNE, OCTOBER 25–26

One of the outstanding musical events of the season will occur when the celebrated operetta "Blossom Time," which is based on the life and music of Franz Schubert, the renowned Viennese music master, is presented at the Shrine Auditorium, Fort Wayne, on Friday and Saturday, October 25th and 26th, with a matinee on Saturday, coming here direct from the Hanna Theatre in Cleveland.

The company that will present "Blossom Time" here is making one of the most widely advertised tours in theatrical history, covering a period of nearly two years, taking it into the more important and leading cities of this country and Canada, and stretching from Boston to Seattle.

A whole new production, more elaborate and beautiful than ever used in this memorable musical play, has been designed and built for this extensive tour, and the company that has been assembled to sing and act in it, has been drawn from grand opera, from music conservatories and from the Boadway dramatic stage. Hence it may rightly be termed a super-company, and one of the finest of its kind that has ever played here in any similar musical play.

The rain of the past three days turned to a snow storm during the night Tuesday and continued through Wednesday.

Three Spanish Cities

©The National Geographic Society

Air View of Part of Toledo, Showing Tagus River Bridge.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE regional character of Spain can be glimpsed by visits to several of her outstanding cities. Toledo, in the central part of the peninsula, is venerable with age. It is asserted, variously, that Hercules; Tubal, grandson of Noah; and Jews who fled from Nebuchadnezzar, had a hand in shaping its early destiny.

The city occupies the crest of a hill rising nearly 200 feet from the Tagus. It is 47 miles southwest of Madrid. When the catapult was the modern engine of war, it was almost impregnable. The Tagus formed an admirable moat on the south, east and west sides; and the neck of land on the north stretching toward a fertile plain, was protected by the plurality of walls that surrounded the city.

It is difficult to imagine that within less than two hours' train ride from the Spanish capital, there is a city with marked oriental appearance. The Puente de Alcantara, the principal gateway to Toledo on the east, is of Moorish design with massive high towers at each end. It was built in the Thirteenth century.

From the time one steps upon this bridge, until the river is recrossed by way of Puente de San Martin, dating back fifty years earlier than the Puente de Alcantara, the many relics and ruins of medieval days in Toledo give a flavor of Palestine and Arabia, with a touch of French Gothic here and there.

High above the Alcantara, looms the Alcazar, a large rectangular stone structure that was once a castle, but is used now as a military school. It occupies the highest point of Toledo.

The road approaching the city from the bridge winds around the hill past the Hospital de Santa Cruz, a Fifteenth century building, and then through a Moorish archway that was nearly 400 years old when Columbus discovered America. It leads to the public square which still retains its Moorish name—the Zocodover.

A few blocks away toward the middle of the city, the lofty but graceful tower of Toledo cathedral rises above the housetops. Unfortunately, there is no cathedral close. The narrow, winding streets, bordered by unattractive buildings do not permit a full view of the edifice. It is a splendid example of French-Gothic architecture with carved monuments, stained glass and tracery work comparable to that of other European cathedrals. It covers about the same area as that of Cologne cathedral and took 266 years to build. The foundation stone was laid in 1227.

Malaga, Southern Seaport.

Somewhat different from Toledo is Malaga, seaport of the south, which is off the route of the majority of seasoned European travelers. This ancient and famous seaport is not remote—it won prestige in earlier times by the frequent sailings from its harbor to England, France and Italy. It still does a considerable export business to those countries and far more distant places. But it seems to renounce tourists to retain its traditions.

Its white houses glisten in a seldom failing sunshine on the blue Mediterranean, and a rampart of hills helps keep its temperature equable and dry. These qualities have made it a rendezvous for a few sufferers from heart and lung troubles; but its aridity is hard on nervous patients. Indeed, at certain seasons, it is averred, courts of justice recognize the weather conditions as an extenuating circumstance in crime.

Malaga grows her famous grapes for raisins and wine, and gardens to the west of the city yield an amazing volume of melons, almonds, pomegranates and olives.

Today's Malaga is a direct contrast to its Moorish magnificence. It is quaint and interesting, but simplicity prevails. There is little formal entertainment, theaters are rather indifferent, the bull-ring, on a Sunday afternoon, offers the week's gala event. Romance lives in the evening courtship scenes, where swains thrum their guitars to win a smile and a chat with fair maids guarded by iron bars.

Two principal indulgences of the Malaga man are cigarettes and sweetments. There are no rules against smoking on Malaga street cars, even if the doors and windows are closed, and there is no prejudice against a man walking through the streets, or sitting at the bull fight arena, nibbling at some dainty confection. Sweetmeat shops abound. And also donkeys. The affection which the American lavishes upon horse or dog, the Andalusian lavishes upon his donkey. Donkeys and sweetmeats are not wholly unrelated. On a stroll through Malaga's outskirts one may see scores of donkey ears and donkey noses, which is about all of the animals which project beyond the loads of brushwood they convey to the bakeries.

Valencia del Cid.

The intensive agriculture of its environs colors the life of Valencia, our third sample city, situated on the Mediterranean sea midway down the eastern coast of Spain. Irrigated orchards that are more like gardens than groves still mark Valencia's countryside away from the busy hubbub of the port. "The scent bottle of Andalus" the Moors called it. Spaniards know their city of 256,000 people as "Valencia del Cid." Thus do they surrender the city once more to the Cid, a Robin Hood bandit, who is quite lovable at a distance of nine centuries.

A practice in harmony with the old Valencia can be witnessed every Thursday morning at ten o'clock before the Door of the Apostles, main entrance to the five-hundred-year-old cathedral. Here meets the Tribunal de las Aguas, the Court of the Waters. The Tribunal's court room is the pavement, open to the blue sky, and has been for five centuries. The judges' bench is a sofa, upholstered in green. It appears from some mysterious hiding place. Following the judges' sofa comes the bar of justice, a portable iron railing. And in due course seven judges. But how can these men judge? They have no long black cloaks. They have no wigs like the English judges. They have not professionally serious faces. They are dressed like peasants, in Sunday black with black felt hats. Indeed, they are ordinary peasants elected by the peasant water users of the Huerta or gardens of Valencia's countryside.

Dazzling light plays upon Valencia's varicolored domes and towers, of color which adorns the canvas of Valencia's Sorolla. The making of these tiles is a Valencian industry which contributes to the chromatic character of other Spanish cities.

Valencia's cathedral has been spoiled somewhat by "restorations" but the campanile where the Cid took his bride to view the conquered land still offers the visitor a marvelous panorama of fertile and highly cultivated plains.

The bells of this tower give life to the plains around. Their hourly peals tell the time when each tiller of the soil may open the gates of irrigation channels to release the waters for his parched land.

Paid in Fish Hooks

An island on which an able-bodied man is satisfied with five fishhooks for a day's work and a large ax for a fortnight's work, is described in a British Colonial report just issued. This spot is Rennell island, one of the least known of the Pacific islands, which was recently the subject of a geological survey. The inhabitants of the island are estimated to number at least 700 and are still untouched by white influence. They are described as "abjectly poor" and practically vegetarians.

Sparsely Settled

Edinburgh, the only settlement on the island of Tristan da Cunha, is about one hundred thirteen years old. It was named for the duke of Edinburgh.

BORROW STYLES FROM OLD SPAIN; ONE-PIECE STREET DRESS VOGUE

Evening Frock in Spanish Style.

NEVERTHELESS and notwithstanding the kindly advice of that honored bard of ancient days who said "neither a borrower or a lender be," modern fashionists are doing just that—borrowing ideas right and left from picturesque Old Spain.

All along the line in the autumn and winter style parade, there is evidence of Spanish influence. The world of fashion is being feted with everything from boleros to pompons, not forgetting quantities of black lace, a profusion of graceful fringe, hand-tooled leather purses reviving Cordova craftsmanship, gorgeous fans and exotic shawls.

Modernists in the style area are flying the Spanish color, too—red, yellow, and black! A black glove with turn-back cuff of red, if you please, an all black muchly be-flounced black lace frock with a red rose posed on the left shoulder, a street costume of Spanish red tweed topped with a pom-pon-trimmed toreador sailor. Delightfully Spanish has the color card gone.

In matter of silhouettes there is the adoption of low-positioned very full flares which join the molded-to-the-figure bodice tops, giving long, lithe and slender lines after the manner of the evening frock in the picture which, by the way, is made of Spanish taffeta. Every detail of this costume breathes the atmosphere of Spain from picturesque fan to clicking high heels.

It is interesting to note how completely the bolero has ingratiated itself into the hearts of dress designers. Both evening and daytime frocks extemporize on the theme, playing it in every possible key, sometimes merely suggesting through applied trimmings, other times boldly asserting the short jacket cut the Spanish way.

The bolero cloth dress is very much in fashion for youth, the skirt buttoning to a simple little blouse either lingerie or of a contrasting material, the bolero made with long sleeves, being separate to slip on and off with ease.

Then, too, very formal dine-and-dance frocks are made of handsome moires, faille silks, taffetas or other rich weaves, which being cut princess in the newer longer lengths, are accompanied with detachable or separate boleros, often of self-fabric, but just as often of spangled net or handsomely beaded velvet or some other equally as intriguing fantasy.

Jewelry which milady will wear this season is also designed in Spanish motif with radiantly colorful metals and crystals.

Come what may in the wake of the present sensational onrush of elaborated fashions into the style-picture, the prestige of the smartly but simply made one-piece street dress remains unchallenged. As a matter of fact the really swagger thing to wear about town is the tailored or rather semi-tailored one-piece gown of some one or other of the delightsome new lightweight woolens such as are so widely heralded throughout fashion's realm this season.

A novelty woolen which glistens with rayon interweavings is especially recommended for the making of the modish frock for general daytime wear. It is one of these attractive rayon-wool cloths which serves as the medium for the genteel mode in the picture, the rayon and wool being interworked in an etamine weave.

Note below how eminently up to demand of fashion is this costume, even to its slightest detail. It suggests the new molded-to-the-form slenderizing lines which are being stressed for the future. Because of the carefully positioned side plaits the hemline flares very properly, as it should. The sleeves display novel and effective treatment at the wrists, while the vestee at the front opening exploits a popular style-formula for this season. The scarf which hints at a cape because of its circular-cut, also answers to the call of the mode.

In the current catalogue of fabrics the name rayon appears as frequently and as importantly as silk, wool, cotton or linen. One of the most interesting and deserving-of-mention new rayon manifestations is a series of weaves which have every appearance of handsome wool. The thought which intrigues the practical woman in connection with these marvelous rayon suitings and dress materials, which look so wool-like only an expert can detect the difference, is the fact that they actually launder as perfectly as cotton or linen. Fabric-wise couturiers and dressmakers at home and abroad are using these washable to-all-appearance-wool rayons with utmost success for the making of many of their niftiest suits and ensembles.

Rumor has it in regard to the one-piece street dress which is outstanding for immediate wear, that later it is to be topped with an extremely modish short fur jacket.

Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Hitting on All Eight!

Doctor Gives Hint to Lucky Salesman

IT'S a wise man that knows when he is slipping. Mr. R. F. Myers of 711 Rosedale Street, Baltimore, had the good fortune to get his tip straight from one of his doctor customers (he was selling for a pharmaceutical house) and since that lucky visit he has increased his business 50 per cent.

For two years he had been driving from town to town, and naturally this threw his elimination out of shape. He felt himself slipping. Cathartics only made him worse. Then one day he was calling on a wise old physician, and asked his advice. "What you need, my boy," said the doctor, "is a simple, easy, normal way to clean the poisons out of your system—we all have them—and with your kind of work they certainly cut down efficiency. Why don't you try Nujol?"

"Well, believe it or not," says Mr. Myers, "in a few days I felt like a new man. 'What's got into you?' asked the home office, 'your business has increased 50 per cent!'"

That's the great thing about Nujol. As soon as it begins to clean the poisons out of your system it makes you feel so well that you can almost always do a much better job.

Nujol is not a medicine and contains no drugs. It is perfectly harmless, forms no habit. It is simply bodily lubrication, which everybody needs. You, like everybody else!

Why put off good health any longer? Go into any good drug store and get a bottle of Nujol in a sealed package. Costs so little and means so much! Maybe you can increase your efficiency 50 per cent too Unnecessary Pain!

Nowadays, people take Bayer Aspirin for many little aches and pains, and as often as they encounter any pain.

Why not? It is a proven antidote for pain. It works!

And Bayer Aspirin tablets are utterly harmless. You have the medical profession's word for that; they do not depress the heart.

So, don't let a cold "run its course." Don't wait for a headache to "wear off." Or regard neuralgia, neuritis, or even rheumatism as something you must endure. Only a physician can cope with the cause of such pain, but you can always turn to Bayer Aspirin for relief.

Bayer Aspirin is always available, and it always helps. Familiarize yourself with its many uses, and avoid a lot of needless suffering.

POULTRY FACTS

SOY BEANS USEFUL IN LAYING RATION

Vegetable Protein Concentrates Used in Test.

Recent experiments with the use of vegetable protein concentrates have shown that a complete or at least a partial substitution may be made. The work has been largely with cottonseed and soy bean meal with little if any work on ground soy beans. The success of these vegetable protein concentrates depends upon two factors. First a larger amount is necessary in the mash because they do not run as high in protein as do meat scrap and tankage. Second, since they are low in mineral, additional mineral must be added to make up for this deficiency. The Missouri agricultural experiment station has fed the following mash to laying hens:

Bran	22 lbs.
Shorts	22 lbs.
Corn meal	22 lbs.
Cottonseed or soy bean meal	30 lbs.
Bone meal	4 lbs.
Salt	1 lb.

The above mash constituted about one-third of the ration. It was kept before the hens all the time and in addition a moist, crumbly mash was fed once daily. No meat or milk was employed in the diet. The balance of the ration consisted of corn and oats and regular methods of feeding hens were employed. Oyster shells or limestone rock was before the hens all the time.

Such a ration produced as many eggs per hen as did similar rations in which the mash contained 20 per cent meat scrap or tankage instead of the cottonseed or soy bean meal. The results were not satisfactory unless the bone meal and salt was added. A year's test with ground soy beans failed to produce quite as many eggs as did cottonseed meal. This may be due to the fact that the ground beans were higher in fat and as a result the ration was not properly balanced. A partial substitution may be made and the following mash is recommended:

Bran	24 lbs.
Shorts	24 lbs.
Cornmeal	24 lbs.
Ground soy beans	18 lbs.
Tankage	16 lbs.
Bone meal	2 lbs.
Salt	1 lb.

This should be kept in open troughs before the hens all the time and fed the same as any regular laying mash. It may be that a larger percentage of the beans may be used but it is advisable to await further investigation before following this practice.

Direct Sunlight for Layers Is Essential

A simple, inexpensive and effective way to secure direct sunlight for the layers is to fill in about ten square feet of space at the south side of the house with an eight-inch layer of cinders. The space may well be enclosed to keep the fowls from contaminated soil. In exposed locations it may be necessary to provide a wind break of some kind. Chickens dislike wind and will stay inside to avoid it.

Cinders are especially effective. Because of their dark color they absorb heat from the sun, causing any snow or ice to melt with the first appearance of sunshine. This permits the birds to get out on the warm, dry cinders and bask in the direct sunshine even though the ground is still wet and cold.

Feeding New Corn

Where there is a shortage of corn that is dry enough to grind, a mash that will serve quite well for a short period of feeding can be made up of the following ingredients: 100 pounds of ground oats, 10 pounds of tankage or meat scraps and one pound of salt. If barley is available, 50 pounds barley and 50 pounds of oats are better than using oats alone. This mash should not be fed as a permanent laying ration, however, but just as an emergency ration.

Pullets Begin Laying

As a rule, pullets lay more eggs during their first laying season than during any subsequent season. Consequently, if hatches are correctly timed so that plenty of pullets will be brought to maturity some time during the latter part of September, a banner winter egg season is bound to follow. Pullets hatched during February or March, according to breed, should begin laying just about the right time for winter eggs when prices are highest.

Gapeworms Kill

A poultryman in Washington, D. C., lost 75 per cent of several hundred chicks from gapes. Investigation showed that this loss resulted from the use of one of the poultryman's fields, for about 24 hours, as a resting place for a flock of turkeys being driven overland. The chickens became infested by gapeworms left by the turkey flock. In addition to producing the noticeable symptoms of gaping, by obstructing the windpipe the chicks did not thrive.

New Milk System on Federal Farm

Plan Promises to Reduce Cost of Production and Aid Records.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A new system of milking cows which promises to reduce the cost and labor of milk production, facilitate the keeping of records, and produce a cleaner product, is being used at the United States Department of Agriculture dairy experiment farm at Beltsville, Md.

The new method was originated by R. R. Graves who is in charge of dairy cattle feeding, breeding, and management investigations in the bureau of dairy industry.

Make-Up of System.

Briefly, the system consists of a mechanical milking unit of standard make; but instead of the usual portable receptacle for the milk, it is drawn into a stationary container located between two stalls and somewhat above the cows. The receptacle is of unbreakable glass and is suspended from a weighing mechanism. Its transparency makes the rate of milking visible to the operator at all times, both by the amount of milk in the receptacle and by the weight registered by the scale. When the milk ceases to flow into the receptacle, the operator records the weight of the milking and opens a valve which permits the milk to be drawn from the bottom of the container through a sanitary pipe line to a large vacuum tank in the dairy house nearby.

Thus the milk reaches the dairy house without having come in contact with the air, human hands, or any other contaminating agency. No milk is spilled on the floor to attract flies; in fact, no milk is in sight except that in the vacuum-tight glass receptacle.

Sterilization of the mechanical equipment is accomplished quickly and easily by running cold water from the dairy house back through the pipe line, the glass receptacle, and out of the teat cups into the gutter. This is followed by hot water and then steam.

Labor Reduced.

A reduction in labor is effected with this system in a number of ways. The milk is drawn to the dairy house automatically and there is no handling of buckets or other milking utensils. Nor is it necessary to strip the cows to finish milking. The udder is massaged while the teat cups are still in place, and the transparency of the glass receptacle permits the operator to see when the cow is giving no more milk. One operator can handle three or four milking units, milking three or four cows at the same time.

Tests of the bacterial content of the milk produced under this new system, made by the division of market milk investigations, have shown some remarkably low counts. Over a five months' period, the average bacterial content, as taken from the glass containers, was 3,460 per cubic centimeter, and from the vacuum tank 3,780 per cubic centimeter. On four days of this period the milk was pasteurized in the vacuum tank at 145 degrees for 30 minutes; the average bacterial count of the raw milk in the tank before pasteurization was 3,590 and after pasteurization and cooling it was 55 per cubic centimeter, indicating a very high efficiency for pasteurization under this system.

Fertilizer Ingredients of Various Feed Stuffs

The amounts of fertilizer ingredients of feeding stuffs retained by farm animals in their bodies or made use of in their products will vary with different animals and with the same animal at different times. Milk cows void in the total excrement about 75 per cent of the total nitrogen contained in feed and about 90 per cent of the ash constituents. Young growing animals give somewhat smaller quantities while fattening animals void about 90 per cent of the nitrogen and 96 per cent of the ash materials in the liquid and solid excrement. Considering the relation between the different classes of farm animals on most stock farms, young and old, milk producing and fattening animals, etc., we may assume that at least 80 per cent of the entire manural value of the feeding stuffs fed to animals will be voided in the solid or liquid manure.

Bee-Keeping Industry Aided by Sweet Clover

Sweet clover bids fair to revolutionize the entire beekeeping industry, says the American Beekeeper. Already it has made great changes, and the indications are that its influence will be even more marked in the future. Sweet clover has made bee-keeping an important industry in the plains region where formerly bees were not worth the trouble to keep them. North Dakota, which was formerly the poorest bee-keeping state, is now one of the best, all because of the coming of this plant.

Now we find it coming into favor with the farmers of southern and eastern regions. In portions of South Carolina there are reports of extensive plantings of sweet clover in rotation with such crops as cotton and corn.

Drain Wet Spots and Avoid Much Trouble

Tile Drainage Saves Land and Wear and Tear.

Drain the wet spots in your fields, says A. M. Goodman of the New York State College of Agriculture. Tile drainage of wet spots in otherwise clear fields is the most profitable form of drainage.

In wet spots the tractor mires, the disk clogs, the drill and corn planter mud up and when harvest time comes the ruts made by these machines are usually baked hard and the grain binder, corn harvester or hay loader bump and bang over them. To go over these rough places knocks the machinery to pieces much faster than to harvest a heavy crop on smooth land. It costs more to drag the plow and disk around a wet spot than to plow the same area of land if it were drained.

Not to raise just as good crops on the wet spots as on the rest of the field is waste, Professor Goodman says. A little well-directed effort this season will do the job for all time. Since tile drainage is all underground except the outlet at one end the area in the fields which would otherwise be used in ditches and wet spots is saved for production.

Tile drainage for the entire field is recommended by the college wherever possible. Many farmers think they can't afford extensive tile drainage systems at present, but Professor Goodman says that no farmer can afford to have wet spots in otherwise clear fields. Farm bureau agents or the men at the college can give information on tile drainage.

"Skyscrapers" for Hens

Latest on Poultry Farm

"Skyscraper" apartment houses for hens are the latest developments in the poultry world and if they prove successful the lives of chickens will soon be completely revolutionized, according to the Farm and Fireside.

On Walnut Hills poultry farm just outside Columbus, Ohio, John C. and B. C. Morse have erected a six-story structure bigger than a barn for their 7,000 egg layers.

Another hen apartment house movement has been started in New Jersey, where a four-story henhouse is in operation and has 10,000 tenants. In other New Jersey communities similar houses of smaller size are being used. The idea of large houses for laying hens is partly due to the scarcity of tracts of land large enough to accommodate large flocks, but poultrymen believe that housing their hens prevents worm infestation and keeps down disease. The owner of the four-story hen apartment is now planning a still larger building which will hold 100,000 hens. He believes that egg production will be increased.

If the experiment of keeping chickens in confinement works out as expected, says the article, it will be the biggest revolution in poultry raising that has ever been seen.

Supply of Minerals Needed by Chickens

Chickens need minerals at all seasons of the year, but it is of greater importance that they be supplied in winter than at any other season, as the natural supply of minerals which may be picked up from the soil is entirely lacking.

Minerals are more essential to poultry than to other forms of live stock, as they not only use minerals to aid in digesting their food but they enclose their product in a container made up mostly of minerals. The mineral most needed is calcium.

There are two common forms of calcium that can be easily utilized in feeding poultry. Calcium carbonate is largely used in manufacturing the shells of eggs and this may be supplied in oyster shell, ground limestone or pearl grits. Calcium phosphate is largely used in the manufacture of bones and may be supplied through the use of bone meal. Sharp grit, in the nature of gravel, is often furnished in addition to the oyster shell, ground limestone and pearl grits to aid in digestion.

Agricultural Notes

The life of a fence post may be doubled by proper treatment with creosote.

Provide good housing accommodations, with plenty of nests, and keep the house and nests clean.

Stacking oats before threshing gives a better quality grain than when left to weather and mold in the shocks.

Separate all soiled, checked or cracked eggs from the other eggs as soon as they are gathered—and use them at home or sell them separately.

Grade and house all pullets as they come into production. All pullets should be in winter quarters not later than November 1, even though they are not laying at that time.

Poultrymen should be on the alert for the appearance of croup or chicken-pox in their flock. Flock owners cannot afford to have their flocks thrown out of production at the season of high prices for eggs.

"Makes More Bread Than Any Flour I Ever Used"

Mrs. G. H. Blodgett
R. R. No. 1, Waverly, Minn.

"My neighbor who bakes 28 to 30 loaves of bread a week came over one day in tears. She said her bread turned out like lead and almost black. I told her it served her right because she did not use Gold Medal Flour that's 'Kitchen-tested'. She got a sack of Gold Medal and she said, 'Why, that flour is just like cake flour'. I told her there's never a failure with Gold Medal—besides it makes more bread than any kind of flour I ever used."

"Never a Failure With Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour. The Only Flour For My Family" Says Mrs. Blodgett

It's Easy Now For Women To Have Baking Success

NO longer need they worry about perfect results. Now, they can be sure of success every time with pies and cakes, bread and biscuits. They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

HAS THE LAXATIVE IN YOUR HOME A DOCTOR'S APPROVAL?

Some things people do to help the bowels whenever any bad breath, feverishness, biliousness, or a lack of appetite warn of constipation, really weaken these organs. Only a doctor knows what will cleanse the system without harm. That is why the laxative in your home should have the approval of a family doctor.

The wonderful product, known to millions as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a family doctor's prescription for sluggish bowels. It never varies from the original prescription which Dr. Caldwell wrote thousands of times in many years of practice, and proved safe and reliable for men, women and children. It is made from herbs and other pure ingredients, so it is pleasant-tasting, and can form no habit. You can buy this popular laxative from all druggistores.

Neanderthal Home Life Depicted by Sculptor

A New York sculptor has just completed the first life-sized group representing the family life of cavemen. The cave displayed is a copy of the famous one at Lemoustier, Dordogne, France, visited by the expedition. It is a true Neanderthaler's habitat. The whole is a gift to the museum from Ernest R. Graham, Chicago architect. It is displayed in the Ernest R. Graham Hall of Historical Geology of the museum, among bones of prehistoric animals. The figures disclose the Neanderthal traits: brow ridges, heads slung forward, flat noses, apelike bent knees. The group is designed from measurements, casts and models of Neanderthal skulls and skeletons found in various European places. It comprises a man of fifty-five, a boy about twelve, a woman of thirty years with a baby, and an older woman.

"'How much to Woodbine, now?'

"'A quarter,' said the conductor. 'You're runnin' the wrong way.'"

Health of Swedes Improves

The Swedes are growing taller and healthier, it has just been brought out by the army medical department which annually examines Sweden's conscripted soldiers. From 1887 to 1927 the average height of these young Swedes has increased from 169.2 centimeters to 172.7 centimeters (about 1.40 inches) in forty years. At the same time nearly all sorts of diseases have declined, particularly eye, ear and bone ailments.

Welcomed Prison Life

Miguel Baello, thirty-two, arrested on disorderly conduct in Alicate, Spain, refused all information when brought before the bar, confining himself to remarking on the advantages of prison life, where one was freed from the worry about getting the next meal. To insure an even longer stay in jail than the original offense called for, Baello assaulted his guards as they conveyed him to his cell.

Golf Courses Vary

The size of a golf course is governed by the number of holes. For instance, a 9-hole course usually consists of 70 acres, while an 18-hole course consists of nearly 125 acres. However, this depends a great deal on the contour of the ground. If the ground is very rolling, wooded and has many bushes on it, it will be necessary for it to be larger.

THE MERCHANT and The COMMUNITY

Do you realize how badly we would fare if our merchants had to go out of business and leave us dependent upon mail orders or stores miles away from home?

People are beginning to consider the fact that' after all, they owe a debt to their home merchants. The man who makes it possible for us to get what we want when we want it is entitled to consideration for the service he gladly renders his fellow citizens.

Now, since we are to work for the growth and welfare of St. Joe and Spencerville, let us first support the merchant who plays such a vital part in the development of our community.

The man or woman who is not outspoken for his or her Home Town is against it. What attitude you take toward St. Joe or Spencerville and its merchants has much to do with the reputation and standing of our community among our outside friends.

The merchant is needed to bring your town into its own.

CHICAGO PLANS BIGGEST NATIONAL FARM DISPLAY

America's farm wealth will be loaned to Chicago for one week. From Saturday, November 30, to the following Saturday, December 7, the choicest products of the livestockman's and farmer's skill will be on display at the International Live Stock Exposition at the Chicago Stock Yard.

As of recent years, the coming International will be as world-wide in fact as it is in name. Already samples of wheat have been received from far-away New South Wales, sent from the other side of the Earth to compete with the finest products of the fields of the United States and Canada in the International Grain and Hay Show.

Carlot Exhibits Spectacular

Entries will be accepted in the livestock departments up to November 1, says B. H. Heide, secretary of the exposition, and for the Grain and Hay Show, the closing date is set for November 10. Those who plan to compete in the spectacular carload-lot contests of fat cattle, sheep, or swine, can make their entries up to November 23. At the more recent shows, over a hundred choice loads of fat cattle have each year been on view in the Chicago Stock Yard pens, adjoining the exposition buildings, and according to general opinion, are among the most interesting and educational spectacles of the entire exposition.

An unusually brilliant Horse Show is assured. Since its inception, one of the foremost Horse Shows of the world, the fact that for the coming event the leading horse fanciers in the country have indicated their intention to exhibit, leads to the confident forecast by the management that a Horse Show of extraordinary interest take place this year.

Rail Rates Reduced

As an added incentive to many who hope to attend the 30th anniversary celebration of the International, which is acceded to be the grand wind-up of the year's agricultural show season, the railroads entering Chicago have signified their intention of granting reduced round-trip fares from all parts of the country.

$6,000,000 CUT FROM 1930 TAX BUDGETS

According to Lewis Taylor, director of the tax and legislative department of the Indiana Farm Bureau Federation, a total of approximately $6,000,000 was cut from tax budgets made this fall for 1930 government expenditures. In other words the budgets of the state were decreased this amount as compared with the budgets made a year previous.

Avout half of the decrease was brought about in local county and township units. In many cases interested citizens worked with those in charge of making budgets and insisted on decreases. However, appeals to the State Tax Board are responsible for reductions of about $500,000 in the state outside of Indianapolis and approximately $2,500,000 in the capitol city. Outside of Marion county and Indianapolis, Fulton county led with a decrease of $207,000 which provided a reduction of 59 cents in the tax rate. A certain township in Warren county made a reduction of $1.07 in the rate. Warrick county made a reduction of $28,000.

Mr. Taylor explained that citizens throughout the state were more interested in a reduction of taxes this year by reducing the budgets than probably at any previous time.

LUTHERAN CHURCH CELEBRATES WITH SPECIAL SERVICE IN AUBURN

The Lutheran rally celebrating the 400th anniversary of the printing of Luther's Catechism, held Sunday evening in the St. Mark's Lutheran Church, was a wonderful meeting. Delegations were present from Butler, St. Joe, Spencerville and Richland Center, and these with a large representation from the local church filled the auditorium. The meeting was largely musical with congregational singing of a number of hymns composed by Luther, the great reformer of the sixteenth century. The choir from Richland Center and St. Mark's choir each rendered several selections. The program included the reading, or reciting of the Ten Commandments, the Apostle's Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the great commission of Christ with reference to baptism, and the words of the institution of the Lord's Supper. There are the five chief parts of Luther's Catechism, the first of many ancient books of a similar nature that really accomplish its purpose, to set forth the essential teachings of religion so that even the ignorant peoples of that day could read and understand.

Rev. George Stoll, pastor of the St. Joe-Spencerville parish, had charge of the service, Rev. O. B. Noren, pastor of St. Mark's gave the address on "The Little, Old Book with the Old, New Truth." The word Catechism was explained as a book containing simple questions and answers on the elements of the christian religion. After depicting the need of such a volume, and its printing in 1592, the speaker briefly spoke of its contents. The decalog unfolds the laws and the will of God. The creed expresses in concrete form the summary of the faith of the church from its foundations. The Lord's prayer is the christian's model for prayer. Baptism is God's sacrament, essential on the part of those who would be a part of the kingdom of God, and the Lord's Supper is the second sacrament in which grace, mercy and spiritual strength are imparted to the true believer for continuance in godly living.

Chevrolet test cars at General Motors Proving Grounds have been driven upwards of five million miles, according to James M. Crawford, chief engineer of the company, who declared last week that the use of this outdoor laboratory has been one of the principal reasons for Chevrolet's consistent success. "An average of 12 cars are in constant operation, purring up steep inclines, plowing thru sand, mud and snow, driving into the teeth or heavy winds, testing speed and endurance on the track and subjecting themselves to every known performance trial," he said. These cars are not retired until they have been driven 30,000 and 50,000 miles. "After an experimental model attains this mileage it goes to the experimental laboratory to be dismanteled. At an elevation of above five thousand feet we reach the home of the White Mountain butterfly.

RESPECT FOR RIGHTFUL AUTHORITY

(World's Temperance Sunday)

LESSON TEXT—Mark 12:13-17; Rom. 13:1-14; 1 Peter 2:13-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Why We Have Laws.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Why We Have Laws.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Obeying the Law.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Making Effective the Will of the Community.

Though our citizenship is in heaven, we have obligation to the government under which we live.

I. Obligation to Pay Tribute (Mark 12:13-17).

This teaching concerning the tribute money came in answer to the question put to Jesus by representatives of the Pharisees and Herod. They would gladly have killed him, but they feared the people. Their only hope was to discredit him among the people.

1. Their question (v. 14).

Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar or not? The Pharisees contended that since God was the real king of Israel, it was not obligatory—yea, even sinful—to pay taxes to a heathen king. The Herodians were supporters of Herod. With flattery on their lips, they put this subtle question. For Christ to have answered "yes" would have discredited Him with the people, and to have said "no" would have made Him liable to arrest as an enemy of the government.

2. Jesus' reply (vv. 15-17).

He requested a coin to be brought and inquired as to whose image and superscription it bore, declaring that those who accept the coin of Caesar should pay taxes to Caesar. Thus the Lord escapes their trap and inculcates a principle which applies to all time and conditions as to the Christian's responsibility to civil government.

II. The Christian's Obligation to the State (Rom. 13:1-7).

The believer is a citizen as well as a Christian.

1. Obedience to rulers (vv. 1-4).

This obligation is upon all Christians. Civil government is ordained of God, and rulers are His representatives. To refuse obedience to civil authority is to resist God. This does not mean that a Christian at the behest of the state should do that which is inherently wrong. The same is true of the child in its responsibility to its parents. While obedience to parents is the will of God for children, this does not imply that the child is under obligation to do that which is morally wrong, at the command of the parents. Submission to authority is the law of the believer's life.

2. The spirit in which the Christian renders obedience to rulers (v. 5).

He should regard it as his obligation because it is morally right.

3. Methods of expressing this obedience (vv. 6, 7).

(1) In the payment of personal and property taxes. The citizen who enjoys the benefits of government is morally bound to support it.

(2) Payment of duty upon merchandise, and license fees. The business exchange between nations must be regulated. For such regulations, expense is incurred, for which benefit the citizen should pay.

(3) Veneration for magistrates—"Fear to whom fear."

Those who have the fear of God in their hearts will venerate their rulers, God's representatives.

(4) "Honor to whom honor." Civil officers should be honored because of the ministry they perform.

III. The Spirit of Loyalty to Authority (I Pet. 2:13-17).

The loyalty of the Christian to right authority should be glad and free. The Christian recognizes the necessity of social order, and will graciously submit to the authority of rulers and faithfully perform his obligation as a citizen, not through cringing fear, but as the Lord's free man, for the Lord's sake. By means of this free submission as God's servant, he puts to silence the ignorance of foolish men (vv. 15, 16).

1. Honor all men (v. 17).

He will see in every man the image of God and therefore give honor to him. A Christian will attend to the proprieties of life among all classes and in all relations.

(2) Love the brotherhood (v. 17). The Christian has a peculiar love for those who are of the same household.

(3) Fear God (v. 17). This is filial, reverential fear.

(4) Honor the king (v. 17). This had a peculiar significance, for in all probability the wicked Nero was then the reigning monarch.

Life Is Like That

"Take your needle, my child, and work at your pattern. It will come out a rose by-and-by." Life is like that. One stitch at a time taken patiently, and the pattern will come out all right like the embroidery.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

ATTRACTIVE BATHROOM WOMAN'S PRIDE

Bathroom Fixtures Respond to Daily Care.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An attractive bathroom is a housekeeper's pride, and the care given it is well repaid, not only from the sanitary standpoint, but because somehow its gleaming porcelain and well-shined fixtures, as well as its fresh dainty linen, reflect the standards of the home. Because it is in constant daily use by every member of the family, the bathroom and everything in it needs going over every day. The hand-basin and tub must be scoured, the toilet made scrupulously clean, nickel or other metal fixtures wiped and polished, and the floor mopped or wiped, depending on its condition and kind. The water pipes and traps should be frequently examined, too, for stoppage or leaks, either of which should receive prompt attention from a competent plumber.

The regular replacement of soiled towels and wash rags with clean ones, and attention to soap dishes, shelves, and the linen and medicine closets at frequent times are also very necessary details of bathroom care.

Fine scourers may be used on all fixtures, says the bureau of home economics. For porcelain and enameled iron fixtures, kerosene and whiting are especially good; the kerosene cuts the grease and the whiting supplies the abrasion. Some of the commercial cleaning preparations used for enameled and porcelain fixtures are so gritty that they scratch the surface and thus make it harder to keep them clean. Special care should be taken to select one that will not scratch the enamel. Tubs and bowls should be scrubbed with a fine scourer or with water containing a little kerosene, rinsed with clear hot water, and wiped dry.

The stains made by water containing an excess of iron may be removed from porcelain or porcelain-lined tubs and bowls with oxalic acid solution, which is a poison and must be entirely washed off. The overflow pipes should be flushed, washed with hot soapsuds or soda solution and a long-handled brush, and flushed again. Then the seat, the cover, the chain, and the handle should be washed and wiped. All cloths and utensils used in cleaning the bathroom should be scalded and dried, preferably in the open air.

Tiled walls and floors are easily wiped clean with soap and warm water unless the floor is dirty enough to need a scouring powder. It is a good plan to use two cloths, a wet and a dry one, and to clean a small area at a time, wiping it dry. The use of too much water may result ultimately in loosening the cement in which tiles are laid. If the floor is covered with linoleum this treatment is preferable to mopping.

The photograph, taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, shows a bathrom in a farm home in Montgomery county, Virginia, installed after a water system had been put into the house on the advice of the extension agent. It is light, well ventilated, and quite easy to care for.

GOOD POSTURE IS TO BE ENCOURAGED

Standing Well Is Result of Habit in Household Work.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Posture is the result of habit—the unconscious reversion, by the muscles and bones, to the positions they have been allowed to take day after day. Finally they assume these positions automatically, and if they are not correct we develop bodily distortions, an unattractive appearance, and a whole series of unsatisfactory consequences. Poor posture leads to fatigue, to backache, to strain on the wrong parts of the body and often to one-sided growth or such physical imperfections as a narrow chest, round shoulders, protruding abdomen, and many others.

It is possible to maintain a good posture while engaged in almost any household task. The fact that all household activities must be performed repeatedly, suggests that they may be made to encourage habits of good posture or to correct poor posture if one thinks definitely of how one is standing, sitting, or stooping while at work.

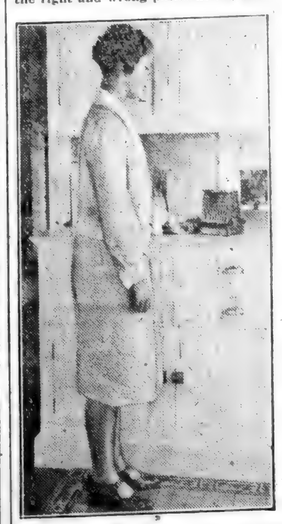
Take such a simple matter as standing at a pass closet or cabinet to operate an electric toaster, shown in the photograph by the United States Department of Agriculture. A home demonstration agent in Massachusetts used this frequently recurring activity to show farm women how to stand and how not to stand. She showed them how they looked when they allowed their shoulders or hips to slump forward, and the right way to stand while working at a counter or table. Various demonstrations of posture have been given, showing farm women the right and wrong positions for dishwashing, mopping, handling foods in the oven, sitting to prepare vegetables, and so on. Any one interested can apply this idea to a scrutiny of her own way of working. It is sometimes possible to see oneself in a large mirror as a particular task is carried on, and to note improper positions of head, shoulders, hips, back, or feet.



Standing Properly With Back and Shoulders Straight.

Shower Bath on Farm

An old barrel or an inexpensive steel tank set on four posts or a platform and equipped with faucet and a short length of garden hose makes a shower bath for father and the boys and the hired man. The gas engine or windmill can be turned on a few minutes in the morning to fill the tank and the old reliable water heater, the sun, removes the chill from the water during the day.

Browned Oatmeal

Cut cold oatmeal in slices. Beat one egg with four tablespoonfuls of milk and dip the oatmeal in this. Heat a little butter in a frying pan and brown the oatmeal slices on both sides. Serve for dessert with a little maple sirup.

"Never mind about your mother now. What happened after that?"

"He said to me, 'You go and get on the seat of the cart which is up the road. It is my cart. You can drive it back to Mantes and leave it and my horses at the posting inn, where they know me. I'll look after these horses for you, and when the fighting's over I'll drive the diligence to Paris. No one will be any the wiser and I don't mind a bit of a fight. I can do a bit of fighting myself.' Well," Charles-Marie went on dolefully, "there didn't seem much harm in that. I could see he knew all about horses from the way he handled them; but I'm no fighting man, and when I was engaged to drive the diligence from Moisson to Paris I was not told that there would be any fighting."

"So you turned your back on the diligence, like a coward, and crept along here—"

"I didn't creep, citizen. I followed you when—"

"Pardi!" Raffet broke in with an oath. "Another of you that will not escape punishment. If I had my way the guillotine would be busy in Mantes for days to come."

CHAPTER IX

Discomfiture

There was nothing for it now but to allow Charles-Marie to drive the cart back to Mantes, since its owner had probably seized an opportunity by now of taking to his heels. Poor Raffet was worn out with the excitement of the past half-hour, and bewildered with all the mystery that confronted him at every turn. Vaguely he felt that something sinister lurked behind this last incident recited to him by Charles-Marie, but for the moment he did not connect it with the possible maneuvers of the English spies. He thought that chapter of the day's book of adventure closed. It would be an extraordinary piece of luck if in the end they should still come across the Scarlet Pimpernel.

Chauvelin had not waited to hear the whole of Charles-Marie's tale. Throughout all the adventures which had befallen him this day, he had seen the hand of his enemy, the Scarlet Pimpernel. Now he no longer had any doubt. Almost at the first words uttered by Charles-Marie he had jumped to his feet, all the stiffness gone out of his bones; and despite the darkness, the mud and the rain, he turned and ran up the slushy road, round the bend beyond which he had heard the fight a quarter of an hour ago. To Lauzet he had shouted a curt, "Come!" and Lauzet had followed, obedient, understanding, like a dog, only vaguely scenting danger to himself, danger more serious than any that had threatened him during this eventful day.

Chauvelin ran through the darkness with Lauzet at his heels. Despite the cold and rawness of the mist, he was in a bath of perspiration; though his veins were on fire, his teeth chattered with the cold. Lauzet, behind him, was panting like an apoplectic seal. Soon he fell with a groan by the roadside. But Chauvelin did not give in. Stumbling, half dazed, he went round the bend of the road; then he too fell, exhausted, by the roadside, exhausted and trembling as with ague.

The scene which greeted his aching eyes had finally unnerved him. There, on the crest of the hill, he saw three horses tethered to neighboring trees, and beside the horses, bound to the same trees, three soldiers with their hats pulled down over their eyes. Of the diligence there was not a sign. Chauvelin stared and stared at this scene. He had not strength enough to rise, though his every nerve ached to go up to one of those pinioned figures by the trees and to ask what had happened.

Thus Raffet found him five or ten minutes later. He came with his soldiers and a lantern or two. Chauvelin could not do more at first than point with trembling finger straight out before him, and Raffet and the men swinging their lanterns came on the spectacle of the three men and the three horses tied to the forest trees, the animals, calm as horses are wont to be when nature and men are silent around them; the men inert and half conscious.

"Question them, Citizen Captain," Chauvelin commanded feebly.

The men's statements, however, were somewhat vague. It seems that after their comrades had gone off, some with their captain, others with the prisoners, the three who were left behind busied themselves at first with their horses, examining the saddle girths and so on, when one of them spied something moving underneath the diligence.

"It was getting dark by that time," the man explained. "However, I called to my mates, and we stooped to see what it was. We were much surprised, you may be sure, to see two pairs of feet in ragged shoes. We seized hold of them and pulled. The feet were attached to two pairs of legs in tattered stockings and breeches. Finally there emerged from underneath the diligence two ragamuffins with mud up to their eyes and their clothing in rags.

"They were a sorry looking pair. We put them down for two poltroons, not worth powder and shot, and were just wondering what we should do with them when suddenly, without the slightest warning, they turned on us like a couple of demons. Not they only, for a third fellow seemed to have sprung out of the earth behind us, and come to their aid. A giant he was."

"A giant!" Raffet exclaimed, for he had suddenly remembered Citizen Chauvelin's warning about the English spy who was tall above the average.

"Aye! A giant, with the strength of an ox."

No one said anything more for the moment. There was, indeed, nothing to say. Reproaches and vituperations would come later; punishment, too, perhaps. The soldiers and their captain hung their heads, brooding and ashamed.

"Epone is not more than four kilometers, citizen," Raffet at last ventured to suggest, "and we have the lanterns."

And so the procession started, trudging down the incline in the darkness and the rain; Chauvelin and Lauzet, Raffet and his corporal with a couple of troopers carrying the lanterns. Two hours later they reached Epone, hungry, tired, spattered with mud up to their chins.

At Epone Raffet's courier lost no time in recounting at full length the adventures that had befallen him and his comrades. Thus the story was all over the district by the time the laborers of Epone had gone to their work the following morning, and the chief of section in the department of Seine et Oise, Citizen Lauzet, became the laughing stock of the countryside.

together with his wonderful friend from Paris. Late that same day a horseless diligence, which at first appeared deserted and derelict, was discovered half a dozen kilometers to the north of the forest of Mezieres, in the mud of the stream that runs southward into the Seine. A group of laborers going to their work were the first to see it. It had been dragged into the stream and left axle deep in the water behind a clump of tall reeds. The laborers reported their find to a patrol of Raffet's troopers, whom he had sent out to scour the countryside. The wheels had sunk deep into the mire, and it was only after a great deal of exertion that laborers and soldiers together succeeded in dragging the coach over the flat bank upon firm land.

"Truly, fate has been against us," Lauzet sighed dolefully. "Satan alone knows where the English spies and the prisoners are at this hour."

"Well on their way to England," Chauvelin remarked, "I know 'em. With their long purse and their impudence, they'll work their way to the coast, aided by fools and traitors. Such fools and traitors," he added under his breath, "as helped them last night in their latest adventure."

Secret of Silk Was Long Kept in China

Although silkworms are now cultivated in many parts of the world in order to obtain the lovely product which they make, at one time the secret of producing this cloth was known only in China, where it was jealously guarded.

Raising silkworms was a great industry in China as many as 2,600 years before the Christian era. Try as they might, other nations were unable to learn the secret of making the fine cloth. But, according to the story, a faithless Chinese princess finally betrayed her country by carrying with her to India some of the eggs of the silk-moth and the seeds of the mulberry tree upon which it fed, concealed in her headdress. From India the secret gradually spread to the west, although it did not reach Europe until the Sixth century.

His Initials

The primary teacher inquired of Bobby Smith what was his father's name.

"Same as mine," said the bright six-year-old."

"Sure that's right. Can you tell me his initials or what mother calls him?" asked the tactful teacher.

The lad's countenance brightened and he said: "Mother calls dad 'slow poke.'"

Injured Miner Is Saved by Terrier

Salt Lake City, Utah.—"Doc" Buhl of Saltese, Idaho, was prospecting recently when his foot was crushed by a rolling stone. "Doc" tied a note on the neck of his diminutive fox terrier and sent her out for aid. She failed at first to grasp what was expected of her and returned at noon with the note still intact.

"Doc" fed her and sent her out again, but she returned in a few hours. This time the prospector gave her a good scolding instead of food, and ordered her out of camp for the third time.

The dog reached the home of a friend in Saltese in the evening and aid was immediately dispatched.

KIDNAPED CHILD FORGETS PARENTS

Taken to Europe Months Ago by Former Boarder.

New York.—Johnnie Cap, Jr., four-year-old New Haven boy who had been kidnaped last April and taken to Europe by a boarder in the home of his parents who had developed a deep attachment for the youngster, came home recently.

In the months of his absence little Johnnie had seemingly lost all account of his mother and father, had even taken to speaking in German and was tearfully disinclined to have anything to do with them when the ship which brought him home—the Estonia, of the Baltic-American line—docked at her pier in Brooklyn. The only interest the boy appeared to have was in the ship's nurse, Stefania Werchowodko, who had the care of him during his home voyage from Danzig.

The boy was taken from his home last April by Joseph Urban, the lodger, and when his disappearance was announced an appeal was made to Governor Trumbull of Connecticut, who was told that Urban had taken the boy to Danzig.

After arrangements had been made for the return of little John on the Estonia, he was placed in the care of Nurse Werchowodko. His plight being known, he became the especial pet of the commander and of the chief steward, and was permitted practically the run of the vessel. He could go on the bridge, into the captain's cabin, wherever he wished.

Word of his homecoming had been sent to his parents and they were at the pier. The instant Mrs. Cap reached her son he tried to draw away from her despite her cries that she was his mother. "No, no, nurse," he exclaimed, and clung to Miss Werchowodko.

"Oh, my son doesn't know me," the mother wailed, as John turned and spoke in German to the nurse. "He doesn't speak Polish, he doesn't speak English, he doesn't know his mother!" Mrs. Cap cried, tears streaming down her cheeks.

It was some time before the small boy came to understand that he was in the hands of his dearest friends and that no harm was to come to him. Mr. and Mrs. Cap said that they were starting for New Haven with him at once.

Man Who Threatened Suicide Is Found Dead

Staunton, Va.—After telling another patient at the Western State hospital that he was going to kill himself, N. R. Harris, forty-seven, of Loudoun county, disappeared. Some hours later his body was found hanging from a limb of a tree in an orchard of the hospital. He had been dead several hours when found, according to Dr. J. B. Catlett, Augusta county coroner, who declared it a case of suicide.

Harris had been subject to spells of melancholia, with suicidal intent. He had tied the rope around his neck while in a standing position and had then dropped to his knees.

Host Is Too Gracious; Sheriff Arrests Him

Monte Rio, Calif.—"I want you to see my new dining room," proudly said E. E. LaFranchi, resort manager, to Deputy Sheriff W. A. Shulte.

Shulte saw the dining room—also two illegal coin paying slot machines in the corner.

"And to think I took him in there myself," mourned LaFranchi as the deputy seized the machines after placing LaFranchi under arrest.

Farmer Loses Money; Cow Chokes to Death

St. Joe, Ark.—A roll of bills choked a cow in a pasture belonging to U. Y. Jones, Newton county farmer.

The currency, wrapped about a small cob to give it shape, was found in the throat of a dead two-year-old heifer. Jones had lost the money a day or two before.

Too Much for Her

Indianapolis.—Mrs. W. E. Hinkle was dealt a perfect bridge hand, all spades, an event that should happen only once in 168,888,000,000 deals, according to bridge statisticians. Mrs. Hinkle was too excited to redouble her seven-spade bid. The scorekeeper gave her 501 when the excitement subsided.

The Mark of Genuine Aspirin..

BAYER ASPIRIN is like an old friend, tried and true. There can never be a satisfactory substitute for either one. Bayer Aspirin is genuine. It is the accepted antidote for pain. Its relief may always be relied on, whether used for the occasional headache, to head-off a cold, or for the more serious aches and pains from neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatism or other ailments. It's easy to identify Bayer Aspirin by the Bayer Cross on every tablet, by the name Bayer on the box and the word "genuine" always printed in red.

BAYER

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Feminine Embellishment

A farthingale is a contrivance, resembling a hoop skirt or crinoline. It was worn by women of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries to extend their skirts.

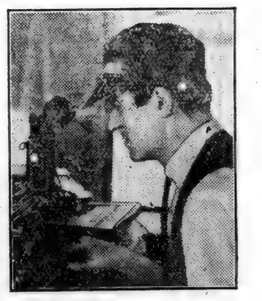
Believe It or Not

Bill—This horse is so old he has lost all his teeth!

Trader—Oh, no; you are mistaken. He is so young he hasn't cut his teeth yet!

When a White Collar Man "Goes Army"

Perhaps he doesn't learn a few things!



DON'T envy a man who "only has to work a typewriter."

So we were told by Mr. Solon S. Bloom of 3503 Woodbrook Avenue, Baltimore, Md., whose health began to give way because his work gave him no bodily exercise.

"I decided to get away to a military training camp," says Mr. Bloom, "thinking the rough and tumble with the army would do me good for a month. I asked the doctor what to do about my condition. 'I've seen men, I've known men,' he said. 'I know what they eat, drink, and how they live. I know cathartics, physics, and all the ways men try to keep themselves regular—and the only two that go together well are men and Nujol. Nujol soothes and heals the membranes and expels bodily poisons normally, naturally, easily, so that you are regular as clock-work.'"

That was what Mr. Bloom learned when he left his typewriter and went into the army. If you are like most other people, you too will find that Nujol will make all the difference in the world in the way you feel.

Remember Nujol is not a medicine, for it contains no drugs of any kind. It is simply bodily lubrication that everybody needs.

You can get a bottle of Nujol at any good drug store, in a sealed package, for the price of a couple of good cigars. If you will start today and try it for two weeks you will agree that Nujol is the easy normal way to keep well and make a success out of your life. You will be astonished at the results!

Norway Celebrates in 1930

In 1930 Norway will celebrate the ninth centenary of the coming of Christianity, together with the anniversary of the death of King Olav II, who died in the struggle against the opponents of the new faith. Celebrations will take place in all parts of the country but the principal ceremony will be held at Trondjhem, an old royal residence and the seat of an archbishopric before the Lutheran reformation. The work of restoring the cathedral has been proceeding for a long time. It was built on Olav's tomb. The completion of the work will coincide with the celebration of nine centuries of Christianity in Norway.—Translated for the Kansas City Star From the Journal de Geneve.

Relatives cannot understand how one of the family can be talented when he never was as a boy.

You can tell by a man's face when he has loved and lost, and by his pockets if he has loved and won.

Classifies 256,000 Stars

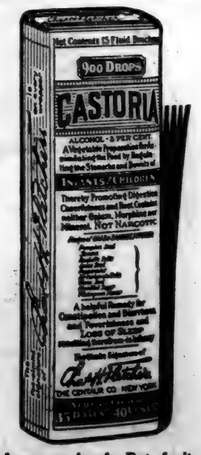
About 32,000 observations of variable stars were sent to the Harvard observatory in a single year by 100 observers. One of the monumental pieces of work there, says Nature Magazine, has been Miss Annie J. Cannon's classification of over 256,000 stars, according to their various types, by means of their spectral lines. This work requires expert ability of the highest order and Miss Cannon has been the recipient of many honors.

Some Fine Forest Land

The outstanding forest in New England is the White Mountain National forest. During 17 years, since 1911, the federal government has purchased forest land in the White mountains. It has acquired now 514,000 acres, or 803 square miles. Much of it is in virgin forest, says Nature Magazine. There are 61,000 acres in which an ax was never used.

If there is anything in a man his opportunity will come sooner or later.

When BABIES are upset



Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

INDIANA DRY LEADER DIES

Those who are much interested in law enforcement, and especially that which pertains to the liquor business, were pained to hear of the death of Dr. E. S. Shumaker. The doctor was an outstanding figure amongst those who labored to make this country a decent and safe one in which to live. His hatred of the liquor business knew no bounds, and drew upon his head the ill will and reproaches of that element which has arrogantly defied all laws looking toward the suppression of the nefarious business. Dr. Shumaker was considered an ultra radical by this class, and even so by some of his friends, but no one questions the honesty and sincerity of purpose which marked his actions. His enemies concede this. He will be greatly missed by his friends. The funeral was held in Indianapolis on Monday of this week.

FROM THE CUSTOMER'S VIEWPOINT

The customer buying electric service must judge it as he judges any other product—by quality and price.

At the present time the United States is interested in a controversy as to whether electric utilities are growing too large.

The average citizen, however, is not confused by a lot of loose talk. He can remember the day, and it was not long ago, when he bought his electricity from a small, local plant. It was expensive, the plant would break down, and power would fail. Often service was provided only during a stated number of hours of the day.

Now small local plants are being absorbed into interconnected systems that serve hundreds of communities and tens of thousands of homes. Electricity is cheaper than ever. It is always available 24 hours a day in any amount. Current interruption is almost unknown on such systems. Large companies have facilities for service that are out of the question for small plants.

Power and light users today are getting constantly better service at a price that is lowered steadily as service is improved. It is no wonder that American citizens have confidence in order to make a fair return on their investment as it forges ahead to new accomplishments.

The road east of town to the creek bridge is undergoing some repairs. The grade is being widened and a ditch is being made on the west end.

"Good thing I only run that for sale ad two weeks," said Elmer Inlow Tuesday, as he was in our office. He further said, "since I have been in town two people have spoken to me for pears and two were at my house before I left for town. You must let people know if you have anything to sell, and The News is the place to do it. I have sold 40 bushels since the ad was run." Well, that makes us feel good in taking Mr. Inlow's 30 cents for the ad. Why not try it?

Notice: The party being known to enter my garage and take paint brush, return same without further notice. Roy Kinsey. 43t1p.

The Lutheran Church officials are finding it difficult to keep their windows from being broken, hardly a week passing without some of glass being damaged.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Patterson, of Fort Wayne, also R. J. Hilligas and wife of Huntertown, were guests in the J. P. Buckingham home Sunday afternoon.

Hallowe'en celebrations will be plentiful this year. Parties at the country school houses galore, Garrett, Butler and Antwerp are planning big celebrations. Everyone ought to go and have good times and forget the idea of damaging property.

John Kelly, of near Auburn, is running a local ad in this issue. He said: "The last ad I run in your paper, I sold the two heifers." Sure, there is no other place to advertise and get results like Mr. Kelly reports. Many are doing the same thing in our paper.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Waltz of Coburn's Corners, have a Buff Orpington pullet hatched March 25 which last week one day appeared with twenty-one little chicks from a stolen nest hatched from her own eggs. The Waltz household regards her as a real hustler at the age of less than seven months.

PLYMOUTH

Smooth at all Speeds

Quick, Quiet and Flexible!

You can have no conception of the high quality of Plymouth behavior until you have driven this amazing Chrysler-built car.

Plymouth is smooth at all speeds—and amazingly quiet and flexible. Take the wheel—drive as you will. Throttle it down, step it up, run the whole range of speed. Not a flutter—not a tremor. A new crankshaft, dynamically and statically balanced; lengthened engine stroke and increased piston displacement; larger main bearings and connecting rods and light aluminum-alloy pistons. All these play a big part in creating Plymouth's new smoothness.

Editor News:

The cut of the Hicksville Store—"Maxwell Bros." in your last issue, brings to my mind, a store with a wide reputation of making every purchaser satisfied, no words of unpleasantness in making adjustments. This store as I remember it when I lived in the Coburntown Community, has always featured this one business principle and it has made lasting friends. Our family always traded at this store for men and boys' wear, and we were always satisfied. Their ad sure speaks the truth—"In selling for cash, they sell for less."

When it comes to style, this store is always there with the newest and best of standard, nationally advertised merchandise. No matter what you want, you can find it at Maxwell Bros., Hicksville Ohio.

Oddities of Bali

©The National Geographic Society

Temple Grounds in the Capital of Bali.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE island of Bali, only a name to thousands of people who pass on round-the-world trips, is a social and sociological curiosity. Its natives are what biologists might call "sports" in East Indian ethnology.

It lies a night's cruise east of Java. It is about 90 miles long, with a 10,500 foot peak and more than a million penceful, polygamous people. Its women are the fairest in all Malaysia—and a dressmaker would starve.

One strange aspect after another breaks on the observer. Books are bound from tree leaves. Religion is the chief occupation. Trial marriage usually takes. It is a land of the slimmest women and the fattest pigs. Birds talk and butterflies fly like birds. Praying to pagan gods and fooling pagan devils are the main pastimes. Tourist attractions are many, but tourists few.

The quest for photographic adventure along the island paths, past green fields, temples, and walled villages, is an endless delight—unless a carabao suddenly flounders up from the mud to chase the white man. Bali children ride these clumsy creatures, and even when one runs amuck it is said a small boy swishing a switch through the air may cause the mad beast to turn aside in his charge. But here, as in the Philippines, there seems to be something in the looks or smell of a white man which the carabao doesn't like.

Such butterflies as one sees in Bali! Orange and white, black and yellow, or black and green, and huge purple ones, all flying like birds, not fluttering, as ours do. And there are wild chickens in the woods, the cocks brilliantly colored, and a talking bird they call the beo, a black, sluggish fowl with dangling yellow wattles—an ugly thing, like a wattled old woman.

The Bali village is a group of kampongs or compounds. Each surrounds several little houses and a few smaller structures used as granaries and built high to save the grain from pigs and rats. One house may shelter several families. Usually the Bali hut itself is a small, nipalike, thatched affair, with a frame of poles. A few feet above the ground is a platform, where one sees the family lying around at ease during much of the day. But whenever one of these family groups is approached with a camera, the members of the household will roll off the platforms and slide over to the next house.

The "Underslung" Pig.

The Bali pig is a physical curiosity—like a dachshund with a pig's makeup. Even in infancy his tummy almost drags on the ground. In youth he has no youthful figure. He is "underslung," so to speak, and could never travel a road with "high centers." The older he gets, the bigger his waistline. And his back sags like that of an old family nag ridden when too young.

Bali, too, is the land of big noise. There's no brawling, but if it isn't the native orchestra, it is the roosters that keep up the racket. They crow by the thousands, long before day. Before they quit, the pigs begin to squeal—not from hunger, for they're all fat. Foraging in the cool of the morning or lying in midday shade, they test their squealers. They seem to want to tell the world that here no Moslem prejudice against pork can cramp any pig's style or restrain him from self-expression.

One sees these Bali pigs, each in his own wicker cage like a prize bird, being loaded on ships for export to Singapore. The deck is piled five tiers high with the fat, waddling creatures, whose squealing chorus almost drowns out the ship's siren.

Here pork is the only meat eaten. Cattle are raised, but for export. Big, brown, beautiful creatures they are, with a singluar white patch on their hind quarters. Seen from behind, they look as if they were wearing white pants. At times the bulls figure in a religious ceremony and are decorated with big bells.

Artists who have known many famous models in American and European art centers, assert that few specimens of the human race are so easy to look at as the beautiful women of Bali. Erect, slender limbed, small of wrist and ankle, with tapering fingers, and long, wavy tresses falling over a smooth skin nearly white or light bronze; with perfect, even teeth and a singular grace and dignity of carriage, they have few physical equals among womankind.

Drama, Dance and Religion.

In Bali the play's the thing, and all over the island the drama and the dance go on throughout the year. But a playwright would starve; and no "new steps" are ever introduced by Bali dancing girls. Here there's never a "first night" nor a new show. Today Bali enjoys the same songs, dances, and drama it knew centuries ago, all based on island folklore, mythology, and historical legends. Yet nobody seems bored. Even the children know the lines and songs by heart; they follow the players' every word and gesture with close attention.

Such demons as ruin the rice crops or bring disease to carabao, and the demigods who have influenced the lives of the Balinese through the centuries, figure in the songs and drama.

Shows are usually given in the daytime, against a temple or a natural back drop of jungle green.

Hindu temples, big and little, cover this thickly inhabited island. Moslem immigrants have come over from Java, of course, and one sees Chinese proprietors of shops where even American-made hand sewing machines are on sale, but neither Cross nor Crescent seem to have gained much foothold on Bali. One singular story is told of an early Christian missionary who, after long efforts finally made one Bali convert. But this native apostate, thus cut off from his kind, finally turned on the missionary who had made him a social outcast and killed him.

Religion is everything in Bali. It seems to inspire all work and play. No one seems lonely; there are no beggars, no drunkards, no prostitutes. Every act is service to the temple gods; every spot is holy, and every penceful hour seems sanctified to daily life. Here the external and spiritual world are closely akin.

In the prettiest spot on every little farm stands the family altar, usually shaded by trees or plants. Here the farmer builds the wood or stone altars to the gods of his choice. Should a man's prayers go unanswered, he is quite justified in demolishing his existing altars and building new ones to a new divinity.

Irrigation Is Skillful.

No region on earth is more highly cultivated than the tillable parts of Bali. Here irrigation is applied to its utmost refinement. In building reservoirs, or waduks, in laying out and digging canals and laterals, the Balinese are among the world's most skillful engineers. So highly was their system developed that when Dutch engineers came they had nothing to add.

On Bali, as in the United States, irrigation districts are set up. Each controls its own water supply, and water rights are equitably distributed. It also regulates land transfers and holdings. The planting of crops, the tending of cattle, and collection of rates are all supervised by these cooperative associations.

Rice is the chief food, but wheat, copra, groundnuts, tobacco, fruit, and onions are also grown. Cattle, hides, horns and swine are exported. For its soap, crude hardware, tools, and a limited amount of cloth and clothing, Bali depends on imports handled by Chinese and Dutch traders; but, to a singular degree, the island is a self-contained garden of Eden, where life is easy and food plentiful.

Swift and sweeping as change is in our modern, inventive world, Bali responds but slowly. Here the well dressed young man and everybody else need wear only the sarong—a multicolored strip of batik, about a yard wide, wound around the waist and hanging to the knees. Till cheap factory-made sarongs came from Europe, these simple garments were works of art, for at weaving, as at carving and in the fabrication of objects of gold and silver, the Balinese are skillful. Only on entering the temples must women cover the upper part of their bodies. For this they use a light scarf.

When one stops to think that Bali, with its singular charms, is only a night's run from the tourist path through Soerabaya, one wonders that irresistible civilization has not already upset its primitive life.

WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph. D., LL. D.

How and Why Bodies Fossilize

UNLESS well protected, or in rainless Peru or Egypt, or in dry caves, or the cold storage of Arctic ice, or in oil, wax, or amber, the body soon yields to the bacteria of decay or to the teeth of wolves and hyenas. For bone or other tissue to be replaced by mineral whereby it petrifies or "fossilizes," many conditions must be right. The wiser the animal, the less likelihood of its being caught in quicksands or engulfed by the gravel and silt of floods. Primitive man was as little enamored as we are of being buried alive.

Fossil remains of the famous Cro-Magnon man have been found in Wales, and especially in France. Possibly earth never saw finer built human beings. His brain was 15 per cent larger than ours, his stature taller than any living race by two inches. He was clean-limbed, lithe, and swift. He had a good chin, thick and strong jaws. His head was long, his face broad. He buried his dead. He was an artist and an artisan. He lived about 25,000 years ago. Did he become an ordinary European, or did he disappear? No one knows.

Beyond Cro-Magnon, our forebears rather run to brutish casts. Grimaldi man was of the Negroid type. Neanderthal man had a huge head, chipped flint, and buried his dead. He is set down at 50,000 B. C. and left no known heirs. He is the first known cave-man.

The jaw of Heidelberg man fits a gorilla, but the teeth are ours. He is possibly 400,000 years old. Piltdown man is possibly a hundred thousand years older. Some say he was the first Englishman. We have reached a point in time where no one knows who's who.

The champion fossil is Pithecanthropus erectus (ape-man erect), discovered by Dubois in Java in 1891. He is certainly a half million years old; some say a million. He is more pithecoid than any known human being, more anthropoid than any known ape. He was as erect and almost as tall as the average European. He had definitely left the "well-ventilated arboreal tenements." He was a low-browed moron—and may be represented in the living flesh. But whether he was of the direct line that led to man, or only of a line that ended with himself, is not yet definitely known. It is enormously significant that, after a debate lasting more than a quarter of a century, the biologists of the world cannot decide whether Pithecanthropus erectus belongs to the first or the second of the earth's First Families. That makes him a pretty good link that is no longer missing.

To import monkeys for their sex glands is ghastly business, perhaps the lowest that has engaged the cupidity and lust of man, but to shoot down simians as we do mad dogs or boys in uniform is a crime. The four Anthropoid apes are our next-of-kin-living; they should be respected as cousins and not exterminated as vermin or Indians.

Man was never a gorilla, a chimpanzee, an orang, or a gibbon. No biologist ever made such a claim. Whether these apes could have developed into human beings is a different story. They have the makings—all the parts. If we knew how heredity works and could control variation, we might breed from an ape a being that could dig a ditch, play the piano, talk English, and sing the "Messiah." We can teach them to smoke cigarettes, chew tobacco, drink beer, wear clothes, and eat with a knife and fork. We do not yet know the limit of their capacity to learn human ways.

Why do zoologists put these four apes so close behind us that we can feel their breath and they can catch our diseases? Because they are Anthropoid. Nothing has yet surpassed them in the race to become human. Their anatomy, embryology, histology, morphology, paleontology, physiology, and psychology entitle them to second place in the Ancient and Honorable Order of Firsts.

They vary in their man-likeness; no one is in all ways closest to man. The orang looks like an Irishman; the gorilla is built like Jack Dempsey; the chimpanzee is the most angelic; the delicate gibbon has a lady-like skull and an upright carriage. The first three—the Great Apes—are the extremes of variation from a generalized ancestor. The gibbon varies least, and to that extent is nearest the tree man climbed down when he decided to stand up and talk.

Except in teeth, the young female gorilla is the most human. Her father is a brute in size and appearance. Only five feet high, he may weigh over 400 pounds; mostly neck, chest, and arms. If his legs were of human proportions, he would stand over seven feet high.

The chimpanzee, like the gorilla, lives in jungle Africa. Like the gorilla, he has a shuffle-along gait, swinging his body between his long crutch-like arms. He has the gorilla's proportions, but never the great bulk of chest. And so is more at home in the trees, where he builds his nest, as does the orang. The chimpanzee's skull is not unlike the one ape-man erect tried on when turning into man—and gave up because it had too much jaw for the teeth required and not enough brain-box for ideas.

EVENING WRAP SPELLS CHIC; FURRED SUIT CLAIMS HOMAGE

An Elegant Evening Wrap.

SANS fur, sans length, placing emphasis on artful fabric manipulation, such is the picture of milady's evening wrap as fashion visions it. The theme of lengthened hemlines which is creating such excitement and confusion in the world of fashion has nothing whatever to do with evening wraps. As a matter of fact while dress hemlines are rapidly descending, the hemlines of the most fashionable and formal evening capes and coats are traveling in just the opposite direction—higher and higher until some are really surprisingly short.

It is working out very happily, this lengthening of the dress and shortening of the coat, for thus is a new silhouette created, which is refreshingly different and altogether fascinating. The charming velvet wrap in the picture adopts the new abbreviated length which characterizes the smartest modes.

The next departure from the straight and narrow path of fashion's usual course in regard to evening wraps, is the oft recurring absence of fur, many of the newer models, saying "it" through fabric manipulation.

The manner of shirring and puffing the huge rolling collar which so enhances the wrap in the illustration is typical of the new trend. This complicated and designful working of fabric which is being so featured at present, is encouraging a free reign of imagination on the part of the designer, such as is making of the modern wrap a thing of endless fascination and versatility.

Among the beguilements offered in evening wraps are enormous ruche like collars formed of myriads of self-lined petals of the same fabric of which the cape or dolman coat is made. Any amount of shirring is employed, and in many and unique ways.

Another feature about the modern evening wrap which offers new allurements is their clever and unique way of snuggling about the hips accenting the lines of the figure most gracefully.

What for street wear? To which query the fur-trimmed suit gives answer in accents loud and clear. If it is a suit of some one or other of the fascinating tweeds to which the world of fashion is paying homage, so much the better, for there's nothing smarter than extravagantly furred tweed to wear about town or in which to fly, to sail, to motor or to go by train to one's destination.

In what a blaze of glory the new suits burst in upon the autumn scene! Not a dull moment from the first moment of their appearance. Just one breath taking event after another is their record so far, involving such details as longer skirts, higher waistlines, extraordinary fur trims, flared hemlines, matching belts, startling colorings, intriguing new weaves.

There is no prescribed rule for suits except that they must be individual. Short-jacket suits are interpreted in especially fascinating "lines," such as for instance, the belted models of which the style in the picture below is one among many. Golden beaver collars and cuffs trim the tweed in the illustration to perfection.

One of the delightsome things about suits of tweed for this season, is that they offer such a fascinating color range. A blue toned tweed trimmed with krimmer, hunter's green with red fox, Spanish red tweed with black wolf, a white-nubbed wool weave with cream-white caracul, a black tweed with black fur and right here is a place to stop and take breath, so as to tell about the advent of black into sports fashions. Black tweed! Make a memorandum of it, nothing swankier for the furred suit than black tweed.

Handsomely Furred Suit.

Some of the short-jacket tweed suits are furred about their finger-tip hemlines. Of course the flat fabric-like furs yield best to this border treatment. And, oh yes, about those tiny fur muffs which are shown in the windows and in fashion pictures now and then. Better by all means plan on adding this item of expense, that is if you would enroll among fashion's elect.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals it prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Tendency Is to Small Ranches

Temptation Has Been to Overstock in Years of Good Prices.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

On western cattle ranges the tendency is toward operation on a smaller scale and greater distribution of land ownership, Virgil V. Parr of the United States Department of Agriculture, points out. To maintain profits, he says, the ranchman will need to pay closer attention to the details of his business, the management of his herds, and of the range he owns, controls, or shares with other ranchers.

As a rule ranching now includes more farming and cropping than in the early era of the open range. Also ranch acreage is decreasing, but in the northern Great Plains area, Mr. Parr points out, many ranchmen are adding to their owned holdings by acquiring abandoned homesteads of settlers who have given up their efforts toward dry farming.

Methods of Management.

In Farmers' Bulletin 1395-F, Beef Cattle Production in the Range Area, just issued in a revised edition by the United States Department of Agriculture, Mr. Parr has summarized the methods of management that have proved most profitable and satisfactory in the range area. It is intended as a guide to aid men engaging in the business and as aid to established ranchers in comparing their methods with the best practice.

"The temptation to overstock during years of good prices," Mr. Parr warns, "is one of the most difficult things a cattleman of the western ranges has to overcome. There is a tendency among many to stock heavily during good years to recover losses sustained during bad years, and the usual result is that the gamble is carried one year too far and a repetition of loss occurs generally about the time previous losses are recovered."

Desirable Feeding.

For economical feeding a good stand of forage grasses is highly desirable. Range improvement is good business, either on owned land or by co-operative agreement between cattlemen operating on the open range. "Many stockmen," says Mr. Parr, "when they consider range improvement, think first of artificial reseeding. Investigations on the typical range areas have definitely shown that natural revegetation is far more practical than attempts at artificial reseeding. The first essential is to limit the number of stock to approximately the proper carrying capacity. Secondly the range should be so grazed as to give an opportunity for a high percentage of the palatable vegetation to reach maturity."

Native bulls are usually better foragers than are animals imported from eastern herds. Mr. Parr discusses the possibilities of range breeding of purebred stock for sale to ranchers who wish to improve or maintain the quality of their herds. Farmers' Bulletin 1395-F includes a fairly complete consideration of most of the important problems of the range regions. It is available for free distribution to those who apply to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Pruning Walnut Trees When Young Best Plan

Wayward offspring of the forest monarchs need some training in their early youth if they are to grow up into trees that make good lumber. This is true of second growth walnut.

The young walnut tree, uncrowded by other trees, retains its lower branches indefinitely unless it is pruned when young. And when the tree matures, these lower limbs produce large knots that extend so far into the trunk that they ruin its value for lumber. But a few minutes' time spent pruning the lower limbs makes the sapling grow more tall and stately. And when the tree matures, the effort yields big dividends in a clear log that can be cut and sold at a good price.

Some soils are peculiarly adapted to alfalfa growing. Some soils must receive special preparation, such as liming, fertilizing, summer fallowing, inoculation of seed, and other artificial applications.

No grower is doing all that he can for maximum fruit setting in Delicious and Stayman unless hives of bees are present in their plantings and effective pollinating varieties are mixed in the planting or are in adjacent rows.

Increased Profits From Smut Control

Disease Reduces Crop Yield and Market Prices.

Thousands of farmers know that wheat smut reduces yields and sometimes the selling price of wheat, and have learned through their county agents how to control this disease by treating the seed before planting. The copper carbonate dusting method is now generally used for killing stinking smut in wheat because it is the simplest, cheapest, and the most effective method known.

The seed should be placed in a tight container, such as a barrel, churn, or box, provided with a tight-fitting opening, and arranged so that it can be revolved on an axis. Two or three ounces of copper carbonate per bushel is sprinkled on the wheat and the container then revolved so that every seed gets coated. It is best to wear a mask of cloth over the mouth and nose to prevent irritation or nausea.

Stinking smut changes the grain into masses or spores called smut balls. Since the chaff is not destroyed the disease is not easily observed, except for the odor. E. A. Miller, agronomist in the Texas agricultural mechanical college extension service, warns farmers that seed from fields that were entirely free from smut last season may develop the disease next year unless the seed are treated. The reason for this lies in the fact that the smut spores are given wide distribution through threshing machines.

The copper carbonate treatment is recommended only for stinking smut of wheat and kernel smut of grain sorghums and sweet sorghums. For oat and barley smut the formaldehyde treatment should be used.

Straw Loft Gaining in Favor for Henhouses

One of the interesting developments in poultry housing is the rapid progress the straw loft poultry house has made within the last year or two. A great many of the poultry specialists have approved this type of house and it is gaining in favor rapidly. Almost any shape of house can be adapted to this type, the essential thing being to have an open ceiling or mow about 6½ to 7½ feet above the floor and have this covered with 12 to 18 inches of clean straw. It is usual to have a tight floor above the roosts, with the straw loft above the rest of the floor.

The covering of straw lets the foul air and moisture go out slowly and escape through gratings or louvers in the ends of the attic above, while sufficient fresh air comes in through cracks and other parts of the straw loft, and thus a very satisfactory amount of ventilation is obtained and still the house kept a little warmer than the outdoor air. Users have observed that the straw loft house is warmer in winter and cooler in summer than where it is not used and those who tried it are enthusiastic.

Rabbit Is Troublesome When Not Restrained

In regions where the common rabbit is unusually abundant garden and truck crops may suffer quite severely. Melons, beans, cabbage, and similar crops are usually more attractive to the young rabbits than grass or clover. Where it is not possible to protect the crop with a wire fence, some relief may be had by carefully utilizing bits of poisoned vegetable, apple, or small quantities of poisoned grain. On a small area, however, by watching just at dusk and shooting the young rabbits is perhaps a quicker and more satisfactory and safer method. Besides the young rabbits make very good eating. By spending a little time each evening after the day's work is over one can usually kill or drive away rabbits from the garden or from exposed truck patches.

Sour Cherry Production Increased by Pruning

More vigorous trees, resulting in more cherries, follow the proper pruning of Early Richmond, Montmorency and English Morello trees, says H. B. Tukey, horticulturist at the New York state experiment station, in commenting on a series of tests made under his direction in the Hudson river valley and confirmed by observations in all of the leading sour-cherry districts of the state.

Judicious use of nitrogenous fertilizers should accompany the pruning operations, says the specialist. He has prepared a report on his experiments, giving detailed information on the pruning and fertilizing of sour cherries. A copy of this report may be had upon application.

Storage of Potatoes Is Quite Often Overlooked

If best results are expected by storing potatoes only potatoes of good quality should be stored. Potatoes will not improve in storage but are more likely to go down in quality. Many storage troubles are the result of poor field conditions. Potatoes should be left in the field a few hours to permit them to dry. Immature potatoes will have to be handled and watched carefully.

Potatoes may be stored in open bins in a cool cellar or buried in the ground. If stored in a cellar, they should not be piled more than a foot deep. When stored in layers deeper than this or in sacks, there is more danger of loss from decay.

POULTRY

GIVE PLENTY OF ROOSTING PLACE

Pullets Need Room and Fresh Air to Develop Properly.

Give the pullets plenty of roosting space and encourage them to roost early, says L. M. Hurd of the New York State College of Agriculture. Roosting helps to prevent crowding and allows the individual chicken more freedom of action and better air. Uncrowded pullets make better growth.

Clean and disinfect the houses and supply them frequently with fresh litter. Shavings, oat straw, or sand make the best covering for the floor during the summer. When more than one house is in use take care that too many pullets do not form the habit of roosting in one building. The buildings should be at least 100 feet apart to help keep the birds evenly distributed. It is not advisable to try to house more than 125 growing pullets in one colony house.

Provide good ventilation on hot nights. In addition to the regular ventilators take out the glass sash in the front of the house. To prevent possible infestation from red mites paint the perches and side walls close by with carbolineum, or spray the colony houses several times during the summer with a mixture of equal parts of crude carbolic acid and kerosene.

When there are many hatches and several weeks difference in their ages, provide each hatch with a separate range, or place the houses farther apart than for groups of the same age. Otherwise older pullets will annoy the young and prevent normal growth.

Fireless Cooker Good Idea for Egg Layers

Hens need warm water. It's cheaper for you to warm it on the fire than to make the hen warm it with expensive feed.

You can save lots of trouble by insulating the water pail. You can make a sort of fireless cooker by placing the drinking vessel in a box large enough to stuff two or three inches of straw, excelsior, or torn newspapers, packed tightly below and all around the vessel.

Keep the material dry by covering it with tin, fitted closely under the top rim of the pail, and sloped slightly to the outside of the box so the spilt water will run off.

The water keeps warm several hours.

Profits Increased by Culling Flock Closely

Whether the poultry producer keeps pure breds or grades, he will increase his profits very materially by culling his flock closely every year.

Though the trap nest is the most accurate means of selecting the best layers in the flock, its use is only practicable for those who make poultry breeding a specialty.

The trap nest usually has no place on the general farm. On the average, the pullet laying year is more profitable than any other. Yearlings and two-year-olds are likely to be kept at an actual loss unless they are carefully culled.

Poultry Facts

The average fenced farm geese are the most profitable of all.

A dust bath aids materially in the elimination of body lice and should be installed.

Pure-breds usually lay eggs that are more uniform in size, shape and color, and are more productive than mixed flocks.

Hens should stand a lot of dry still cold, but not drafts. There should be no opening in opposite walls, not even cracks, to draw a shivery current of air through the house.

Overcrowding in the poultry house discourages production of high priced eggs.

Feed hens balanced rations. Watch flock for sick birds and remove them on discovery. Keep house dry, warm and well ventilated.

The first rule in feeding the poultry flock in the winter is to be sure to feed plenty. Hens cannot lay in cold weather unless they have enough feed to keep them fat and thus have a surplus for making eggs.

Squash and pumpkin make a good succulent feed for poultry, helping to keep the bowels in good condition.

Increase the size of your poultry house to keep pace with the size of your flock. Poultry is not city bred and does not like crowded conditions.

Moist mash often helps to get more feed into the crops—a warm, slightly moistened mash fed at noon during cold weather. Liquid skim milk or buttermilk is especially valuable for moistening the mash.

As Pulitzer Sized Up His Readers' Interest

Bayard Swope, the brilliant journalist, told at a luncheon at the Manhattan club a number of stories about the journalistic genius of Joseph Pulitzer.

"Once there was a big championship golf tournament to be played,' he said. "This was years ago, before Mr. Pulitzer went blind, and golf was in its infancy in America.

"Well, Mr. Pulitzer sent for his dozen best reporters and special writers, and, lining them up before him, he said:

"'Those who understand golf stand on the left; those who are ignorant of it, on the right.'

"The stars separated themselves accordingly. All understood golf but three—three very excellent writers.

"'You three chaps will cover the tournament,' said Mr. Pulitzer, with his nervous smile. 'I want all our readers to enjoy our story of this event, and since most of them are ignorant of golf, what interests you three will be sure to interest them.'"

This Fast Age

Dr. Eli Moschowitz, an eminent New York scientist, writing in the Journal of the American Medical association, declares that most of us live two lives now as compared with those of an earlier generation. "A man who attains the age of fifty today," he says, "has in reality lived one hundred years, as years were formerly reckoned; and judging by the deluge of inventions aimed at even swifter methods of accomplishment, the prospect of the individual of the future is that he will be an old man in experience before his adolescence has begun."

Spruce Best for Rayon

The spruce of northern Canada is considered the most suitable raw material for the manufacture of rayon by the viscose process. Cellulose, in the form of sulphite pulp, derived from this wood, is now being shipped from Canada to all parts of the world for the manufacture of artificial silk.

Starting a Fire Safely

Fill a bucket with fine ashes and saturate them with kerosene. Put two or three tablespoonfuls of the mixture in the grate, lay on the dry wood and the fire is ready to go.—Farm and Fireside.

Expatriates Still Pensioned

If a soldier is receiving a pension, removal to a foreign country would not deprive him of it. During the World war the pensions of many Civil war veterans living in Germany were cut off, but this was owing to lack of communication between the two countries. After the war all these veterans received their back pension money.—Pathfinder Magazine.

No Wonder

"This card you have hung in the kitchen, mum," said the suburban cook, "is too much for me. I can't make out what my nights off are."

"And no wonder, Nora. That's a time-table of suburban trains."—Exchange.

Beatrice—Yes, and the least little thing he says tickles her so.

The Right Way to Redye Fine Silks

Textile makers always use special dyes for silk or wool. They know that is the best way. The makers of Diamond Dyes are the first to enable home dyers to follow this plan.

Next time you want to dye some of your more valuable articles of silk or wool, try the special Diamond Dyes in the Blue Package. They will give these materials clearer, more brilliant colors than any "all-purpose" dye. And they are just as easy to use as ordinary dyes. Like the white package Diamond Dyes, these dyes contain an abundance of the highest quality anilines. The blue package dyes silk or wool only; the white package dyes, or tints, any material. Either package; 15c, drugstores.

RECKLESS DRIVERS SHOULD BE REPORTED

Every Citizen Now Has a Chance To Protect Himself; It is Every One's Duty To Help Eliminate Bad Practices of Driving

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 23.—"Mental carelessness is the beginning of Material Carelessness that makes thousands of automobile owners potential murderers." This statement was issued today from headquarters of the Hoosier State Automobile Association and as an illustration set forth the following horrible example:

"On Saturday night a short distance north of New Salem, Rush County, on state road 52, about 10 o'clock, two cars without lights came together head - on killing Sherman Jeffrey, 18, and injuring Roy Lee, 27, and his wife and children.

"Get this—there were no lights burning on Jeffrey's car and only a lantern hung on the front of Lee's car, and like as not it was not burning either. Just think of the criminal carelessness of two drivers going out on to the public highway, especially on a state road at 10 o'clock at night with no lights. What could be worse?

"It looks as though providence had administered a stroke of justice in this case through these two murderous wrong doers harming each other instead of as is usually the case causing innocent and law abiding drivers to suffer. Terrible accidents are being caused every night by cars having no front lights, or only one front light or no tail light.

"The reader may ask himself—but what is to be done about all of this? The answer is in two parts, i. e. First of all, every citizen should report bad driving to the State Motor Police or other police authorities. The driver's license law provides the means of each citizen helping to protect himself and others by wrong doers in driving "seen" and possibly having their driver's license suspended or revoked. Then second—each person should get the habit of safety and to this end he might give constant attention to the following 12 rules to make driving safer, as published by one of the world's largest automobile manufacturers:

1. Courtesy comes first—consider the rights and privileges of others.
2. Keep your mind on your driving and anticipate sudden emergencies.
3. Learn the "feel" of having your car under control.
4. Obey all traffic and parking regulations.
5. Keep to the right and comply with road markings and signs.
6. Signal for stops and turns,—watch the car ahead.
7. Slow down at crossings, schools and dangerous places.
8. Never pass cars on hills, curves or crossings.
9. Adapt your driving to road conditions,—rain, ice, soft spots and ruts.
10. It does not pay to take the "right of way" too seriously.
11. When you drive remember the time when you're a pedestrian.
12. Know the law—it was passed for your protection.

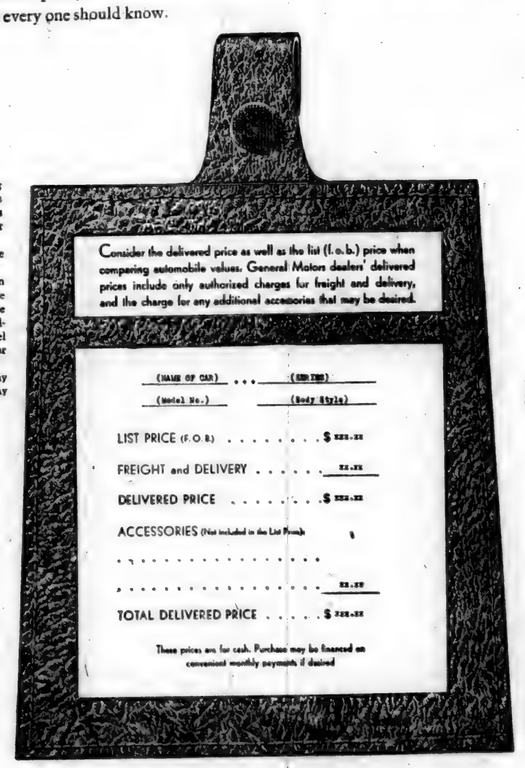
Important to

BUYERS OF NEW CARS

FROM time to time General Motors has devoted its messages in this paper to giving facts which help the car-buyer get full value for his automobile dollar.

In keeping with that policy of frankness, this message gives facts about the prices of new cars which every one should know.



THIS is the standard price tag used by General Motors dealers to show what makes up the delivered prices of their new cars.

List Price. The f. o. b. price advertised by the factory.

Freight and Delivery. An authorized amount to cover the freight charges paid by the dealer and the cost of unloading, inspecting, supplying fuel and oil — preparing the car for delivery to you.

Accessories. A charge for any additional accessories that may be purchased.

WHEN you buy a new automobile, it is the delivered price that you actually pay.

The delivered price consists of the list price of the car—the f. o. b. price advertised by the manufacturers—plus certain other charges which the dealer makes.

You should know exactly what those charges are and what each one is for.

There is no mystery about the charges added by General Motors dealers. They have adopted this standard price tag, which tells you everything. Nothing is hidden. There is no extra charge to permit a seemingly better trade-in offer. No extra charge to cover advertising or any other item. You know exactly what makes up the difference between the list price and the delivered price. Each charge made by the dealer is fair and reasonable.

Use this tag for reference. Make it your guide in comparing automobile values. For the delivered price is the price you really pay.

Below is given the range of list prices for each General Motors car. They are just as low as General Motors' vast production, centralized purchasing and reasonable profit per car can make them. General Motors dealers maintain this value in their delivered prices of these cars and show you every item on the standard price tag. Look over the General Motors line. Then clip the coupon.

DRIVER'S SAFETY LESSON No. 3

PREPARED BY THE Hoosier State Automobile Association

EVERY TIME IS TRAIN TIME

Too often a railroad crossing is the meeting place of "head lights" and "light heads."

An eminent doctor avers that in this "button pushing" age, we are producing a nation of mentally indolent and lazy people with lazy intellects and the average brain is the laziest thing in the world.

This remarkable statement of an eminent physician is substantiated by the observations of figures furnished by the Accident Prevention Department of the Hoosier State Automobile Association, that of 3,589 automobile drivers observed at railroad crossings, 2,907, of 81 per cent, looked neither way before crossing, 602, or 17 per cent, looked only in one direction and only 80, or 2 per cent, looked both ways.

One large railroad company reports that during 1927 over 600 crossing gates, lowered to protect the motoring public, were run into or broken by automobiles.

People who hear of railroad accidents, all accidents, often exclaim: "Too bad! But accidents will happen." Accidents ARE becoming commonplace. Accidents don't happen. They are CAUSED by thoughtlessness, carelessness, recklessness and mental indolence.

Everyone knows, or ought to know, that a railroad crossing, especially one on a curve is dangerous. Even so "dense" a group as the United States Supreme Court judges legally held that every one ought to know, yet, yearly thousands are sent to the hospitals and premature graves from well marked, plain view, regular railroad crossings.

Fire Burns Over 20 Acres

The Wabash trains set fire to the grassy meadow on the Tom White farm, west of the track and it spread west into the woods on the old farm, formerly owned by John Knight, burning about 20 acres, Monday evening. Chas. Sucher and Oral Hughes fought the fire and finally got it under control. Dead grass made the fire run like a forest fire and old stumps remained ablaze for hours, making it look like signals.

CONTRACT LET FOR NEW DEKALB COUNTY ROAD

The contract for the construction with gravel of the Elza Magginis road in Jackson township was awarded by the county commissioners Tuesday to Arthur Rosenberry of Butler, for $9,292.80.

Other bids were received as follows: Forder & Davis of Hicksville, $10,296; and Betts & Essinger of Columbia City, $9,774.

The estimate of County Surveyor, Charles Miser, was $11,380.

The contract calls for the work to be started not later than June 1, 1930, and to be completed by Aug. 31.

MRS. STELLA GOLDSMITH WILL GIVE RADIO ADDRESS

"Happy Farm Women" is the subject chosen by Mrs. Stella Goldsmith of Spencerville, for her talk over WLS, the Prairie Farmer Station, on November 7, at 2:45 p. m. Mrs. Goldsmith's talk will be one of a series given during Homemakers' Hour by outstanding farm women of the middle west.

Mrs. Goldsmith's activities in the Home Bureau are well known to all women in this part of Indiana and her talk Thursday afternoon will be unusually interesting to all listening in.

FIRST GAME

The basket ball fans of both Leo and St. Joe filled our local gym to witness their local teams cast off summer scales and brush up for the coming season's battles. Last Friday evening's game was the first game for both teams and aside from a few fumbles and slow passing of the ball, the game was fast and close at all periods.

The first 9 points made on either team were made by tossing fouls. The guarding was close which made fouls inevitable. Both teams led at intervals but St. Joe put over a three point lead in the last two minutes which they held until the final gun. Nevertheless, Leo played a real game and made St. Joe team go to it. The game finished 20 to 17 in St. Joe's favor. The second team, which accompanied the first team of Leo, defeated our second team by the score of 10-13.

On next Friday night the High School will sojourn to Avilla to play the High School there and on Saturday night the team will play Butler at this place. These games will be close and a good crowd is expected.

NO ELECTION FOR ST. JOE TUESDAY

The entire town council has been asked by the citizens to hold office for another term, and no election was held. The Citizens and Independent voters failed to place a ticket in the field, which necessitates a hold-over. However, at the town board meeting Monday evening, councilman, Craig Sheffer, tendered his resignation from ward three, to take effect December 31st.

Sermon for Today

By Rev. H. J. Studabaker

THE WAY AHEAD

Grant us to walk with Thee, when the trials of life may appear as a mountain before us. Difficulty, need, and distress may have overtaken us, or lie in the path just ahead. All may appear as darkness about us, and no human agency can bring us succor, but if thou in thy strength wilt help us to remember thy age-old promise, "Not by might, nor by power, but by thy Spirit," we shall be able to come forth through the darkness with added grace and power as a living tribute to thee.

We know the ways of the Lord are not our ways, we know the plan of God for us is as a closed book, but we ask in all humility that we may receive from a great and abiding trust and faith, so we may follow in all meekness and sincerity the plan of life which thou hast revealed to us through Thy Son, Jesus Christ.

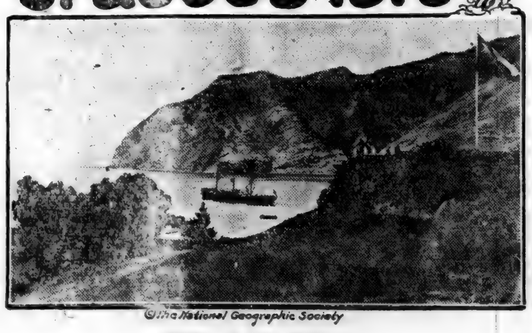
Robinson Crusoe's Isle



©The National Geographic Society

Harbor of Juan Fernandez.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

IF YOU board a "wind jammer" at Valparaiso, Chile, and sail almost due west, on the eighth day out you will sight an island that has been read about by more people than has any other little island in the world. It is Juan Fernandez, Robinson Crusoe's isle.

Strangely beautiful is this island. Climbing 3,000 feet up from the sea, its woody ridges lie wreathed in fantastic lacy patterns of silvery fog. As one rows ashore, the landscape rolls down like some giant theater's drop curtain, its green ferns, forests and streams painted by nature's own hand.

Now, where Crusoe hunted, huddles a hamlet of Chilean fisher folk, with the boats and sheds of a lobster-catching industry. Delicate, delicious lobsters they are, but the men who catch them will clamber over a whole boatload to quarrel about a can of American salmon!

Mas-a-Tierra (Landward) is the correct name of this island on which Alexander Selkirk, reputed hero of Defoe's romance, was put ashore.

Near by is Santa Clara, or Goat island, and about 100 miles westward lies Mas-a-Fuera, or Further Out island. These three form the Juan Fernandez group, named after the Spaniard who discovered them in 1563. Now they belong to Chile—in law; but in imagination every school boy on earth claims a proprietary interest here.

High up the side of Mas-a-Tierra stands a tablet which reads:

In Memory
of Alexander Selkirk,
Mariner,

A native of Largo, in the county of Fife, Scotland; who lived on this island in complete solitude for four years and four months. He was landed from the Cinque Ports galley, 90 tons, 16 guns, A. D. 1704, and was taken off in the Duke, privateer, 12th Feb., 1709. He died Lieutenant of H. M. S. Weymouth A. D. 1723, aged 47 years. This tablet is erected near Selkirk's lookout, by Commodore Powell and the officers of H. M. S. Topaze, A. D. 1868.

To day on this island one hears much talk about lobsters, but little of Robinson Crusoe. The easy-going, Spanish-speaking inhabitants, shut off from the world and the scores of books describing their island, do not suspect how famous it is. Nearly all its 287 people make a living in the lobster trade.

Huge Lobster Industry.

Here is one of the most extraordinary shellfish industries in the world. In one year 80,000 or more lobsters are caught, not counting the small ones thrown back. Time was when these creatures swarmed the shores in such armies that the islanders had only to strew bits of meat along the beach, then walk about with a stick and tip the lobsters over on their backs.

Due to wise conservation methods of the Chilean government, island waters still abound with lobsters; but now they are caught with hoop nets set off shore and baited with stale fish. The fishermen go out, long before dawn to tend the traps. Over a charcoal stove astern they make coffee and broil fish for breakfast, but nobody ever eats a lobster.

To keep the catch alive, buckets of sea water are dashed over the crawling creatures and a tarpaulin is used to shade them from the sun. No lobster remains long in good health and spirits out of salt water. So, usually within 24 hours after catching them, the Crusoe island fishermen try to get their lobsters to port and into the "live cars." These are scows made of slats, floating half-submerged in Cumberland bay, in which the lobsters are held captive.

Twice a month a boat sails from the island. It carries the scant mail, any passengers, and a load of lobsters, which are often two and a half feet long and weigh as much as from ten to twelve pounds. On the island the price paid the fishermen is but nominal; yet in the market at Valparaiso a live Crusoe island lobster may bring the equivalent of from three to five dollars. On a cafe table in Buenos Aires the same lobster, after his trans-Andean trip, sells for more.

The lobster of Juan Fernandes (Palinustus frontalis (Milne Edwards)) is minus the large claws which distinguish the lobster of our North Atlantic waters (Homarus americanus). It is a close relative of the American crawfish known as the spiny lobster in Florida.

Besides wild goat shooting, fishing around the island's rocky shores affords all the amazing luck that anglers' tales are spun from. Here are the big morays, or wolf fish, fierce and voracious; then the fighting vidriola, or what we would call amber jacks, or yellowtail, which occur all up this coast. Around Juan Fernandez the latter often weigh 100 pounds or more.

Many kinds of sea bass also abound, with no end of delicate pan fish—the furel, corbina, weakfish or croaker, the pampanito and palometa, the smelt, the jergulla. Here, too, the flying fish is eaten.

Storehouse of Fiction.

There is probably more excuse for fiction about Juan Fernandez than about any other place its size on earth. For 300 years pirates, earthquakes, whalers, penal colonies, battle, and political storms have swept this now calm and dreamy island. In the hillside above Cumberland bay one sees the tiers of cells, like the Roman catacombs, dug to hold prisoners when Chile used the island as a penal colony. Out in the harbor lies the hulk of the German cruiser Dresden, sunk during the World war.

Once vast packs of sea lions haunted the island rocks. Anson, English buccaneer, wrote home that there were so many of these creatures here that he couldn't move a ship's boat without putting a man in her bows with an oar to drive them aside. Traders slew them for oil, and wild dogs killed their young on the beaches; so now the sea lions seldom frequent these waters.

To kill off the wild goats, and thus cut off the fresh meat supply for the English and Dutch pirates who plagued the coast, Spanish rulers of Chile long ago sent bands of dogs to this island; but the plan failed. The dogs couldn't catch the goats among the rocks.

There may be buried pirate chests on this island. Quien sabe? But priceless treasure, indeed, was left by Anson and other early explorers. They planted vegetables and fruit seeds, and let loose pigs, cows and horses.

It was an unwritten law, tradition says, that every ship calling here in old days, whether merchant, whaler, or buccaneer, should leave animals or plants, and thus help stock the island for the common good. In consequence the variety of useful plant life here is unparalleled in the Pacific. Cows, pigs and horses are plentiful also. Boys chase wild horses around the grassy canyons where Crusoe and Friday hunted goats.

In a single garden, a spot of dazzling beauty, belonging to a Frenchman shipwrecked here more than thirty years ago, is an astounding grouping of exotic and native plants and trees. Here grew, among other things, the botanically famous chonta palm, of which highly polished walking sticks are made. The creamy-white wood feels like satin and is marked with glistening black lines.

Many Wrecks on Its Shores.

Far up the moist island slopes are giant green ferns, bizarre and outlandish, like the fantastic plant life pictured to us as shading the earth in the time of mud and reptiles. Except where trails have been cut or fires have burnt them off, these ferns are so big and thick that it is hard to walk among them.

Juan Fernandez has a few good beaches, but mostly its shores are rocky, rough, or steep, with swift currents whirling past towering volcanic cliffs. Many a stout ship has piled up here as can be seen from moss-grown remains of forgotten wrecks.

Long ago Captain Shelvocke's Speedwell went to pieces on these rocks. At that time cats, multiplied from a few left ashore by earlier ships, fairly overran the island. Shipwrecked sailors from the Speedwell lived for weeks on cat meat. Their hunger found more substantial relief from one meal of cat meat than from five meals of seal or fish, wrote Shelvocke in his journal.

There are no wheeled vehicles on the island, and nowhere on its whole 40 square miles is a road—only paths. There is a school and a seldom-attended church, but there are no places of amusement. No stores; just one room in the lobster factory at Cumberland bay, open twice a week, where natives may buy articles from the mainland through an agent of the lobster-catching company.

WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph. D., LL. D.

The Oldest Egg in the World

THE race to be human began with the first living being. That being was possible because the earth brought from the sun some very remarkable elements and because the sun continued to shine. Under its beneficial rays, certain elements became so dynamically constituted that they began to perform like an organic individual. It could do what matter had not done before, behave like a living being. It grew, but its size was limited by its nature, as is that of a raindrop or a drop of oil or a piece of jelly. It split up. It developed new ways of growth, and evolved sex.

Various theories have been proposed as to how all this came about; even propaganda for taking the future of the race in our own hands. Meanwhile, do not forget that the egg with which we begin life has been living since life began; that egg has had a long history and has learned much about life. Otherwise we could not learn to behave like human beings in so short a time.

Our most human parts—brain, skull, teeth, voice organs, upright gait, and fingers—are not new, they are not unique, they are not ours exclusively; for life itself they are not even essential.

A man, monkey, opossum, lizard, frog, shark, flea, fishworm, oyster, and malaria germ have one thing in common: they must eat and breathe, or die. Every animal must have lungs and stomach, or the equivalent. Call it viscera. Viscera are vitals, the something without which there is no living animal. What else have they in common? A motor mechanism to bring the necessary elements of life within reach of the living body's vitals.

The history of our body is primarily that of the mechanism for getting food, ways of avoiding being eaten as food, and method of growth. In other words, the chemical activities whereby living beings maintain life are fundamentally the same in all animals, but the laboratory in which these activities take place and the mechanisms for carrying the laboratory about and for acquiring information as to food, enemies, etc., vary enormously.

Even our primate ancestor up a tree lacked no parts to become human; certain parts merely had to be altered. Say two million years. Beyond these two, other millions passed while body and brain bided their time; the earth was not yet quite ready for nature's great experiment.

As Bergson puts it: "Man only realized himself by abandoning a part of himself on the way; he was not yet ready to fight for his life with his mere wits." Wits are his greatest weapon.

Life has tried out countless bodies.

Many families of nature's masterpieces have no living representatives because they over-specialized; they gave up so much to tusk, trunk, canine, wing, leg, stomach, size, height, length, or armor, that they had not enough to live on. They put all their eggs in one basket. Earth's crust is full of these fancy forms, so specialized they could not meet change. Man got ahead because he could grasp an idea, could talk it over with his fellow men and think up new ideas. The amazing thing is not that he became human, but that he can be so inhuman in so many ways.

Reading the time-table backward suggests a parallel process, which seems to have been at work in human culture: progress by leaps; between, long pauses. The pauses grow shorter as time moves on.

For a hundred thousand years man gets along without steam control. The steam engine is invented. In the twinkling of an eye steamships plow the seas, and every land is ribbed with shining rails. The age of steam blossomed out of nothing. Gossip formerly passed from mouth to ear; at breakfast, now, Cape Town reads of the color of the hair of the girl the prince of Wales danced with the night before. This is another new age.

How did man get along without radio, newspaper, steel, steam, plumbing, arch, calendar, spear, flint knife, fire? He did. But he gets along faster with them. So with life itself. It got along without mammary glands and internal incubators, skull and vertebral column, head and tail, brains. But with brains, head, backbone, and placenta, the procession speeded up, life shot out in new directions.

Progress is often made by lying low; let the other fellow try out nature's new-fangled notions. By holding out, man came on the stage during the big scene. When the call went forth for clever people who could double, shifty people who could walk back to town if the show "blew," who could catch an' fry their own fish in case of need, who could dig out, swim across, climb up and jump down, who were handy with their hands, had good memories and could mix, man appeared.

All this took brains: a big brain, a brain so big it had to wrinkle or burst its case; a brain with frontal lobes so big they dwarf the hind brain. A brain big in every way: in absolute size and weight, in proportion to spinal cord, in proportion to body.

FROCKS OF NOVELTY WOOLEN; TWEED POPULAR FOR AUTUMN

IN CONSIDERING the merits of the jacket-and-skirt suit, versus the several-piece ensemble, do not forget that fashion has enrolled a third and very important member in the street-wear costume class—the one-piece frock made of some one or other of the intriguing fancy woolens which, this season, are bringing such glory to the fabric vogue.

In that it presents a refreshingly new field of endeavor from that of suit or ensemble, this one-piece street dress idea has captured the fancy of fashionists who are giving much time and thought to its development. To the clothes-wise woman who delights in the ultra, the swagger coat or cape dress are especially proving a beguiling theme.

These classy street dresses are also coming to be known as "spectator" frocks because so many of them are worn by the smart set in attendance at the football game, tennis, golf, polo and other outdoor tournaments. Since these daytime gowns are intended to be worn without coats, it follows that the woolens of which they are made must necessarily be of a heavier type than the lightweight weaves which scored such a triumph during the spring and summer months.

The cape-dress in the upper picture, per example, is made of a rough-surfaced tweed, warm enough to withstand the cold days up to the end of November. And then what? Simply remove the detachable cape and don one of the new fur-jackets of "sporty" fur, perhaps raccoon, or tiger, or caracul or the like. Or why not indulge in a swanky fur "set" which includes wide flaring cuffs which snap on and off, also a collar which snuggles up around the ears at the same time that it flares over the shoulders in capelet fashion.

While cape types like the model in the picture are in every way up-to-the-moment in smartness, there is another style equally as fashionable, namely the bolero cloth dress. As its name implies the one-piece dress flaunts a bolero, sometimes as a separate item, and then again worked as an integral part of the frock. In some instances the bolero is simply indicated with set on flares or possibly tailored braiding.

To go tweedless this autumn—perish the thought! According to fashion's verdict it's tweed for coats.

tweed for suits, tweed for ensembles, tweed for frock and the blouse. Likewise milliners have taken to making our hats and scarfs to go with them of gay tweeds. Even our pocketbooks as the lower picture shows, have gone tweedy-tweed this season.

It is really surprising how much of style or of swank, to express it in terms modernistic, a handbag of tweed adds to the suit of self tweed. Nothing smarter for street wear can we suggest than a suit of tweed as here illustrated, complemented as it is with so modish an accessory as an under arm envelope bag of identical tweed.

The tweed employed for the making of this fashionable costume is one which says "it" in black-and-white. With what persistency the theme of black-and-white "carries on" in the mode!

One cannot at this moment expect to sidestep black-and-white and remain enrolled among the style-elect. Which accounts for the fact that the fabric-wise are choosing for their autumn suits such interesting woolens as black tweed nubbed with white, or black and white interwoven in a tweed patterning.

Some there are who play up the black-and-white thought, by using white fur for cuffs, collar and perhaps a wee muff. A black and white tweed collared with white caracul or some other flat all-white fur is stunning.

One way of introducing the tweed note into one's daytime costume is to wear a tweed hat and scarf with handbag to match—these with a coat of solid colored cloth in any weave we may choose.

Next to black-and-white ranks brown-and-white in point of popularity, or might we not better say that one is as popular as the other? With the black-and-white suitings, white satin is selected for the blouse, while eggshell satin finds favor when it comes to blousing the ensemble of brown and white or brown and beige mixture.

Not Always Fatal

A wound in the heart is usually but not always fatal. The hospital records for the war reveal many interesting cases in which soldiers lived with bullets in their hearts. One soldier lived two months with a bullet in the interior of his heart. Many others lived after bullets had come in contact with the heart and injured it. —Pathfinder Magazine.

Sanitation Pays in Raising Pigs

Indiana Producers Are Enthusiastic Over Increase in Profits.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Hog producers of Indiana who have tried raising their pigs, according to the sanitation system of hog production developed by the bureau of animal industry of the United States Department of Agriculture, are enthusiastic over the increase in their profits which the system made possible, says Dr. J. E. Gibson, federal inspector in charge of hog-cholera control work in Indiana. Doctor Gibson reports that the increase in returns resulting from the use of the system, over the returns received by the same producers under their former methods, has been about $6 per pig, on an average. The system involves the farrowing and raising of pigs under such conditions that they do not have parasites, especially roundworms, which if not controlled, retard growth and cause death in many instances.

Adoption of System.

The plan of getting the system into practice was to go to the farmer in a township who had been the least successful in raising hogs and induce him to try out the system. So many farmers applied for supervision that all could not be served.

One farmer who had become greatly discouraged was about ready to quit hog raising. He took up the sanitation plan. He had to buy all the feed used except pasture. He formerly had not been able to make his hogs average 200 pounds under eight or nine months. This year, under the new system, he had 38 shotes which averaged exactly 200 pounds at five months and five days. They sold for $11.50 per hundredweight, bringing a total of $897, or $374 more than cost of feed.

Benefits to Farmers.

Another farmer who had been able to raise, on an average, only four or five pigs to the sow, raised seven pigs per sow this year and attributed the results to the sanitation. Altogether, in Indiana this year more than 6,000 hogs were raised under the plan with benefits amounting to $36,000. There was an average increase of two pigs saved per sow on farms where the sanitation was used.

Meat Scraps and Meat Supply Best Minerals

The most common and best source of minerals in the feeds for poultry is in the form of meat scraps and milk.

Where these two feeds are not allowed in proper amounts the necessity for minerals is greatly increased.

Where large quantities of white corn and wheat middlings are used, the needs for minerals is also increased.

In the selection of meat scraps for feeding poultry, the fact should be kept in mind that the higher the protein content of these materials the lower the mineral or ash content, therefore materials too high in protein should not be selected unless minerals from some other source be supplied.

Handling Broomcorn

Many broomcorn growers believe that the brush will increase in weight if left until the seed are ripe. A nine-year test at the United States Dry-land Field station, Woodward, Okla., showed there was no increase in the weight of brush after the seed reached the milk stage. The value of the brush cut when the seed are in the milk averaged a third higher than when cut in the dough stage, and nearly twice as high as when left to ripen.

Agricultural Hints

For best production from pullets put them in the laying house before production starts.

Many dairymen have increased their profits by belonging to dairy record clubs. They help you to know your cows.

Flower beds and borders should be cleaned out in the fall to destroy disease fungi which live over winter in plant residues.

Bone meal, limestone, and salt are the only minerals necessary in the dairy ration. Complex mixtures are a waste of money.

Alfalfa hay or alfalfa leaf meal is an effective substitute for succulent green feed for winter poultry feeding. Alfalfa hay may be fed in two-inch mesh wire netting feeders.

Feed a balanced ration of wholesome grain and mash, supplemented with grit and oyster shell, and endeavor to secure the maximum production of eggs of high quality.

Late maturing turkeys that would not dress out as number ones at Thanksgiving, due to lack of size, should be confined and fed heavily on corn in preparation for the holidays.

Ohio corn growers did not respond in as large numbers this year as in 1928 in entries in the 10-acre corn contest. Last year more than 200 were enrolled, while this year only 174 entered.

Liming During Fall Is Least Expensive

Puts Land Into Shape for Seeding in Spring.

There are two advantages to buying and applying lime in the fall, says C. J. Chapman, soils specialist at the Wisconsin state university; commercial companies usually have lower prices at this season and fall applications of lime are most beneficial.

"A good grade of lime applied to fall plowed land and worked into the soil by disking, both in the autumn and spring, puts the land in excellent shape for seeding the following spring," he declares.

Applications of lime can be put on the soil during the winter months but the effectiveness of the material is not quite as great, and if it is applied just previous to seeding in the spring, larger applications are necessary.

The question of how much lime to apply can be answered by the acidity test. The amount is variable depending on the kind of lime, degree of fineness, and length of time application is made previous to seeding alfalfa or sweet clover, Chapman explains.

After an application of lime has been made, he says the first step toward the successful building up of soils has been accomplished. Often, it is the only treatment necessary.

When pulverized limestone is purchased, Chapman warns farmers to be sure they are obtaining material which tests high and is finely ground. At least 40 to 50 per cent should pass through a 60-mesh screen.

Less Bulky Fertilizers Encouraged by Farmers

Higher concentration of plant food in mixed fertilizers, than was customary six years ago, has resulted in Ohio farmers buying 20 per cent more plant food in commercial fertilizer in 1928 than they bought in 1922, while paying only 3 per cent more freight and bagging charges. E. E. Barnes, of the soils department of the Ohio State university, has checked the tendencies in the use of fertilizer on Ohio farms, through fertilizer sales reports made to the state department of agriculture.

"Actual tonnage of fertilizing material purchased in 1928 is only 2 per cent greater than the tonnage purchased in 1922," says Barnes. "But this is not a true picture of what has happened. Along with this small increase in tonnage, there has been an increase in the concentration of the fertilizers sold, which has made the sales of total plant food materials in 1928 increase 20 per cent over the same sales in 1922."

Barnes' check shows that the sale of phosphoric acid increased 9 per cent in the six-year period; sales of potash increased 160 per cent, and sales of nitrogen increased 121 per cent.

Poultry Pointers for Use in Breeding Pens

The inclusion of birds in the flock that have other than straight breastbones is a matter for the individual to decide. It is inadvisable to use males with this defect, no matter what may be decided regarding females.

A crooked breast is a deformity, however.

The trap-nester, possibly, is more likely to use breeding birds with this deformity than a breeder not knowing actual record of the birds.

Where birds have been trap-nested it will be an easy matter to leave out those birds which do not lay normal-shaped or standard-sized eggs.

It is not expected that each bird will lay exhibition-quality eggs, but eggs that are pronouncedly abnormal will certainly not give optimum hatching results.

Nutriment in Skim Milk Too Valuable to Waste

Fully 70 per cent of the nutriment in milk is contained in the skim milk. This is too valuable to waste and skim milk powder, which preserves this valuable food for human use, is finding new uses every year. Progressive bakers here and there are using this powder in the making of bread and cakes. As high as 7 per cent may be used to advantage and it is said that customers are quick to appreciate the difference between bread containing milk powder and that with no milk. In fact, the superior quality of most home-made bread is due to the use of milk in the mixing where many bakeries use only water. Ice cream makers are using a lot of this material and it also enters into the making of macaroni, pie-filling, chocolates and many kinds of candies.

Making Silo Air Proof Most Practical Plan

An Iowa farmer who has had wide experience finds that spoiling of silage during the winter can be lessened by treating the silo wall on the inside with a solution that keeps out air. The mixture consists of one pound salt, two tablespoonfuls of alum, one teaspoonful of lye and four gallons of water, plus enough cement to make it the consistency of paste.

In some cases, the inside of the silo doors are lined with paper or the cracks filled with clay to keep out air. Another scheme is to sow oats or cane at the top of the silo. These grains sprout quickly in the warm silage and the matted growth serves as an insulator excluding the air.

One Significant Sign Editor Had Overlooked

Telling the story of his journey to Wyoming, where a convention of newspaper men was being held, Editor Hall of the Wareham (Mass.) Courier confides how he took a course in Indian sign language and felt pretty sure he had mastered most of it.

Two days later he had a chance to practice his newly acquired talent on a real red man, the Boston Globe relates. After a few questions had been asked and answered in the sign manual the Indian was noticed to make a peculiar gesture, passing his hand in a circular motion around his forehead.

Another Indian, who could speak English, was asked what it meant. "He say, 'White man crazy in the head.'"

Too Many "Tellers"

A middle-aged banker, who has just taken up the ancient and irritating Scottish game, found the usual number of amateur advisors at every tee, telling him just how to hold his clubs, just how to stand, just where to look and then just what was wrong with each stroke, until, worn out and baffled, he exclaimed: "There are actually more 'tellers' on this course than there are in the banks!"

YOU HAVE A DOCTOR'S WORD FOR THIS LAXATIVE

In 1875, an earnest young man began to practice medicine. As a family doctor, he saw the harm in harsh purgatives for constipation and began to search for something harmless to the sensitive bowels.

Out of his experience was born a famous prescription. He wrote it thousands of times. It proved an ideal laxative for old and young. As people saw how marvelously the most sluggish bowels are started and bad breath, headaches, feverishness, nausea, gas, poor appetite, and such disorders, are relieved by the prescription, it became necessary to put it up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is the world's most popular laxative. It never varies from Dr. Caldwell's original effective and harmless formula. All drugstores have it.

Drives 23 Miles To Buy Gold Medal Flour

"Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour Never Fails —Makes More Bread Per Sack" Says Miss Pearson

Miss Edna Pearson, Sioux City, Iowa

"I prove my preference for Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour by driving 23 miles to buy it," says Miss Pearson. "Gold Medal Flour never fails. Makes more bread per sack than any other flour, and the pie crusts I make with it are the flakiest I've ever seen."

This New-Type Flour Banishes Baking Failures

WOMEN all over the country declare they have taken the "guess work" out of baking . . . Now they get perfect results every time with bread, cakes, pies and biscuits.

They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is 'Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Special "Kitchen-tested" Recipes In Every Sack
(Changed Every 3 Months)

Please accept, free of charge, simplified recipes for 12 of Betty Crocker's most delicious baking creations. Recipes for the daintiest cakes, the finest cookies, the most popular pastries known. Each one is "simplified" until it is remarkably easy, too.

All 12 of these simplified "Kitchen-tested" recipes are inside every sack of GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour. You can get a full set today—simply ask your grocer for GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour.

DETROIT

WITH the centrally located Fort Shelby as your base of operation the varied attractions of this great city will keep you busy Saturday morning and afternoon.

Several new motion picture theaters of unusual grandeur, one of them the second largest in the world, are waiting to amuse you. Saturday evening might well be spent at a musical comedy or the Civic Theater. You'll find it pleasant Sunday morning to drive along uncrowded streets to Belle Isle, the Ambassador international bridge under construction, in view from hotel rooms, the great automobile plants and a host of other interesting places. And then in the afternoon the Symphony, or, perhaps, the Institute of Arts.

There's no end to the fascinating possibilities Detroit offers you.

Not the least of these are the excellent accommodations that await you at the Fort Shelby—900 reposeful, Servidor-equipped guest rooms, four different types of restaurants, the highest degree of comfort, convenience, and quietude. Many excellent rooms at $3, $3.50, and $4 a day, others still larger and more elaborate at various higher prices. Guests arriving by motor are relieved of the care of their cars at the door by competent attendants.

Advance reservations of tickets to theaters, concerts, operas, sporting events, etc., may be made at the Fort Shelby. Write for fully illustrated folder and information about direct route to the Fort Shelby.

COOPERATION

What are the motives behind the much used word "cooperation?" In the life and progress of a community, it may be said that there are several reasons why citizens engage in cooperative effort to gain common ends and accomplish common purposes. Cooperation springs both from selfishness and unselfishness. Even selfishness of the right sort is itself laudable. Many people put their shoulders to the wheel for the sheer joy of making things go. Others, desiring to help their own business or boost their social aspirations, jump in with their coats off and sleeves rolled up to do the job that is to be done. Still others have a financial reason which if legitimate, detracts nothing or little from the credit gained. For results count, after all, and the general public looks only to results.

This business of cooperation to build a town or city is the greatest factor of all. So long as the people with personal motives make them known, and so long as the personal ends sought for and obtained do not interfere with the general results, we can see no reason for withholding support in common endeavors. In the final analysis we are all somewhat selfish. There is some reason behind every act for the good of the community. Every piece of development helps somebody or some group of people if it helps in any degree. Every bit of public work costs somebody or some group of people money, time and personal effort. We could not weed out and separate the personal rewards of community work from those it affects than we could afford to stop development because somebody profited by it to the sacrifice of others. For cooperation means helping the other fellow, and in turn helping ourselves.

Where would St. Joe be if it were not for the cooperation of its people? To the extent that we work together we prosper. But cooperation works negatively as well as affirmatively. It may be used as effectively to hold up ill-advised projects as to forward worthy movements. None can say to what uses the cooperative spirit may or may not be put. Common sense and the instincts of citizenship must govern that problem. We do know, however, that unless individual ideas and ambitions are placed into the common larder they can not hope to become the realization of the community as a whole. Occasionally some one person is strong enough to make his impression upon the community or nation without sharing in the common ideals of the mass, but he constitutes the exception. The rule is by cooperation with others.

Harry Randall, of Chicago, is home making a visit with his parents for a week or two. Sunday they all drove to Mendon, Mich., and spent the day with Wm. Bricker and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Webster Stout of Fort Wayne were guests of Mrs. Alice Copp a few days last week, taking a vacation. They have sold out their restaurant business in Fort Wayne and are looking for a new location.

Mrs. S. P. Hadsell went to Columbus, Ohio, last Wednesday and visited until Saturday with her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Hough and family. On Saturday they all motored to Greenfield, Ind., and spent until Monday with Paul Hadsell and wife.

Possibly, dozing off while driving his car caused Virgil Vanzile of near Hurshtown, to drive off the road near the Spencerville cemetery. Neighbors tried to help him out of his trouble and Frank Butler was finally called early in the morning to assist with his team. The car was damaged considerable.

St. Joe Weekly News:

The picture of the building in the advertising page of The St. Joe Weekly News, is that of the Ideal Shoe Repair Shop, 400 South Main Street, Auburn, Ind., just north of the Hursh Grocery. Very centrally located and very easy to find, where they do expart shoe repairing on men's shoes, ladies and also children's shoes, at such reasonable prices.

The shop is equipped with very up to date machinery, which enables them to get the work out quickly and at the time promised, which is a delight to customers. The half soles and heels when repaired at the Ideal Shoe Shop look so neat and make the old shoes do double service.

As you pass by this place of business where Auburn people and also people of the community around here are going in and out with bundles of shoes, tan shoes, black shoes, brown shoes, red shoes, blue shoes, also in the summer time white shoes are repaired so neatly that one look at them when finished makes one appreciate the good workmanship of a really fine shoe shop. At this establishment you not only receive good service, but also every courtesy in all your business dealings.

Very truly,

The old Provines residence will be sold on November 16 at the residence as advertised in The News the past three weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. R. U. Bowser and son, Gale, Miss Janice Wade, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Whitacre and Mr. Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Waters, were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Eckerle of Fort Wayne.

Glenn MCNabb and family moved on Monday to the Mrs. Dell Smith property.

Rev. Homer Studabaker, pastor of the Methodist Church, moved into the parsonage last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beams, Miss Minnie Walker and Mrs. Rebecca Beams, took Sunday dinner with Mr. and Mrs. George Beams.

Mrs. Luella Smith held a public sale at her farm home on Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Smith and daughter, Rosa will move to St. Joe.

The Home Missionary society of the M. E. Church, will meet on Thursday afternoon with Mrs. George Watson. The ladies will sew.

Mr. and Mrs. Alva Place and children, of Fort Wayne and Mr. and Mrs. Ray Baker and family, were Sunday guests of Mrs. Tressie Kelley.

About twenty-five young people gathered at the home of Janice Wade Saturday evening and reminded her of her 18th birthday anniversary. Games and music were enjoyed and a delightful luncheon was served.

Alice Baker entertained her Sunday School class, the True Blues, and her teacher, Mrs. Cleo Reed, at a Hallowe'en party on Wednesday evening. Other guests were Miss Loretta Funk, Winifred Harper and Dorothy Markle.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cook, of South Bend, were week-end guests of Mrs. Cook's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Lake and family.

Doris Jeanne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peck, of Bloomington, arrived last Saturday morning. Mrs. Peck will be remembered as Florence Beams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Beams, of Spencerville.

Sixty people gathered on Thursday evening at the Wm. Reed home and enjoyed an Epworth League Masquerade party. Over forty were masqued. Hallowe'en games were enjoyed and prizes won by Dorothy Brattion, Mrs. Emila Gloyd, Victor McCrory, Gerry Gloyd and Mrs. Elsie Fisher.

W. B. Lucas is home from West Virginia, where he spent several weeks with a sister. A note from him said that Sunday he had as guests, Mr. Keckler and wife and Miss Pearl Shurtz, of Fort Wayne, and Harvey Beam, at his new bungalo. They had a pot luck dinner. Mr. Lucas said he furnished the pot and the guests the luck, and they had a fine time. Speaking about the rainy weather last week he remarked that it was bad weather for the milk peddlers, they had to strain their milk so many times to get the water out. Glad you are back to Indiana, Mr. Lucas.

Mr. and Mrs. James Reed spent Saturday and Sunday with Edgar Dennis and family of Richmond.

CONCORD

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Belden, of Toledo, spent Saturday night with Ford Jackson and family.

The Hallowe'en masquerade party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Johnson, Thursday evening was quite well attended, and they sure had a fine time in spite of the bad rainy weather. It seemed as though people had gotten so used to it and they surely did turn out, from Garrett, Auburn, Fort Wayne, Spencerville, St. Joe and the surrounding community. They had fun by the bushel.

Famous Vatican Library

A curious feature of the Vatican library, in the custody of which Cardinal Ehrle succeeds the late Cardinal Gasquet, is the palms which seems to have been taken to conceal it. You turn aside in a corridor not far from the sculpture gallery, and pass through a glass-paneled door, screened by a grating. Within is a great chamber, exquisitely decorated, but, at a first glance, without any sign of books. The books are there, however—tens of thousands of priceless volumes—but all in closed cases and cabinets beautifully painted to harmonize with the general scheme of decoration.

Improved Uniform International

Sunday School Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D.D., Dean Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(©, 1929, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for November 10

WORLD PEACE THROUGH MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING

LESSON TEXT—Isa. 2:2-4; 11:6-10; 19:23-25; Acts 17:22-28; John 4:20, 21.

GOLDEN TEXT—They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Friends the World Around.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Friends the World Around.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Working for World Peace.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Our Share in Promoting International Understanding.

The lesson title is somewhat misleading. It is not world peace through mutual understanding, but through the actual coming of Jesus Christ, the Messiah, and the establishment of His kingdom on the earth.

I. Messiah's Kingdom Established (Isa. 2:2-4).

By "mountain" in the Scriptures is meant a kingdom (Dan. 2:35, Rev. 13:1, 17:9-11).

1. Its position (v. 2).

It shall be in a place of supremacy. The kingdoms of the world shall then become the kingdom of Christ (Rev. 11:15).

2. The restored kingdom the teacher of the gentiles (v. 3).

God called Israel and made her the priestly nation in order that she might make known His name among other nations. Now, after many centuries of apostasy and rebellion, the chosen nation comes into its own. God's favor will be so outstanding as to gain the attention of the whole world.

3. The Divine Judge (v. 4).

The problems of the world which are so beyond man's capacity to solve will be adjudicated by the One who is all wise, and He shall then rebuke many people. Because of this rebuke, they shall convert their implements of war into implements of husbandry, and shall learn war no more.

II. Description of His Reign (Isa. 11:6-10).

Universal peace between men and animals will prevail. In this picture each animal is coupled with that one upon which it naturally preys.

1. The wolf shall dwell with the lamb.
2. The leopard shall lie down with the kid.
3. The calf, the young lion and the fatling shall lie down together.
4. A little child shall lead them.
5. The cow and bear shall feed together.
6. The lion shall eat straw like the ox.
7. The sucking child shall play upon the hole of the asp.
8. The weaned child shall put its hand upon the den of the cockatrice.

The coming of Christ will have a regenerating effect upon the whole creation. The only peace for the earth will be when Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, shall reign.

III. Peace Among the Nations by Means of the Knowledge of God (Acts 17:22-28).

The way to bring peace among the nations is to make God known. Paul began his discourse on Mars' hill by referring to one of their inscriptions, "To the unknown God," and declared that it was his purpose to make known this God unto them. By using this as his point of contact he made declarations about God and man which if recognized will tend to the unity of the nations.

1. Declaration concerning God (vv. 24, 25).

(1) The Creator of the universe. (2) Lord of heaven and earth. Being essentially spirit, He demands heart worship, and being Creator He cannot be confined to an earthly temple. (3) His active providence. He declared that in Him we live and move and have our being.

2. Declaration concerning man (vv. 26-31).

(1) We are the offspring of God (v. 28). (2) Nations have their place by God's purpose. (3) Men should seek God. The truth thus declared concerning God and man, if received, will remove national and racial barriers.

IV. The Basis of National Union (John 4:20, 21).

The coming union of nations will not be in forms or symbols, but in spirit. The union of the race must be around Jesus Christ. Being united to Him as head, men are brought into fellowship with God. The Christian church is the supreme unifier of nations (Eph. 4:3-6). If we would hasten world peace, let us with diligence and enthusiasm endeavor to induce men to give allegiance to Jesus Christ.

The Cheerful Heart

God delights in nothing more than in a cheerful heart, careful to perform him service. What parent is it that rejoiceth not to see his child pleasant, in the limits of a filial duty? —Owen Feltham, in Resolves.

HANDY COOKING CENTER AND PASS CLOSET

Convenient Kitchen and Pass Closet.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An arrangement that is very frequently recommended for making the kitchen convenient is to have a pass closet in the connecting wall between the dining room and kitchen. This plan can be made particularly compact when the sink and drainboards are placed at right angles to the pass closet on an outside wall so that a window may be located above the sink for light and ventilation. In the house where the photograph was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, the stove is placed on the connecting wall next to the pass closet. With a minimum of steps, food can be prepared at the sink and put on the stove or in the oven to be cooked. When done, the platters and vegetable dishes can be reached without extra walking about and the hot food dished on the counter and passed at once through the closet to be taken out on the dining room side. The sink is within reach for those foods which must be drained immediately after cooking.

A well-arranged kitchen has all the major equipment placed so that work is routed from one center to another in a logical way and with no unnecessary steps. By thinking carefully how each part of the work is done it is sometimes possible to rearrange one's kitchen equipment and make it more convenient without extensive structural alterations.

CHRISTMAS FUND EASILY PLANNED

Many Begin Early in December to Save for Next Year.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Every fall about the time school reopens the newspapers begin to herald, especially in their advertising columns, the approach of the Christmas season. "Only so-and-so many weeks before Christmas"; "Do your Christmas shopping now"; "Mail early for Christmas," and so on. But none of these captions are of the slightest use in helping us to get the one means of carrying them out—enough money to spend for gifts. The assumption is that one has it.

Of course there are a good many thrifty thousands who have been educated by "Christmas Savings Clubs" and similar movements to tuck away a small sum regularly for fifty weeks of the year. They begin early in December to save for the next year and about Thanksgiving time are rewarded for their regularity by a substantial bank check. There are countless others, however, who spend as they go, and who find themselves unlikely to do much about Christmas unless a financial miracle happens. How are they to find the wherewithal to celebrate the holidays and give remembrance even to their nearest and dearest with Christmas but a few months distant?

In most families the need can be met best in the way other large needs are met, suggests the bureau of home economics. Assuming that one is interested in that type of Christmas giving which is dictated by affection and that therefore the kindliness and thoughtfulness of the remembrance is more important than its intrinsic value, it is possible to fix on a minimum sum which will be necessary. How many weeks are there between now and the last available shopping date? Then figure out: How much regular saving each week will be obligatory to have your minimum sum in hand by that time? Three dollars? Five? Where can you get it?

You have only so much money. If you have this you cannot have that. Your Christmas saving must be the result of doing without something else, of many small economies, sacrifices, and, here and there, better management. Get into the habit of scrutinizing all the activities and purchases of the household. Have the other members of the family do so also. How about the ones who leave lights burning unnecessarily? Or the gas heater running too long? Which ones are careless about their clothes, requiring much pressing and cleaning? What about the cost of foods charged and delivered compared with those on the cash-and-carry plan? Even two cents saved on each article bought from the grocer will mount into dollars in a month. What services have been hired that you could perform yourself? Could you save by doing more sewing? What clothing could be made to serve a little longer by repair or remodeling? How often do you, or others in the family, indulge in unneeded sodas and sundaes or in recreations of temporary satisfaction that could be omitted?

It is in ways like these that small regular savings can be made and money set aside for more important expenditures.

Making English Muffins by Raising With Yeast

Haven't you often wished you knew how to make the delicious English muffins served by tearooms and restaurants? The secret of them is that they are raised with yeast, and if you are accustomed to making light bread and rolls you will have no difficulty in making English muffins. They are baked on a griddle instead of an ordinary pan. They can be eaten hot when freshly baked or split and toasted after they are cold. Use plenty of butter with them. The method in this recipe is given by the bureau of home economics.

1 cup scalded milk, cooled.
½ cup lukewarm water.
1 cake compressed yeast.
4 cups flour
1½ teaspoon salt
2 tbs. butter, melted.

Soften the yeast in the lukewarm water. Make a sponge of the milk, yeast liquid, butter and 1½ cupfuls of the flour. Mix well. Cover, and put in a warm place to rise. When this sponge is very light, add the remaining flour which has been sifted with the salt. Beat this soft dough to develop the gluten in the flour. Again cover, put in a warm place to rise. When double in bulk toss the dough out into a sheet about one inch thick, cut in large rounds, and let them rise for about one hour. Bake slowly on both sides on a lightly greased griddle. After they are cold, split, toast, and butter the muffins and serve hot; or if preferred split and butter them when freshly baked and serve at once.

Chocolate Custard Most Delicious as Dessert

Soft custard flavored with chocolate is a more delicious and richer dessert than the chocolate cornstarch pudding which is the only kind of chocolate pudding many people know. It is not necessary to serve cream of any sort with this custard, but a little whipped cream on top is undoubtedly good. The directions below are from the bureau of home economics.

¾ cup sugar
2 squares unsweetened chocolate.
½ tsp. salt
4 eggs
1 tsp. vanilla

Heat the milk, sugar, chocolate and salt in a double boiler. Beat the eggs slightly and pour some of the hot mixture into the eggs. Mix well and add to the remaining milk. Cook, stirring constantly until thickened. When cool, stir in the vanilla and chill thoroughly. If left overnight the custard becomes thicker. Serve plain or with a little whipped cream over the top.

Palatable Entree

Rice mixed with a cupful of cold tomato or even left-over tomato soup, well seasoned, sprinkled with cheese and buttered bread crumbs and baked till brown, appears as a palatable entree. It can be utilized for croquettes, drop cakes, for a thickening to soup and stews; it may be curried, worked into left-over meat dishes, and even added to ice cream.

Cereal Sponge

Stir into two cupfuls cooked wheat cereal, the beaten white of one egg and one teaspoonful vanilla. The cereal should be thin. If it is thick, add warm milk or water to it before folding in the egg white. Chill in molds. Serve for dessert with a soft custard.

CHAPTER X

—14—

"Fie, Sir Percy!"

Little Madeleine Deseze was very shy. She had been brought by her father to pay her respects to Monseigneur le Prince de Gailles because maman was too ill to accompany her.

"I don't remember much, monseigneur," Madeleine said shyly. "Maman and I were too frightened to notice anything. There was so much shouting and fighting. It was terrible."

"Shall I tell you what happened, little one?" his royal highness was pleased to say.

"Your highness, stemming punch is served in the yellow drawing room," a pleasant voice interposed, with the assurance of privilege.

"Fie, Sir Percy!" exclaimed pretty Lady Alicia Nugget, "would you spoil his highness' story?"

"Rather that than let good punch spoil with cooling, dear lady," Sir Percy retorted with a smile.

"Seize him and garrotte him," his highness broke in with a laugh, "as our gallant hero and his friends seized and garrotted a chief of section, whatever that may be, and his powerful friend from Paris."

"Seize him! Garrotte him!" cried many a pair of charmingly rouged lips.

The next moment Sir Percy Blakeney, that prince of dandies, saw himself fettered by a number of lovely arms, while gay voices chirruping like birds cried, "The story, your highness, we entreat! He cannot interrupt now."

"I have the story from one who knows," his highness resumed with a smile, "and our little friend Madeleine shall hear it. It was thus. Our gallant Scarlet Pimpernel, in one of his happiest disguises as a drover from Aincourt, did, with the aid of two of his followers, egg on a number of young louts into the belief that they were being cheated out of the reward due to them for the capture of the noted English adventurers in their district. Full of enthusiasm and excellent wine, they came on the chief of section, who, I imagine, answers to our chief constable of a county, together with a gentleman from Paris whom some of us have known in the past. Well, the young louts, eager for the fray, and always egged on by the drover from Aincourt, seized and garroted those two worthy gentlemen and, throwing them into the cart, took them along with them. In the forest of Mezieres they came upon the diligence, in which were our little friend Madeleine and her parents. The vehicle was ostensibly guarded by four troopers only, but our Scarlet Pimpernel and his friends had already ascertained that as a matter of fact there were half a dozen more men inside the coach, and that all were armed to the teeth. Altogether too many for three men to tackle; and since the chief motto of our band of heroes is never to attempt where they cannot succeed, stratagem had here to come to the aid of valor."

"And what did they do?" one of the ladies queried breathlessly.

"The drover from Aincourt, our gallant Scarlet Pimpernel," his highness replied, "brought" the cart to a standstill about a quarter of a mile from the crest of the hill where the diligence had come to a halt prepared for an attack. Then he allowed the louts to rush the vehicle, and a general melee ensued. But he and his two followers in the meantime lifted the chief of section and his friend out of the cart and carried them up the road to a point from which their call for help would presently be heard. Here they left them in the ditch, but carefully took the gags from their mouths.

"Immediately the two worthy gentlemen started to shout. Nor could they be blamed, for their plight was indeed pitiable. At first there was so much din in the melee at the top of the hill that their cries could not be heard. And in the meanwhile one of our gallant heroes had crept up through the thicket to the crest of the hill. Then presently the fighting ceased. The enthusiastic captain of gendarmerie heard the cries for help, accompanied by a good deal of shouting and clash of metal carried on by the Scarlet Pimpernel himself and his second follower. Now do you see what was the result of this maneuver?"

"No! No!" the ladies exclaimed. And the men, no less enthusiastic and interested, cried, "Will your highness proceed?"

"The prisoners let out the secret that the chief of section and his friend were lying bound with ropes in a ditch, while one of our heroes—the one who had gone back to the scene of the fight and mingled with the crowd—was able to put in a word that no doubt those two great and worthy citizens were being attacked and murdered by the English spies. The English spies! You have no conception, ladies, what magic lies in those three words for every soldier of the republic. They mean hopes of promotion and of big monetary reward. In an instant the enthusiastic captain had called to some of his men to follow him, to go to the rescue of their chief of section, and incidentally to capture the Scarlet Pimpernel.

"And that was the immediate outcome of the clever stratagem. The captain divided his forces. Three he took with him, two were left to bring the prisoners along, another had been sent as courier with a message. Three only were left to guard the diligence. The gallant Scarlet Pimpernel had made a clever calculation. Already by a small ruse he had rid himself of the cart. Under cover of the darkness his two equally gallant followers had crept underneath the vehicle, while he waited in the thicket for the right time to strike.

"I leave you to guess the rest. The three remaining soldiers taken unawares, the horses unsaddled, the diligence finally driven down the hill by our hero, while inside the coach his two followers were doing their best to assure little Madeleine and her parents that all was well. Soon they abandoned the cumbersome diligence and took to the road. That part of the story is perhaps less exciting though no less heroic. The Scarlet Pimpernel has nineteen followers; it was their task to be on the road, to aid the fugitives with disguises, to help in the great task of reaching the coast in safety.

"And that, ladies and gentlemen, is the story," his highness concluded, rising. "Let us go and drink some of my friend Blakeney's excellent punch. But after we have drunk our toast for the king, let us raise our glasses to our national hero, the Scarlet Pimpernel."

With a courtly bow and a smile he offered his arm to Marguerite Blakeney who, with a glistening tear in her beautiful eyes, gave his highness a glance of gratitude.

"Are you coming, Blakeney?" the prince said with a merry laugh. "You must drink our toast, too, remember. To the gallant Scarlet Pimpernel!"

All the ladies laughed, partly with gaiety, but also with excitement. Then with one accord they cried, "Come and drink, Sir Percy, to the gallant Scarlet Pimpernel."

"I'll come, dear ladies," Sir Percy said with a sigh, "since his highness commands, but you'll forgive me if I cannot drink to that demmed, elusive shadow."

Laughing still, the ladies cried, "Fie, Sir Percy! Jealous again?"

And little Madeleine, with her great childish gaze fixed upon the handsome English gentleman, cried in her piping little voice "Fie, Sir Percy!"

Severe Tests Prove Cricket Hard to Kill

Dr. Frank E. Lutz, curator of insects at the American Museum of Natural History, and Alfred L. Loomis, a physicist, put a cricket through a series of physical experiments that would have killed most creatures, but the little fellow survived the tests and seemed to chirp for more, the New York World tells us.

Its first experience was in a jar from which the air was rapidly exhausted until the pressure was equal to an altitude of ten miles above sea level. At first the insect was quiet, but in a few minutes it began to clean its hind legs. Then the tube to the jar was cut, permitting an instantaneous drop to the pressure of the outside air.

"The cricket," says Doctor Lutz, "merely gave a little twitch as though some one had frightened it a bit."

The insect's next adventure was with compressed air. It was put into a tank analogous to caissons used in tunnel building. The pressure was quickly raised and then as suddenly reduced, a procedure no human being could have survived. But the valiant cricket paid less attention to these adventures than to the previous ones.

The following day Gryllus, as scientists call the cricket, was treated to a merry-go-round ride in a centrifuge that whirled at 1,200 revolutions a minute for ten minutes. When the machine stopped the cricket shook itself and chirped as if in thanks for the buggy ride.

Juror Kept Tab

In a trial at Cincinnati, one of the jurors kept track of the evidence with toothpicks. When the defense scored a point he would put a toothpick in one pocket and when the state scored a point he would put a toothpick in another pocket. There were so many toothpicks in the second pocket that this juror voted for conviction at once.

"OLD SETTIN' HEN" IN LOSING RACE

Incubators on Farm Hatch 24 Per Cent of Chicks.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The fluffy old mother hen continues to lose out in the race with the mechanical substitutes, but she is still on the job, according to the reports sent to the United States Department of Agriculture by the crop correspondents of the bureau of agricultural economics. About 43 per cent of all chickens raised are still hatched under hens, the reports indicate. Incubators on the farm hatch about 24 per cent of the chickens raised, and eggs supplied by farmers and hatched for a fee amount to about 10 per cent. Commerical hatcheries now hatch about 23 per cent of the annual baby chicks crop.

A distinct difference is evident when regional areas are compared. In the South Atlantic states from Virginia to Florida and in the South Central states, the hen holds her own and hatches about two-thirds of the chicks as compared with all others. Rhode Island with only 14 per cent of hen-hatched chicks is the lowest in this respect, and in no other states is the percentage lower than 20. The North Atlantic and the Western states buy the largest proportion of baby chicks, 45 per cent and 41 per cent, respectively. Farm hatching of chicks in incubators is most popular in the North Central states, more than 30 per cent being reported from this source. Missouri and Kansas each with 40 per cent of their chicks hatched in incubators on the farms are high in this group.

Moist Mashes Favored for Keeping Up Weight

Moist mash is a means of keeping up the body weight of the pullets and hens. Noon is the best time to feed the moist mash in the winter. In feeding the moist mash put it in troughs well spread out so that all of the hens can eat readily and don't feed more than they can clean up in from 15 to 25 minutes. Any moist mash remaining in the trough should be removed. In mixing the moist mash use liquid skim milk or buttermilk if available; if not, warm water may be used, or if fresh meat is cooked for the hens, the liquid should be saved and used in making the moist mash. In any case, do not feed a cold moist mash to the flock, as they do not eat it as readily and what they do eat will more or less chill the birds, and by so doing take considerable of their energy to warm them up again, so be sure to have the moist mash warm before feeding.

Low Temperature Very Essential in Storing

When an egg is first laid it contains no air cell. As the contents of the egg cools and evaporation starts, the air cell develops. This air cell continues to grow larger as the egg grows older, due to evaporation of moisture through the porous shell. An egg that is held in a warm room will show a larger air cell because the heat aids in bringing about more rapid evaporation. This makes the air cell a valuable aid in determining the quality of the egg. An egg which is a month old will not show much increase in the size of the air cell, if stored in a cool place; neither will its quality deteriorate greatly if properly stored. This is the reason why a low temperature is essential in storing eggs.

Buying Pullets

Buyers of pullets should know that age is not as important as weight and quality in buying pullets. In a flock of pullets of the same age and breeding, there will be three distinct grades of birds. In buying pullets at a flat rate it pays to weigh at least part of the birds and give them all a health inspection. In selling pullets it pays to know something about their cost of production. There are too many pullets sold for $1 each that cost approximately $1.20 each to produce.

No Best Breed

There is no best breed of chickens for laying or meat. There are a number of breeds that have been bred for egg production and any one of these will make a good record if they are fed and cared for properly. There are strains of Barred Rocks that have been bred for high production as well as Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds and others. Be sure, in buying eggs of any of these breeds, that they come from high producing stock and from reliable dealers.

Fattening Ration

A useful fattening ration recommended by the Purdue station consists of 20 pounds of yellow cornmeal, 10 pounds of ground oats and 10 pounds of flour middlings, mixed with 80 pounds of buttermilk or skim milk. The mixture is allowed to stand 24 hours before using, the feed supply being prepared a day ahead of time throughout the fattening period. The poultry is confined in crates and given as much twice each day as the birds will clean up in about half an hour.

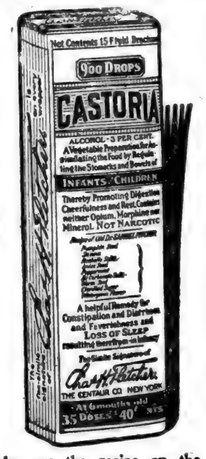
An Ailing CHILD



Are you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish condition, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the recipe on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Needless Suffering

The next time a headache makes you stay at home—

Or some other ache or pain prevents your keeping an engagement—

Remember Bayer Aspirin! For there is scarcely any pain it cannot relieve, and relieve promptly.

These tablets give real relief, or millions would not continue to take them. They are quite harmless, or the medical profession would not constantly prescribe them.

Don't be a martyr to unnecessary pain. To colds that might so easily be checked; to neuritis, neuralgia; to those pains peculiar to women; or any suffering for which Bayer Aspirin is such an effective antidote.

For your own protection, buy the genuine. Bayer is safe. It's always the same. It never depresses the heart, so use it as often as needed; but the cause of any pain can be treated only by a doctor.

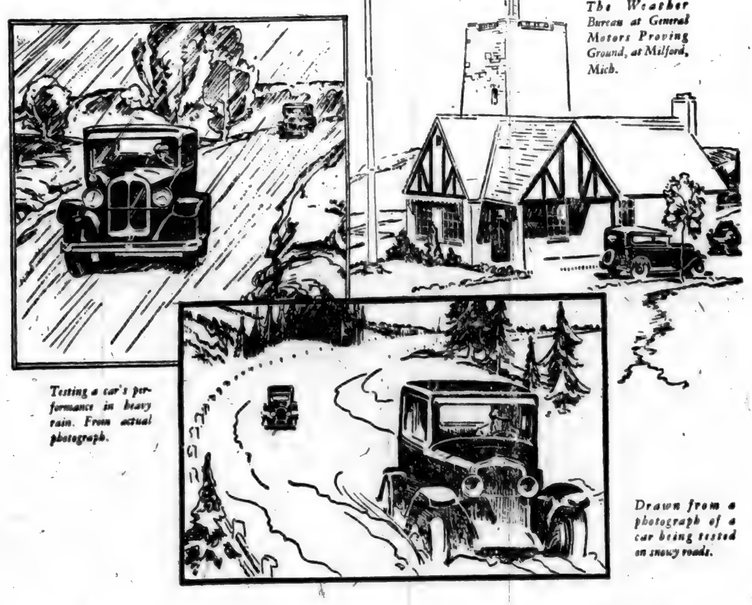
"What! A weather bureau?"



The Weather Bureau at General Motors Proving Ground, at Milford, Mich.

Testing a car's performance in heavy rain. From actual photograph.

Drawn from a photograph of a car being tested on snowy roads.

VISITORS to General Motors' 1268-acre Proving Ground marvel at the sight of a complete weather bureau and ask what it is for.

The answer is that in the testing of cars every possible factor that might affect a car's performance is considered by General Motors' engineers.

So precise are some of the tests that even the difference between a sunny day and a partly cloudy day—or between a north breeze and a south breeze—is considered.

With each day's record of the mechanical tests applied to a car on the roads and hills of the Proving Ground is included a report of the exact weather conditions prevailing. The engineers then can know how weather affects performance, and can have a comparable record so that every car tested is given an equal opportunity to prove itself under exactly the same conditions.

Advance models of all the cars listed below were proved at the Proving Ground before they were introduced to the public. Read about them; then clip and send the coupon.

"A car for every purse and purpose"

CHEVROLET. 7 models. $525—$695. A six in the price range of the four. Smooth, powerful 6-cylinder valve-in-head engine. Beautiful Fisher Bodies. Also sedan delivery. Light delivery chassis. 1½ ton chassis and 1½ ton chassis with cab, both with four speeds forward.

DRIVES CAR INTO B. & O. FAST TRAIN

Herman Green, a farmer residing four and a half miles east of Auburn, was seriously injured Saturday morning about 10 o'clock when his automobile struck west bound passenger train No. 7 on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

The accident happened at a private crossing at Mr. Green's farm as he was about to start for Auburn.

Mr. Green sustained serious scalp injuries and is paralyzed on the left side due, it was said, at the Sacred Heart hospital at Garrett, where the injured man was taken, from a blood clot on the brain.

Mr. Green had to drive up a small hill to reach the railroad tracks, but the view is clear in both directions and it is a mystery why he did not see the speeding train.

The car driven by Mr. Green was completely torn to pieces. Every car on the train struck the Green automobile, it was reported.

Neither the engineer or fireman was aware until the train reached the farm of William G. Morr, former DeKalb county sheriff, a mile and a quarter west of the scene of the accident, that an automobile had been struck.

When informed by some one on the train, it was backed up and the injured man was placed on a cot by the train crew and Mr. Morr and he was taken to Garrett.

Mr. Green before moving to the farm resided in Auburn on South Cedar street. He conducted a livery and sales stable for many years on Cedar street.

Is Your Child Handicapped?

Does your child's nose run or is it sore? Does the child snuffle? Are the eyes red? Are there fever sores or eczema around the nose and mouth? Does the child seem dull? Does it stand and look at you with open mouth? Does it put its hands to its head as though it had earache? Does it take cold easily? Does the child sleep with its mouth open? Does it snore? If the answer to any of these is Yes, ask the doctor if the child has adenoids or large tonsils.

TONSILS. Tonsils often become diseased and stick out into the throat. Sometimes diseased tonsils do not get any larger but contain little cups filled with pus. Diseased tonsils hold poisonous germs which may cause throat trouble or may be carried to other parts of the body and cause serious sickness.

LARGE GLANDS. Often poison gathers in the nose, throat or ears. The glands of the neck try to carry this poison away. This overwork makes the glands enlarge and lumps often form.

OTHER DISEASES. Diseased tonsils and adenoids hold poisonous germs. We said that these germs are frequently carried to other parts of the body and cause sickness. Rheumatism and heart disease often come in this way. These germs also cause stomach, bowel or lung diseases. A child with adenoids and diseased tonsils can get diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough very easily. Such a child may have the disease worse than a child who has had adenoids and diseased tonsils removed.

Cold Weather Driving-Hard Starting are Synonymous:

It is true that an engine does not start as easily in Winter as in Summer, but a little more care on part of the owner will go a long way toward minimizing the difficulty, Chevrolet Motor Company engineers point out. Since the inception of the Chevrolet car more than eighteen years ago, company engineers have been applying themselves to the problem of easier starting. Making use of the "cold room" facilities of the General Motors Proving Ground, Chevrolet technical men have been attacking the "cold motor" problem for many years. In considering the case of the car that is difficult to start in cold weather, Chevrolet engineers call attention first to the rather obvious fact that an engine in good condition will peform all its functions, including starting, more satisfactorily than one that is out of adjustment.

The principal parts which have a direct bearing on the starting of an engine are: Battery, starting motor, carburetor, spark plugs, ignition system and valves. As the efficiency of the battery is materially reduced in cold weather, it should be given great consideration. If the electrical system is weak, complete combustion cannot be obtained, therefore, before the start of winter, it is good preventive insurance to have some reputable electrical service station check over the battery, spark plugs and entire ignition system. The starting motor very seldom causes trouble. The carburetor must be adjusted properly for the winter and choke and throttle controls connected properly. The spark plugs are equipped with two electrodes set in such a manner that the electric current must jump across a small gap from one to the other. In making this jump, a spark occurs. It is this spark that ignites the mixture of gasoline and air in the combustion chamber of the cylinder. The size of the gap between the electrodes affects the type of spark produced. It is, therefore, important that this gap should be inspected for proper adjustment.

ST. JOE HIGH LOSES TO BUTLER

In a fast and well-played basket-ball tilt the game lads of St. Joe High School bowed before a superior team from Butler Saturday night by the score of 32–14.

During the first half the local boys were unable to connect from the field and missed seven tries at the free throw lane and were behind 12–0 as the half ended. In the second half they partially hit their stride and scored 14 points to Butler's 18.

The game was much closer and far more interesting than the score indicates as it was decidedly an off night for our boys.

On Friday night the local girl's and boy's teams travelled to Avilla where they were able to score a double victory. The girls triumphed by the score of 46–18 in their first game of the season and the boys by the score of 30–17. The girls game was featured by the uncanny ability of Helen Storer to hit the basket and the boys game was featured by especially close guarding. Avilla being able to connect for four field goals throughout the game.

On Friday night the local boys will clash with the highly touted Pleasant Lake outfit at St. Joe. The boys are out for revenge and a good game is assured.

CAPTAIN STUMP TALKS ON THE ARMSTICE

The second meeting of the P. T. A. was held in the high school gym Monday evening of this week. A large assemblage was present to hear the excellent program prepared for them.

The program was opened by Donald Kinsey's orchestra of this place, the number was pleasing to all. This was followed by a course of community singing led by C. A. Woodcox. The selections chosen by Mr. Woodcox were well fitted for the occasion, consisting as they did, of the old favorite tune boxer, songs devoted to religion, country and home. It is around these three subjects that mankind manifest the greatest interests.

Invocation by Rev. G. D. Stoll followed community singing.

The musical number given by grades 3 and 4 of the public school, under the supervision of Miss Martha Miser, teacher, was both amusing and cleverly given, it was divided into two parts, one appropriately represented Thanksgiving, the other a clever little home playlet rendered in song.

They received and responded to an encore.

Captain Walter Stump of Auburn, was the speaker of the evening and gave a very interesting talk on "The Armistice." "Had Germany won," what today might be our status in the affairs of nations? was one of the questions for our consideration.

Step by step, Capt. Stump delineated the high spots, the critical periods which marked the progress of the allies in their participation in this, the greatest war in all the world's history. Never before have so many men faced each other in bitter conflict. Neither faction, expected the war to end when it did, both sides were surprised. Capt. Stump is a forceful speaker and held the attention of his audience to the end.

"My Wild Irish Rose" was chosen by the orchestra and was exceptionally pleasing, the rendering of this number showed careful training on the part of all. Joe Woodcox furnished the vocal work in this number in his usual good manner. This drew forth a well deserved encore.

Derwood Ridgway gave a most excellent interpretation of Edgar Guest's, "It takes a heap of livin' to make a home."

This was the concluding number of the program. A business session followed in which the minutes of last meeting were read by Cleota Morr. Ed Storer reported 74 membeships to P. T. A. to date, and Mrs. Thornton proposed that members write suggestions, which, in their opinion, would enhance the interest in P. T. A. programs.

President Morr then dismissed the audience.

BRINKER FINED $500, CHANGED PLEA TO GUILTY

Lum C. Brinker, 49, in whose farm on the old John Coen farm, northwest of Hicksville, state prohibition agents found 80 gallons of alcohol on October 26, Saturday morning was fined $500 and costs by Common Pleas Judge Fred L. Hay, at Defiance.

Attorney L. E. Griffin of Hicksville, appeared before Judge Hay and in behalf of his client changed a plea of not guilty entered the evening of October 26 to guilty.

Brinker was charged with possession. The raid was made by State Agents G. A. Baynham and B. F. Howard accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Cloyd King.

OBITUARY

Eli A. Fales, son of Rebecca White Fales and Henry H. Fales, was born on March 1, 1844, on what is now the Leighty Orchard Farm. When he was about two years old he came to the little town of Spencerville, in and near which he has spent his entire life with the exception of four years spent in the West. Being one of the oldest residents in the county he has seen many changes take place.

In 1864 he was married to Margaret S. Johnson, who departed this life eight years ago.

He is survived by one brother, Thomas Fales of Snohomish, Washington; two daughters, Mrs. Rosa Widdefield of Jackson Center, and Mrs. Isa Kimes of Spencerville; four grandchildren and five great grandchildren.

Since the death of his wife he made his home with his daughters.

He passed from this life suddenly, quietly, and peacefully at the home of Mrs. Isa Kimes on Saturday evening, November 9th, at the age of 85 years, 8 months and 9 days.

He was a member of the Spencerville Lutheran Church, where the funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon, the pastor, Rev. Geo. D. Stoll, officiating. Interment was made in White City Cemetery.

Obviously the spark plugs should be cleaned; and the terminals of the spark plug wires firmly attached. If the plugs have been in use 10,000 miles they should be replaced. The ignition system, including all wiring and terminals should be checked at the beginning of winter particular attention beingpaid to the distributor timing and to condition of the contact points. If the valves do not seat properly, a leakage of compression occurs resulting in incomplete combustion which hinders starting and also tends to foul the spark plugs. At-tention to these suggestions will eliminate your starting troubles this winter and cut down the wear and tear on your nerves as well, according to the Chevrolet engineering division.

Words! Words! Words!

We just happened to look in a little dictionary and chanced upon the definition of a clock. A clock, it says, is a mechanical timepiece not adapted for the pocket. Following out that idea of defining things, you could say that an ocean liner is a boat not adapted for sailing in the bathtub; that a whale is a fish not adapted for packing in sardine cans, and a redwood tree is a vegetable not adapted for planting in window boxes.—American Boy.

Lesson for November 17

LIVING WITH PEOPLE OF OTHER RACES

LESSON TEXT—Acts 10:9-15, 30-35; Gal. 3:28, 29; Ruth 1:1-18; John 4:5-10; Rom. 1:14.

GOLDEN TEXT—Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Friends of Many Races.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Friends of Many Races.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Treating Those of Other Races as We Should Like to Be Treated.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Contribution of Various Racial Groups to a Common National Life.

I. God Is No Respecter of Persons (Acts 10:34).

The approach to the heart of this lesson is through the Golden Text. Paul declared on Mars' hill, "God hath made of one blood all the nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth" (Acts 17:26).

II. Examples of Racial Harmony.

1. Ruth, the Moabitess (Ruth 1:1-18).

In the days of the Judges, because of famine in Judah, Elimelech and his family went to Moab to find subsistence. While there his two sons married Moabitish women. Not long after this, the father and the sons died, leaving three desolate widows. Learning that the famine was over, Naomi decided to return. Ruth insisted upon going with her and her determination was expressed in such wonderful words that they have become classic (Ruth 1:16, 17). She renounced her country and people in order to be identified with the people of the living God. In this we have an example of two very dissimilar people united as one.

2. The woman of Samaria (John 4:5-10).

This woman was not only of a despised people, but of a disreputable character. But when the light of God entered her soul she became a witness to her people of Christ, and the leader of a movement which prepared the way for the revival at the hands of Philip a few years later. That which removed the barrier from between the Jews and Samaritans was the personal knowledge of Jesus Christ.

3. Cornelius, the Roman soldier (Acts 10:9-15, 30-35).

The Jews hated the Romans because they were under bondage to them. Peter, the head of the apostolic group, was a Jew of strong prejudice. The time had now come for the removal of the wall of partition between the Jews and the Gentiles. To do this God chose a high-grade and influential Gentile to make the transition. Cornelius was a devout man, though not saved.

In removing this wall, two visions were given:

(1) To Cornelius (Acts 10:3, 8). While engaged in prayer, an angel from God announced to him that his prayers and alms had come before God as a memorial, and instructed him to send to Joppa for Peter, who would tell him what to do.

(2) To Peter (Acts 10:9-16). In his vision Peter saw a certain vessel containing clean and unclean animals, let down from heaven and heard the command, "Rise, Peter, kill and eat." Against Peter's protest God said, "What God hath cleansed, call thou not common." This vessel let down from heaven and taken back again indicated that both Jews and Gentiles were accepted on high. The spirit of God bade Peter to go with the messengers of Cornelius. Upon arrival, Peter explained to Cornelius how God had removed his Jewish prejudice and then, being assured that they were ready to hear the message from God, he preached Jesus Christ to them. In his sermon to Cornelius, he set forth:

a. The basis of salvation—the death of Christ.

b. The scope of salvation—whosoever believeth on Him.

c. The method of appropriation of this salvation—faith in Christ.

In endorsement of this message by Peter, the Holy Spirit was poured out and as the gospel now was reaching beyond the Jews, there was a new Pentecost.

III. All One in Christ Jesus (Gal. 3:28, 29).

In Christ all class and racial distinctions are lost. Let those who would hasten the period of racial good will bestir themselves to the task of preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ—the only means of uniting the various branches of the race.

Those Who Are Gone

Those who are gone, you have. Those who departed loving you, love you still; and you love them always. . . . They are only gone into the next room; and you will presently get up and follow them.—Thackeray.

According as Thy Faith

Art thou a beggar at God's door? Be sure thou gettest a great bowl, for as thy bowl is, so shall be thy mess. According as thy faith, saith He, be it unto you.—John Bunyan.

ONLY A DOCTOR KNOWS WHAT A LAXATIVE SHOULD BE

Danger lies in careless selection of laxatives! By taking the first thing that comes to mind when bad breath, headaches, dizziness, nausea, biliousness, gas on stomach and bowels, lack of appetite or energy warns of constipation, you risk forming the laxative habit.

Depend on a doctor's judgment in choosing your laxative. Here's one made from the prescription of a specialist in bowel and stomach disorders. Its originator tried it in thousands of cases; found it safe for women, children and old folks; thoroughly effective for the most robust man. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is the world's most popular laxative. It is composed of fresh herbs and other pure ingredients. You can get it, in generous bottles and ready for use, at any drugstore.

Heron Made Short Circuit

A farm community near Plymouth, Wis., was without electricity all of one night when a heron perched on a 2,300-volt power line and its tail came in contact with an adjoining wire. The resulting short circuit put out the lights in the surrounding farm homes.

MANY SCHOOL CHILDREN ARE SICKLY

Mothers, for your own comfort and the welfare of your children, you should never be without a box of Mother Gray's Sweet Powders for children for use throughout the season. They Break up Colds, Regulate the Bowels, Relieve Feverishness, Constipation, Teething Disorders, Headache and Stomach Troubles.

TRADE MARK DON'T ACCEPT ANY SUBSTITUTE

Used by Mothers for over 30 years. Are pleasant to take—children like them. All Drug stores. For Free trial package address. THE MOTHER GRAY CO., Le Roy, N. Y.

Poor Hiding Place

According to an A. P. dispatch from St. Louis to the San Francisco Chronicle, a citizen of that city was tackling the job of searching through 14,000 discarded telephone directories to see if he could find checks and currency totaling $1,355, which he had tucked away in his directory for safe keeping. A new directory had been delivered at his home and his old book with 13,999 others had been dumped into a freight car for shipment to a Chicago paper house.

Done!

Recently Richard was elected president of his class at school. The next day he presided at the first meeting. After all business had been transacted, he said:

"I don't know how to close this meeting, but its closed, anyhow."

It is estimated that the United States will have a population of 180,000,000 or even 200,000,000 by the year A. D. 2000.

Mother and Daughter Praise Vegetable Compound

Johnson City, N. Y. —"My daughter was only 20 years old, but for two years she worked in misery. She was all run-down, nervous, had aches and pains and no appetite. I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with good results so she decided to try it. Before she had taken two bottles her appetite was better, she was more cheerful and was able to work. I cannot praise your medicine too highly. It is wonderful for mothers and for daughters. It's surely a friend in need."—Mrs. L. E. HALL, 323 Floral Avenue, Johnson City, N. Y.

"There are two whole columns on the disarmament conference—all figures, and quotations, and simply tremendous big words," said Ginger Ella in a discouraged tone. "Oh, here's a little bit of a column about the Elks' May day fete and beauty pageant." She settled herself to read with a smug little flounce of eagerness.

"You may skip that," said her father. "We know all about the beauty pageant."

His daughter sighed resignedly. "I suppose you want Lloyd George and the Communists, although it does not look very churchy to me."

She read patiently, in a low clear voice, paragraph after paragraph, sitting on the couch beside the reading lamp, little, eager and slim—with eyes that just would wander, despite her best and most daughterly intentions, from the stupid newsprint to the simply fascinating goings-on in the opposite corner of the wide room, where Marjory, the pretty twin, lovelier than any picture, stood on a low stool, like a goddess lifted up, with her bevy of worshipers at her feet, while down on their knees before her, were Miriam, the plainy twin, and Helen, who was quite old and engaged to be married, and Miss Jenkins—clipping stray threads here and there, tucking, patting and pulling, in a vain endeavor to add greater charm to her girlish beauty.

But although Ginger's eyes would wander, the memory of her father sitting still and limp, so patient, in the big chair at her side, his kind eyes closely bandaged, quickly brought her own straying orbs back to the onerous news. By rights, it was Miriam's job to read the papers to her father. But Miriam, being a twin to Marjory, would naturally wish to assist in preparing her to win the Elks' club beauty prize.

"'And this in spite of the frank warning of President Coolidge that the United States will regard any such move with extreme disfavor,'" finished Ginger, with a flourish. "Here's a paragraph on Mussolini and God. In my opinion it would look a lot smarter if you took that lace off the shoulders entirely. Oh, excuse me, father, I'm so sorry. Here's a paragraph on Mellon cutting the tax melon—three hundred billions, no millions—Well, it doesn't interest us either way. Oh, here's a lovely write-up of the buffet supper that is to be served at the Elks' club fete at ten o'clock—bouillon, chicken sandwiches, tomato aspic—"

Reverend Mr. Tolliver smiled indulgently. He might not see, but what father but could feel the wandering eyes and the truant thoughts of a sixteen-year-old daughter on the eve of a beauty pageant.

"Put the paper up now, Ellen. I'm full of news. Suppose you play little bright-eyes for me, instead, and tell me what is going on over there, with all that snipping of scissors, and oh-ing and ah-ing."

"Oh, father!" Ginger doubled herself up rapturously, enfolding both her slim knees in her arms. "Oh, father, it is glorious! Marjory—honestly, father, Marjory is so pretty it doesn't seem possible. Miss Jenkins is down on the floor with five pins in her mouth, and her dress pulled up over her knees to keep from soiling it—"

Miss Jenkins, with guilty haste, covered the offending members.

"They weren't her best ones—they had lisle tops. But I saw a silk ruffle, just the same. You're really missing quite a lot, you know," continued Ginger wickedly. "You'd better take those five pins out of your mouth, Jenky dear, if you're going to gasp like that."

Only Ellen dared to call the sedate spinster "Jenky," and even she did it only in her more irrepressible moments, when she was most thoroughly a Ginger Ella. It was sixteen years ago, at the birth of this same Ellen, that Miss Jenkins had first come into intimate contact with the parsonage household, then in another pastorate. And upon their later transference to other charges, she had arranged her small matters and followed after them, living her own life, keeping her own small home, teaching in the primary schools for a livelihood, but keeping in close and helpful touch with the Tolliver family, to which, in its entirety, she had given all the stored-up love of her lonely heart. With Helen and with the twins, she remained to the end firm and unyielding. But she was from the beginning surprisingly pliable in the hands of the wheedlesome Ellen.

"Well," Ginger went on, "she is wearing Helen's engagement ring, and Miss Jenkins' old gold chain. Eddy's mother gave her a perfectly spiffy lace handkerchief, and she has on my silk-to-the-top stockings that Mrs. Morris gave me."

For five days, the modest Tolliver household had simply fermented with excitement over the Elks' May day fete and beauty pageant. The Tolliver, without exception, knew that Marjory was absolutely the prettiest thing in the Middle West. Many other residents of Red Thrush, Iowa, realized it also. But just prettiness was not enough to win this beauty prize. One required an admission ticket. The Elks' club was staging the event for the benefit of its various charities, and the admission was two dollars and a half—including favors for the ladies, an elaborate buffet supper at ten o'clock, and participation in the beauty pageant. In spite of their confidence in Marjory's outstanding beauty, two dollars and a half for admission to a May day fete did not fall within the scope of a parsonage budget.

But the good fairy who watches over youthful beauty did not fail them.

On the twenty-fifth day of April, Eddy Jackson walked up the narrow flagstone path to the parsonage. Marjory was lying in the hammock, fast asleep, her magazine fallen to the floor at her side. Eddy Jackson, coming thus upon beauty unaware, was stricken momentarily dumb in its presence, and stared at her in such rapt awe that Marjory awakened in some confusion.

"Gee, Margie, but you're easy to look at," he said admiringly. "Why don't you go after the Elks' prize? It's fifty dollars in gold. And there's not a girl in Iowa can walk in the same block with you. Why, if I was a judge, I wouldn't let anybody else enter the same contest with you. Go on, try it, bet you a dollar on it, and you can pay me out of the beauty prize."

"Heavens, Eddy, what would the members say if father sailed down to the Elks' club to enter his daughter in the beauty pageant?"

Eddy squared his shoulders. "All right, I'll do it myself. You and I'll go. I'll get the tickets right now." And he turned himself about and marched straight down the flagstone path, entirely forgetting that he had come with a message from his mother.

In a household whose financial limits were as circumscribed as those of the parsonage, the Elks' club beauty pageant was an event of no mean import. The prize itself was fifty dollars in gold, and there were additional trophies.

Even Mr. Tolliver, despite his seeming indifference, warmed slightly to the charm of fifty dollars in gold.

Marjory slowly revolved for final approval.

"There—it is perfect—another touch would be too much."

Reverend Mr. Tolliver stood up, and put out his hand. "Come here, Margie. Let me see if my pretty twin is as pretty as I think."

She crossed to him quickly, a little pain rising in the white throat with the thought of his helplessness, quick mist clouding the lovely eyes. His hand gently followed the gold lace at her shoulder, fondled the soft curve of her hair, fingered the slender chain.

"It is not just prettiness, my child," he said affectionately. "You are fragrant, and wholesome, and sweet. That is your beauty. You don't need artificial adorning. Your loveliness is like a flower's—unaffected, unassumed, just born there."

Marjory, freed from his hand, moved sinuously about before the mirrors, preening herself pleasantly to their flattering reflections, and to the more flattering eyes of her sisters.

Ginger giggled. "Father, you ought to see her. Really you ought. She is so unaffected right now—just like a flower turning to the sun."

The low siren of a motor sounded outside. A flash of light leaped to Marjory's eyes, a quick flush to her cheeks.

"It's Eddy," she whispered. "Sit down everybody, and look natural. Don't stand about—gaping—"

Suiting action to her words, Marjory dropped gracefully into a chair and toyed with the golden chain with an air of utmost indifference. The others, quickly, with more or less of grace, draped themselves about the room. Ginger running her back to them all and to the door, burying herself in the details of the buffet supper.

"You see, father," she hissed scornfully. "You see? The whole family is man-mad, simply man-mad. Except you and me. Disgusting, that's what it is, simply disgusting. Natural as a flower—humph! You don't see the flowers flying off their stalks when a boy-friend bumble bee breezes in."

"Lo everybody," called Eddy's pleasant voice from the piazza. "Door's open—I'm coming in. Oh, good evening, Mr. Tolliver, how are you? Good evening, Miss Jenkins. Gee, Marge, I pity the judges. I only hope they live to deliver the prize."

"Why, Eddy, how nice you look," said Helen warmly.

"Yes, thanks, I suppose I do. The white carnation was mother's idea, and I feel just like a banker. She says it is not often a mere hay rube farmer has a chance to step out with a Blue Ribbon, so she dolled me up. Hello, Ginger."

Ginger had not so much as lifted her eyes from the paper.

"Oh, hello, Eddy," she said coldly. But this coldness on her part was merely assumed on principle, to show her disgust for the man-madness with which her sisters were afflicted. In her heart, she was fond of Eddy Jackson.

"Oh, you're all right, are you? That's a relief. I thought you'd been suddenly struck deaf, dumb and—er uh—" He floundered awkwardly away from the tender subject of blindness.

"It must be time to start," said Helen, her eyes on the clock. She had told Professor Langley not to come until eight-thirty—a late hour for callers in Red Thrush, but she was determined to do her sisterly duty to Marjory before abandoning herself to personal pleasure.

"Yes, I think it is," agreed Eddy. "It seems they check the beauties at the door, at eight, I think. I should have brought a truck to carry home the prizes, but—"

"Oh, nonsense," laughed Marjory. "You know I haven't a chance in the world, against all those lovely girls, and all those lovely gowns—"

"Huh," sniffed Ginger scornfully, under her breath. "You'd never think we'd spent that fifty dollars—in our minds—five days ago."

The girls followed them to the door as they went out, smiling admiration at Marjory—admiration, encouragement and hope.

"Shall I bring you a sandwich in my pocket, Ginger? Or would you rather have an aspic?" Eddy called to her.

Ginger ignored him.

The three girls stood together in the doorway until, with a last farewell of the siren, the car disappeared down the quiet shady street.

"A nice boy," said Helen quietly.

But with a full view of the living room before her, her quietness vanished. "This place is a sight," she said briskly. "Ginger, get the broom, and dust up that rug. Miriam, put away the thread and things."

"But what difference—this time of night—" protested Ginger.

"Horace will be here in ten minutes. Now straighten up for me, won't you, while I run up and straighten myself?"

"Most disgusting thing I ever saw. Man-mad. Simply man-mad. The whole gang of them. She doesn't care if you sit in a dusty chair, father—she doesn't care if Miss Jenkins has to look at a messy table and an untidy rug—she doesn't care if Miriam and I have to associate with her when her nose is shiny, but a man! Oh, no!"

Name "Peony" Traced to Legend of Mythology

In the days of the Greek gods and goddesses, the peony first came to the world's attention. Leto, Apollo's mother, was the one to introduce it. Apollo was known as the god of healing and his son, Aesculapius, was the god of medicine.

It seems that a pupil of Aesculapius named Paeon was the physician of the gods, and to him Leto first gave the plant which he employed to cure Pluto of a wound received at the hands of Hercules during the Trojan war.

The fact that his pupil could surpass him in effecting such a cure made Aesculapius angry, with the result he attempted to kill Paeon, but Pluto, indebted to Paeon for his own life, rescued the physician of Mount Olympus from death by changing him into the plant that had saved his life. Until this day that plant bears Paeon's name and is known to us as the peony.

The history of the peony in China and Japan is of a sentimental nature. Fittingly enough, the words "Sho Yo," meaning "Most Beautiful," were applied to the herbaceous peony, while the tree peony held sway as the "King of Flowers."—Kansas City Star.

Has Its Uses

"The appendix is the only part of the human body that is of no use," says a writer. For the medical profession, however, it is a very profitable side-line.

WHITE FUR GIVES CHIC NOTE; FITTED BODICE A NECESSITY

A NEW discovery—the effectiveness of dainty white fur used in a slimming way to relieve the somberness of all-black. It is a note of chic resounding through all fashiondom this season.

The black frock with accents of white fur is as successfully launched as an evening item as it is for daytime wear, and vice versa. It is difficult to conceive of anything so fetching, so strictly new as an afternoon gown of black wool crepe, with youthful turnover round collar, flaring cuffs and narrow belt of fine fabric-like white caracul. By the way, the belt was worn very high with this costume, defining the new waistline.

White Fur Relieves Somberness of Black.

However, this stunning white caracul-trimmed dress is no more arresting than is the swanky ensemble which Ruth Elder, she of flying and Hollywood fame, wears in the picture above. Black broadcloth, of course, is the material used for this coat and one-piece dress ensemble, for broadcloth answers the fabric call of the hour—that is for dressy modes as opposed to sports. Yet the real thrill is not a matter of broadcloth, but rather of fur—fabriclike white ermine which lines the cascade which travels up and down the front of this frock, and also forms its collar.

There are other ways of touching up one's black costume with white fur which are equally as effective and unique, too, for that matter. A black tweed jacket-and-skirt suit, for example, which has a waistcoat tailored of shaved white caracul, or a surplice dress which fastens to one side with a bow of white ermine. The boutonniere of ermine tails is a smart accessory item this season—looks wonderfully clever worn with a black velvet street ensemble, or posing on the shoulder of milady's formal decollette black velvet evening gown.

Fitted effects and lengthened hemlines are not the only revolutionary details converts to the new style cult are asked to accept. There's buttoned-up-and-down-the-front basques for instance, such as shown in the lower picture, that are decidedly reminiscent of the styles of our ancestresses who posed so sedately for the daguerrotypes we now treasure. The tiered skirt of this frock emphasizes a very new hemline which dips at the back. In daytime gowns this "dip" is rather conservative, but in evening fashions it develops into trains.

The manner in which the fitted effect is achieved through fine shirring is a point of special importance, for the majority of new bodices and princess lines reveal shirring somewhere in their make-up.

The dignity of this afternoon frock is upheld, for mind you, styles are extremely dignified this season, in that it is made of a very handsome brown moire. The fact that moire is accounted is one of the most fashionable fabrics of the immediate moment for both daytime and evening wear, tunes in with the cult of the mode for styles tending to formality, and elegance, rather than the flippant flapperish styles.

Many of the loveliest party frocks are made of moire in pastel shades, their skirts often lengthened to extremes with wide hems of maline or coarse net in accurately matched colorings. As a rule when all is said and done these moire dine and dance frocks look the part of classic simplicity, but an analysis of the intricate circular cuts, and set-in panels together with bodices fitted to a nicety (often through shirring) proclaims the fact of most sophisticated styling.

Dignified Afternoon Gown.

THE JOHN W. FRYE CO. ENTERTAIN

The John W. Frye Co., appeared in the Concord Twp. Gym Tuesday evening of this week to fill the second number of the lyceum course sponsored by the juniors of the high school.

The program which consisted of tricks in legerdemain, while of the usual order, was nevertheless, pleasing to the children as was attested by their laughter and applause. At the conclusion of the firts part of the program, a brief intermission was given to enable the performers to clear the stage preparatory for the second series of tricks, which were, if anything more complicated than the others. A rather unique and pleasing feature was a departure from the usual bag of tricks, which consisted of the formation, upon an easel of pictures made from pieces of colored felt, arranged in such manner that a poster effect was obtained. This was the concluding feature of the program.

Attention is Called to Change in Dates on Fur Animals

The open season for taking fur-bearing animals in Indiana is from November 15th to January 15th, both dates inclusive. The legislature shortened the season 30 days. The 1929 licenses give dates November 10 to February 10. These are not correct. The licenses were printed prior to the legislative session in order to have them ready. A notation on the license calls attention to the fact that the laws are subject to change by the legislature of 1929.

Editor of the St. Joe Weekly News:

The picture appearing on the advertising page of The St. Weekly News, is the business place of The Boon-Bevington Co., Hicksville, Ohio. This store is very centrally located. It is truly a happy event when shopping at this store. You can always find your choice of the season's fashions, and up to the minute styles.

This store as I remember, has been in business many years. The store has always satisfied. Which is proven by its many customers. They carry a complete line of the newest and best of standardized nationally advertised merchandise. When passing by this store, you can always see people of Hicksville, and the surrounding community, leaving with bundles of merchandise. It is a pleasure to shop at The Boon-Bevington Co., and be greeted by the pleasant clerks. The service and courtesy you receive here makes one appreciate a store with a vast reputation.

The merchandise on display in the windows is the very newest ideas in silks with touches of trimming, and beautifully tailored garments, that are distinctively dainty. I have found it true that you can purchase good style and fashion, with a slender purse at this store.

Very truly,
Mrs. E. R. Steward.

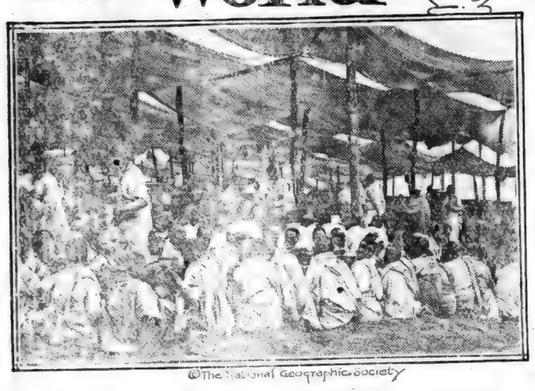
Dining Around the World



©The National Geographic Society

A Feast in Ethiopia.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE epicure who is willing to blaze startlingly new trails now and then, can have a wonderful time on a gastronomic trip around the world.

Dining in the homes of England and Western Europe, the American attending a feast would find the chief dish a reminder of home. Turkey, duck or goose makes the most popular roast in England, while plum pudding—this time with a generously flavored brandy sauce—usually tops off the meal during cool seasons.

In France and Spain our American explorer of the world's tables would again encounter the turkey but there he would find the capon and the pheasant sharing its popularity. Methods of preparation and side dishes, however, would tell him unmistakably that he was getting farther afield. Truffles, chestnuts and olives are important ingredients of the dressing of fowls in these Latin countries. In France snails might be numbered among the viands that supplement the piece de resistance; and in Spain the meal, starting, say, with almond soup, would be sure to include among the secondary dishes a sopa, rice cooked in olive oil, with tomatoes and other vegetables and perhaps bits of meat.

In northern Africa, whatever the date of the feast, it would be sure to have as its central dish cous-cous. This consists of wheat prepared like fine grains of rice, steamed with lamb or mutton, and vegetables if the latter are obtainable. It is served in a large, almost hemispherical, basket-dish so closely woven that it holds water. About this container the diners sit, taking their food with their fingers. Olives, dates, and figs help to complete the meal; and on occasion there may be a dish of locusts—"grasshoppers"—prepared with wheat. The legs, wings and heads are removed before the creatures are cooked.

Among the Zulus of southern Africa whole oxen, or bullocks are roasted at feast time; and in central Africa the feast of feasts is roasted elephant's foot.

In Persia, as throughout all the Near and Central East, mutton holds first place. There the accepted epicurean trick is to cook the meat in pomegranate juice. Rice is cooked in grease, and the two combined form the famous pilau. With the pilau is served the thin, crisp, paperlike bread of Persia.

Raw Meat in Tibet.

If one's culinary investigations extend to backward Tibet he finds a strange combination of a barbarism which shows itself in the eating of raw meat—the "higher" and "gamier" the better—and an ingenuity that has evolved concentrated emergency rations. A Tibetan feast might consist of yak meat, strong tea mixed with rancid butter, and parched barley meal moistened with the greasy tea. Evaporated and dried yak's milk soaked in tea would constitute the Tibetan "dessert course."

In India no important repast would be complete without quantities of rice and curry. It is in Java, however, that rice is raised to its highest status as a food. If he who goes exploring among the foods of the world is a connoisseur he may well pause in Java, devoting days and weeks to exploring the variations—the nuances, one might almost say—of that Dutch-Javan food masterpiece, the rijst tafel (rice table).

Rice is boiled to flaky, whiteness and spread evenly on platters, each of which is to serve as an individual dish. But this rice, good as it is in itself, and later because of its borrowed savors, is as yet only the foundation of the dish, the "table" as the Dutch have it. On it are placed little heaps of choice tid-bits limited in variety only by the genius and imagination of the chef and his master's pocket book.

Feasting is something of an institution among well-to-do Koreans. Once or twice a year the wealthy rice landlords go to Seoul, the capital, and invite small armies of friends and acquaintances to dine with them that their prestige may be heightened in the eyes of their world. Half a dozen or more meats may be served at such a feast—beef, mutton, venison, fowls, fish and oysters. Rice, of course, holds an important place on the menu. Seaweed, cooked in oil and served with slices of red pepper; and kimchee, a kind of sauerkraut, are favorite side dishes. The guests eat their portions from little individual tables.

How They Eat in Japan.

In Japan, too, guests at feasts eat from low, small, separate tables, their dishes being served usually in the kitchen. An exceptional feast is likely to be marked by the appearance of the piece de resistance—usually fish—whole before the guests. A favorite food for this sort of treatment is a big baked red snapper. It is placed on a table of its own in the center of a circle of the guest table, and portions are served from it by a servant.

The little tables at a Japanese feast are packed with a varied array of individual dishes. The guest probably will find clear chicken soup, the inevitable covered dish of rice, a slab of raw fish, roast bird, shrimp fritters, fruit, and various pickled greens. He may find, too, the most characteristic of all Japanese edibles, pickled chrysanthemum petals. For dessert he will have rice cakes and sweetened bean paste, a stiff, jelly-like substance, not unlike Turkish paste.

At Japanese inns the traveler is told that "Bombay duck" can be had at a reasonable price. The hungry customer visions a fat fowl but the waiter brings in pieces of smoked fish about two inches long and as thick as a dime. The menu also includes pickled seaweed, seaweed jelly, and chutney which resembles pickled citron, but is almost as hot as Mexican chile. More raw than cooked fish is eaten by Japanese. Raw baby octopuses are particularly popular. "Japanese Limburger" is not a cheese but a Japanese pickled daikon, or long white radish.

Traveling still farther eastward on his circumnavigation of the food world, our explorer would still have to pass through the Pacific islands before completing his journey. Tahiti may be taken as typical of this region. There preparation for a feast means killing the fatted pig. The animal is usually roasted whole with yams and native plantains. Coconut sauce and coconut milk complete the feast, which is served on a huge banana leaf spread on the floor. The guests squat about this green "board" eating with their fingers.

Mexico Relies on Corn.

When Mexico is reached, the traveler finds that corn or maize is the staff of life. But to the American used to his substantial and sizable loaf it is likely to appear a somewhat frail prop. Most of the Mexican corn is not milled into meal or flour. It is laboriously crushed with small stone rollers by hand, in millions of kitchens and dooryards. The crushed grain is then moistened into a stiff paste and cooked on a griddle into what the average visitor from north of the Rio Grande would term a "tough, flabby pancake." These are tortillas, the most generally used articles of food in Mexico. They are cooked in the home, in restaurants, over braziers in the market place, or taken cold by laborers in their lunch packets. Nor are they unknown on the tables of the prosperous. Wherever food appears in Mexico the tortilla stands well to the fore.

Not only does the tortilla look unappetizing to the outsider; it is sure to prove unappetizing if he follows his first impulse and treats it like a pancake, for it is tough and rather tasteless. But, treated as bread, the tortilla will make a much better impression. The proper trick is to roll it tightly so that it will be manageable and retain its heat. It then becomes a breadstick whose spiraled end will melt a bit of butter and furnish a really delectable bite.

Corn contributes to another important Mexican dish, the tamale. The raw corn paste is flattened out as though tortillas were to be made. On the paste is spread a thin layer of minced meat and pepper pods. The two layers are then folded up so that the meat and pepper forms an inner core with a sort of capsule of corn paste about it. Each piece is then wrapped in a corn shuck made pliable by soaking in water. Numbers of these are placed in a tin vessel and cooked by steam, then served piping hot both with fire and pepper.

GROUND BEEF ON TOAST IS LIKED

Attractive Ways to Prepare Cheaper Cuts of Beef.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A suitable lunch dish for the younger children and a tasty one for the whole family is ground beef on toast. This is one of the simplest and most attractive ways to prepare the cheaper cuts of beef. When cooked under a broiler for just a few minutes the ground beef has all the rich flavor of broiled steak, and the juices which cook out of the meat flavor the toast. In case a broiler is not available cook the ground meat for a very short time in a hot skillet and serve it on buttered toast.

Toast slices of bread on one side. Butter the other side and spread it with a layer of ground raw beef about one-fourth inch thick. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and dot with butter. Cook under a broiling flame in the gas oven until the meat is done but not too dry. Serve with parsley garnish and pickles. If you are serving the dish to children omit the pickles.

Tasty Salads

Place pieces of grapefruit on lettuce. Top with a slice of orange and sweet dressing.

Select large orange and grapefruit. Peel and skin out the sections. Place lettuce leaf on plate. Arrange two series of fruit, grapefruit, orange and pear, across the plate. Stripe the top of each with a thin cutting of green pepper.

Oranges, sliced and covered with sliced bananas and walnuts.

Four dates or soaked prunes, stuffed with cheese on sections of grapefruit or orange.

WELSH RABBIT IS DISH FOR WINTER

Preparation Will Test Girl's Culinary Ability.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

As a matter of fact, there's no rabbit in it; cheese is the principal ingredient. Twenty or thirty years ago Welsh "rarebit" as it is more correctly called, was just as popular as it is today for serving as a late evening snack after a drive on a cool fall evening, or in colder weather after a skating party. The main thing was to concoct something hot and tasty as quickly as possible, and in the days of chafing dishes over alcohol lamps, the making of a Welsh rarebit was considered a test of a girl's culinary ability. The chafing dishes are usually electric nowadays, but none the less attractive when brought right to the table so that the cooking is done while the party waits and watches the cook. The advantages of the method described below by the bureau of home economics are that the "rabbit" can be prepared ahead of time except for the egg. Then it can be reheated and the egg added just before serving. Incidentally, any left-over rabbit can be used as a sandwich filling, or as a sauce for rice or macaroni. In the latter case it may need thinning slightly with milk.

4 tbs. butter
4 tbs. flour
½ pound American cheese, flaked
1 egg, beaten
¼ tsp. salt
Few dashes tabasco
Few drops onion juice
Few drops soy sauce

Heat the milk in a double boiler. Mix the melted butter and flour, and stir into them a small quantity of the heated milk. Add to the remainder of the milk and stir until thickened. Add the cheese and the seasonings, and heat lightly until the cheese has melted. If it is not to be eaten at once, set it aside to cool. When wanted, reheat and pour a little of the cheese mixture into the egg. Then add this to the "rabbit" and cook for two or three minutes longer. Serve on thin crisp toast or crackers.

Can Vegetables at Once

Vegetables should be canned as soon as possible after they are brought in from the garden. Flat-sour may develop if vegetables are allowed to stand in a warm kitchen.

PLANNING BUDGET FOR THE COMING YEAR

Many Farm Women Keep Household Accounts In Connection With Their Home Demonstration Work.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the New Year's resolutions made by a good many families is to live according to a budget or definite spending plan for the coming year, but unless there is also a good method of keeping track of money as fast as it is spent so that the outgo may be frequently compared with the estimate, the resolution may fall to bear fruit.

To meet this need for a practical household financial record, the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has designed a convenient loose-leaf account book which may be obtained from the superintendent of documents, government printing office, for 50 cents. However, any ruled blank book may be arranged in a similar way, using the page-to-a-class-of-expenditure system. A square notebook opening at the side rather than at the end, so as to permit ruling columns entirely across two pages, will be found desirable.

How much money do you expect to handle next year and from what sources? Set it down at the beginning of the book. Work out an estimate of probable expenditures for the entire year, getting the whole family to help remember what will be needed, and when the estimate fits the income enter it next. There are a good many classes of expense in most families—food, housing, operating, furnishings, clothing, health, development, personal, automobile, and savings, including insurance. Allow a page or more for each. The edges of the book may be cut out for a marginal index. Provide a summary page to be filled in at the end of each month. Other pages you may wish to include will show "property owned," "household inventory," "record of insurance policies," "record of investments." The bureau of home economics has kept the needs of the farm woman especially in mind in planning the loose-leaf account book with special pages for such items as "products furnished by the farm," "garden record," "poultry record," "canned and preserved goods record," "accounts receivable," "accounts payable." Pages that do not apply to one's needs may be dropped under the loose-leaf plan.

At the head of each class of expenditures, set down the amount shown in the estimate for that purpose. Make a sort of game of trying to keep your expenses for that item within the required figure. Compare results as shown in the summary with what you expected to have to spend. This will give you an idea about planning your next budget. The record and the estimate, taken together, will show very conclusively what you are getting for your money and whether some departments of living are costing more than they should.

The home demonstration agent in this picture from Ohio is conferring with a farm housewife on her budget for next year. She is showing her how to plan her expenses and make an estimate, and how to record in a convenient and practical way the various items that complicate the rural housewife's records.

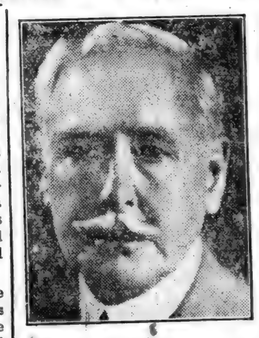
Goes to Hospital to Learn Beauty Aid



Doctor laughed when asked "What cleared my skin?"

"THE first time I heard of it," writes Mrs. E. Whitney of 35 Parker Street, Bangor, Maine, "was when I was at the Hospital. I was very nervous and run down and after my baby daughter was born the doctor began giving me something. In about ten days I felt like a new person. Before then, I was miserable. My skin was in very bad condition and I could not understand what made it clear up so quickly.

"Before I left I asked the House Doctor what kind of medicine it was that cleared up my skin and made me feel so much better. He said 'My dear girl, didn't you ever hear of Nujol? Hospitals aren't the only place where you can get it! You can buy it most everywhere!'

"I have been using Nujol ever since, and I think it is wonderful."

That's the great thing about Nujol. Not a medicine, contains no drugs, can't possibly hurt you, forms no habit—and if you are like most other people its simple natural way of bodily lubrication will do wonders for you, too.

You see, all of us have an excess of body poisons that make our skins sallow, only able to work at half or quarter our real ability. When Nujol absorbs these poisons and carries them off easily, normally, naturally, we just feel like a million dollars.

Try Nujol for two weeks, and see what happens. It costs only as much as a ticket to a good movie, and it will mean so much to you. In sealed packages at any drug store. Start feeling fine, this very day!

A hobby is something you have to enjoy without talking about it. People won't listen.

Women may be able to make cake according to directions, but they can't manage husbands that way.

Bayer-Tablets of Aspirin — Genuine

To Identify Genuine Aspirin

THE increasing use of Bayer Aspirin every year is proof that it has no ill effects. It is the accepted antidote for pain. It always helps; it never harms. Quick relief when you've a headache, or cold; or are suffering from neuralgia or neuritis. Rheumatic pains yield, too, if you'll only give these tablets a chance. But you want genuine Aspirin, so look for the Bayer Cross on every tablet. The box always bears the name Bayer and the word "genuine" printed in red. Proven directions inside.

Potato Storage Very Important

Tubers Should Be Dry and Reasonably Free From Dirt or Bruises.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Every grower of potatoes on a commercial scale should provide storage capacity for at least 75 per cent of his annual crop. Potato specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture point out that it would be a physical impossibility as well as disastrous economically to try to market the full crop in the autumn. Often it happens that the individual grower may find it profitable to put all his crop in storage and wait for a more favorable market.

Successful Storage.

Requirements for successful storage of potatoes as summarized by William Stuart of the bureau of plant industry include protection from extreme temperatures, with a range from 35 to 40 degrees Fahrenheit being the most satisfactory; sufficient ventilation to remove foul air and moisture; and provision for excluding light. The tubers should be dry and reasonably free from dirt. All diseased, badly cut, or bruised tubers should be removed from the crop.

"It is not advisable," says Mr. Stuart, "to store potatoes to a depth of more than five or six feet in the bin. The bin should not be larger than 12 feet square unless it is provided with a series of ventilating shafts for the escape of moisture and heat. Division walls and floors providing ventilation are desirable."

Deep Piles Harmful.

It is common for growers and dealers to store potatoes in bins to a depth of 10 to 15 feet. It is poor policy, however, and often accounts for shrinkage and loss. Deep piles generate more heat, and decay and disease are likely to take heavier toll. Also the weight of the piled-up potatoes is likely to cause cracking and bruising of the tubers in the lower layers.

Mulch on Strawberries Prevents Winter-Kill

The idea of a mulch is not to keep the ground from freezing, but to keep it frozen and to hold the snow over the rows. A severe cold, open winter is hard on plants. It's likely to winter-kill them, or injure the roots so they cannot function properly the following spring. As far as winter protection is concerned, a mulch would not be so absolutely necessary if we were sure snow would be over the rows all winter. Even then it is very necessary in the late winter or early spring after the snow goes off, to shade the row and prevent repeated freezing and thawing. Alternate freezing and thawing not only heaves the plants out of the ground, but injures the roots and crowns, handicapping the plants' ability to produce a maximum crop. Mulches are also beneficial in the spring or early summer when the crop of berries is ripening.

Barnyard Composts

According to studies made at the Georgia experiment station, the value of barnyard manure in crop production is markedly increased by adding 100 pounds of rock phosphate and 20 pounds of sulphur per ton of manure and composting for three months. This improvement is accounted for in the conclusion that the sulphur checks the loss of ammonia of manure, and also develops an acid that acts on rock phosphate and makes its phosphorus more available.

Agricultural Squibs

Good seed corn is the kind that will grow vigorously.

Water Is Essential for Working Horses

Should Be as Pure as Possible and Free From Odors.

Horses require from five to fifteen gallons of water a day, the quantity depending on the temperature and the amount of work performed. The water should be as pure as possible, clear in appearance, and free from taste, color, or smell. Pure water is just as essential to a horse as it is to a man, and it is a mistake to suppose that a horse can drink badly contaminated water with impunity.

Water obtained from pools or shallow wells contaminated with surface drainage, or containing decomposing organic matter, frequently causes diarrhea, and generally predisposes to colic. Water that contains a large amount of sediment causes a mechanical irritation of the membrane of the stomach and intestines, i. e., sand colic.

When the horses are at rest in the stable, water should be given three times a day, and should invariably be given previous to feeding.

This latter point is of considerable practical importance. A horse's stomach is small in proportion to the animal's size, and water does not remain in it, but passes through the stomach and small bowel to the caecum, or water gut. If water is given after feeding, besides weakening the digestive juices, a considerable portion of the food in the stomach and small intestines will be washed out in an undigested state, and indigestion and colic may result.

Water in small quantities can be given within an hour or so from the completion of feeding if desired. After a long journey, a good plan is to give water a mile or so before the journey's end, and take the horse slowly in afterwards.

Whitewashes of Cement and Lime Quite Useful

The following lime and cement whitewash recipes are recommended by the Illinois agricultural experiment station.

"A whitewash formula that is recommended as being very satisfactory for new surfaces is as follows: 2½ gallons of finishing lime, 2 gallons of white cement, 2½ pounds of sal soda, 2 pounds of table salt and 3 pounds of powdered alum. These should be mixed dry and then enough cold water added to make five gallons of the wash.

"For old surfaces a good mixture can be made from 2½ gallons of finishing lime, 2½ gallons of white cement, 1 pound of sal soda, 1 pound of table salt and 3 pounds of powdered alum. As in the case of the other formula, these ingredients should be mixed dry and then enough water added to make five gallons of the wash. This wash should be applied in the usual way after the loose particles and scales have been cleaned off.

The caution that should be kept in mind in whitewashing is to be sure that the surface on which the wash is applied is entirely clean before the application is made."

Dairy Herd Improvement Reflected in Milk Pail

Wisconsin leads all other states in the number of dairy herd improvement associations. It has 154 out of a total of nearly 1,100 in all the states, according to reports compiled by the bureau of dairy industry of the United States Department of Agriculture.

These associations give dairymen information as to the profitableness of their cows. On the basis of such information, association members have been weeding out the less desirable animals and retaining heifers from the more productive cows. The value of this practice is reflected in the steady increase in the average production of the cows under test in these associations. In 1920 the average production per cow in these herds was 247 pounds of butterfat. In 1924 this had increased to an average of 279 pounds. According to the bureau's records the production figures for the years from 1925 to 1928 were 284 pounds, 289 pounds, 293 pounds, and 295 pounds.

Present Production Can Be Doubled by Feeding

A careful study of the tens of thousands of herd averages and of the hundreds of thousands of yearly individual cow records, has shown that present production can be doubled by keeping better cows and by feeding them 50 per cent more feed. Through soil improvement, through use of better seed, and through the more general production of corn silage and alfalfa hay as feed for our dairy cows we may, when the need arises, be able to double the production of milk and butterfat with the same number of cows. To accomplish this, these cows must be bred and selected for high production.

Prune in Winter

Tree fruit plants and hardy grapevines may be pruned any time during the winter, December 1 to March 1, says R. J. Barnett of the Kansas State Agricultural college. The particular date within these boundaries is not important except that the work may be more accurately and comfortably done during periods of moderate temperatures. Circular No. 102 contains concise directions for the work.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

Fool "Stunts" Indulged in Eighty Years Ago

The "marathon" craze which swept the country a few years ago had a prototype more than eighty years ago, as is shown from the following paragraph in the Onondaga Standard of July 23, 1845. Under the heading, "At It Again," the account reads:

"Two persons, Professor Yarence and Professor Mosier, are walking again at Library hall (in London). Last week they stood up forty-nine hours and were then taken down by the 'authorities.'

"The Sporting club of London has offered a purse of $1,000 to any person who can walk sixty hours on a plank, twelve feet long, two feet wide, raised two feet from the floor, the greatest number of hours in succession without leep or rest."—Kansas City Star.

Long-Lived Bushmen

Centenarians are common in South Africa, and unless persons are considerably over one hundred their age is not regarded as extraordinary. A bushman, named Jordan, considered on excellent authority to be between one hundred and twenty and one hundred and thirty years old, claims to be South Africa's oldest inhabitant. He is only 4 feet 9 inches high, and is still very active, has good sight, but is rather deaf. His simple wants are seen to by kindly disposed people, so that the old fellow has no need to draw on his old age pension, which he is banking, he says, for a rainy day.

Crowd to Lincoln Memorial

Since June 1, when the Lincoln memorial, in Washington, was first kept open at night, records kept by the United States park police show it to be the most attractive to sightseers. Between the hours of 4:30 and 9:30 p. m. guards reported the daily average number of visitors exceeded 800, and a record high was reached August 5 when 1,200 viewed the impressive statue of Abraham Lincoln.

Practical Diagnosis

Dr. Stanford Read, a practicing physician of London, states that a man who had defrauded his brother recently came to him complaining of loss of appetite, indigestion and debility. The doctor, discovering the mental factor, ordered the patient to repay his brother. The patient did, and is now cured.

Wells Cool Oregon Theater

Nature's own cooling system has been harnessed by a Portland (Ore.) theater which drilled artesian wells tapping subterranean lakes 150 feet beneath the surface, to obtain a supply of water which is consistently 52 degrees, says Popular Science Monthly. This naturally cooled water supply is pumped to three banks of sprays.

If Baby has COLIC

A cry in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. Whenever there's need of gentle regulation. Children love the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is always better for growing children than some needlessly strong medicine meant only for adult use. Genuine Castoria always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Prescribed by doctors!

DETROIT

With the centrally located Fort Shelby as your base of operation the varied attractions of this great city will keep you busy Saturday morning and afternoon.

Several new motion picture theaters of unusual grandeur, one of them the second largest in the world, are waiting to amuse you. Saturday evening might well be spent at a musical comedy or the Civic Theater. You'll find it pleasant Sunday morning to drive along uncrowded streets to Belle Isle, the Ambassador international bridge under construction, in view from hotel rooms, the great automobile plants and a host of other interesting places. And then in the afternoon the Symphony, or, perhaps, the Institute of Arts.

There's no end to the fascinating possibilities Detroit offers you.

Not the least of these are the excellent accommodations that await you at the Fort Shelby—900 reposeful, Servidor-equipped guest rooms, four different types of restaurants, the highest degree of comfort, convenience, and quietude. Many excellent rooms at $3, $3.50, and $4 a day, others still larger and more elaborate at various higher prices. Guests arriving by motor are relieved of the care of their cars at the door by competent attendants.

Advance reservations of tickets to theaters, concerts, operas, sporting events, etc., may be made at the Fort Shelby. Write for fully illustrated folder and information about direct route to the Fort Shelby.

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIII — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, NOV. 21, 1929 — NUMBER 46

MORTUARY RECORD OF THE PAST WEEK

George Swineford, son of Anthony and Margaret Swineford, was born March 17, 1856 in Ashland County, Ohio, and departed this life at the home of his sister, Mrs. Wm. Curie, in St. Joe, Indiana, November 7, 1929, age 73 years, 7 months and 20 days.

November 2, 1879, he married Isabelle Hornberger, who preceded him in death nine years ago. For several years they lived on the farm and for nine years were in charge of the Swineford House in Auburn. In 1901 they moved to St. Joe where the residence had been maintained until last March, when owing to failing health he went to the home of his sister, Mrs. Wm. Curie, at which place most tender care was given him.

Mr. Swineford had, for many years been keenly interested and successfully engaged in the poultry business and was well known among leading poultry fanciers. In his passing the community has lost a valued citizen, a loyal friend and a good neighbor.

He is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Delora Curie of St. Joe and Mrs. Ada Boyles of Norwalk, Ohio, also by five nephews and two nieces.

Funeral services were held at the Methodist Protestant Church, Rev. Mayfield, pastor and E. R. Kinsey funeral director.

The pall bearers were Alvin Carter, Auburn; Frank Wingard, Auburn; S. L. Platner, Frank Baker, Isaac McDonald and Morris Curie.

Among those attending the funeral service from distant places were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Boyle, Linden Boyle, Norwalk, Ohio; George Brown, Dorothy Brown, Danville, Illinois; Calvin Brown, Fort Wayne; Wm. McCrory and family, Three Rivers, Michigan; Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Towsley, Elkhart, Indiana; Chas. Grimm and family, Waterloo; Ezra Horn, Spencerville; Don Ramsey and family, Fort Wayne; Miss McCrory, Fort Wayne; Mrs. Laura Hornbarger, Mrs. Dorsey Hines, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Carter, Auburn, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Curie of Fort Wayne and Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Grimm and grandsons of Waterloo.

DANIEL MORR

Daniel Morr, son of Samuel and Mary M. Knouse Morr, was born in Ashland County, Ohio, February 25, 1850. He was the ninth child of a family of thirteen.

At the age of one year he moved with his parents to DeKalb County, Indiana. His father having purchased a farm of two hundred acres in Concord Township near which place the remainder of his life has been spent.

On June 7, 1877, Mr. Morr was married to Sarah Farrell of Concord, Indiana. To this union two children were born, one dying in infancy, and Mary Gertrude, wife of Howard Krise of Concord Township, surviving. Mr. Morr spent the last year of his life at the home of his daughter where he passed away November 16, 1929 at the age of 79 years, 8 months and 21 days. He suffered a stroke of paralysis November 20, 1928. Later he broke his hip and was a patient at the Dr. Sanders Hospital for ten weeks. Again he was removed to the home of his daughter where he had been bedfast.

Mr. Morr was a very patient sufferer and in all his sickness was never heard to complain. He was a man of good moral character and one respected by all who knew him. He leaves to mourn his departure his daughter and son-in-law, Mary G. and Howard Krise, one grandson, Paul Krise, two sisters, Mrs. Millie Critchett of Hart, Michigan and Mrs. Mary Johnson of Syracuse, Indiana, and a host of neighbors and friends.

The funeral service was conducted by Rev. B. W. Mayfield Monday afternoon from the Concord Church, with burial in Riverside Cemetery. E. R. Kinsey funeral director.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our neighbors and friends for their kindness shown and for the assistance rendered from time to time during the continued illness and for the kind words expressed and assistance rendered following the passing of our father and grandfather.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Krise.

YOUNG PEOPLES CONFERENCE WELL ATTENDED

The young people's division of the DeKalb County Council of Religious Education in convention at Corunna Saturday and Sunday elected Rose Smith of Corunna, as the next year's president; Ira Moore of Newville township, vice president and Lelah Shoudel of Jackson township, secretary.

The convention was well attended. Sixty-five registered, eigsty-four attended the banquet Saturday evening, one hundred and fourteen attended the Sunday School services Sunday morning and one hundred and sixty-seven answered roll call. Union township was second prize winner with an attendance of eleven and Jackson township with ten registered was third. Newville township was awarded the banner for being represented with the largest delegation going the farthest number of miles to the convention.

The Corunna young people did everything in their power to make the conference a success and the council officers and delegates appreciate it.

The 1930 conference goes to Garrett and will be entertained in the Christian Church.

A LUCKY ACCIDENT FOR ROY KOCH

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Koch experienced an auto smash up Saturday night on their return from Auburn. As they were making the curve at the Mitch Haines farm near Auburn a car west bound swung across the road in front of Roy and struck his left front wheel, damaging the axle and wheel so he was unable to drive home. Bassett garage wrecker was called.

Fortunately no one was hurt. The Koch car had five occupants while the other had but two. No excuse was offered by the stranger for his position in the road.

MRS. W. E. HENLY DIES AT HICKSVILLE

Mrs. W. E. Henly, of Hicksville, died Monday, following an illness of several days with pneumonia. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 from the Christian Church at Hicksville.

Besides the husband she leaves two sons and three daughters, two of which are at home, Clarence and Golda. Donald is in California, Carrie is in Toledo and Eunice in Eastern Ohio.

Living in St. Joe for a number of years the family made many warm friends here who deeply sympathize with them.

Among the many St. Joe friends attending the funeral was the Leaders class of the Methodist Sunday School who attended in a body.

S. D. GEE RETIRED BY WABASH RAILROAD

Samuel D. Gee, 72, a bridge carpenter for the Wabash railroad for the past 28 years, went on pension last Saturday, by order of the company.

Mr. Gee will receive $27.16 per month. Mr. Gee enjoys quite good health and he will be able to take life a little easier, work about as he wishes and be at home.

During these years he has been out all kinds of weather making the necessary bridge and property repairs.

A pension is the expression of appreciation of the company for years of faithful and satisfactory service rendered by the individual and it is a fine record for any employee.

CONCORD FARMER SLAPS HIS WIFE

on the back and says: "The next time we go to town, let's subscribe for The St. Joe News." It's the only way to know what's going on at home and many times we are embarrassed by not knowing. If we would only read the home paper we would know more about our home doings.

Fifty cents will bring the paper every week for four months. It would make an ideal gift to any of the folks who are away from home.

Frank Markle of Spencerville, who has been off duty on the Wabash for many months, has improved so that he is able to go to work again, and he was given a job Monday as crossing watchman at Fort Wayne at one of the Wabash crossings. He is driving to his work.

ROAD DELEGATION TO INDIANAPOLIS

Tax payers and citizens from all parts of the county composed a delegation which went to Indianapolis on last Monday at an early hour to confer with the State Highway Commission concerning hard surfacing of the so-called Leo road from the county line on the south to Butler on the north. The paving of this road has been delayed considerable by misunderstandings ariaing out of confusion of the many things concerning state and county manipulation of road construction. The county tax payers, as a whole, had not fully made up their minds as to the roads they wanted built first, consequently, nothing of a definite nature was ordered done until just recently.

The Leo road from Fort Wayne to the north boundary of Leo has been completed recently by cement hard surface construction, leaving 4½ miles unpaved yet in Allen county and 13½ miles in DeKalb county to be paved to complete a continuous pavement from Fort Wayne to Toledo and points east. It is this 13½ mile strip, from County Line to Butler, that caused the delegation to confer with the commission on Monday.

The party, composed of citizens from Spencerville, St. Joe, Butler, Waterloo and Hamilton, all working in harmony for hard surfacing of this gap that will, with the 4½ miles in Allen county, complete the route from No. 3 through Fort Wayne to Road No. 20 at Hamilton which intersects north of Hamilton.

The party presented their plans to Mr. Brown, secretary of the commission and Mr. Titus, chief engineer of road construction. The substance of the plans as presented by Mr. Poffenberger, of Butler, who was the spokesman for the DeKalbans, was that DeKalb would pay a third of the cost of construction in what ever kind of road the commission, in its wisdom seen fit to build. Mr. Brown in the course of his talk stressed the fact that all roads in the future, must of necessity be of a good substantial kind to hold up under the increased burden of speed and tonnage which interstate and local traffic subject them.

A great deal of patience seems to be necessary until this road becomes a reality. In as much as this road is the missing link it should receive the support of all progressive citizens. Roads are being built and will be built. DeKalb should have its share. We live here.

GETS THE CASH

J. C. Hull was the recipient of a check last week from the Mutual Life Insurance Company in the amount of $872, due to the fact that his $500 endowment insurance policy was paid up and due in cash. Mr. Hull had made payments on this policy for 20 years. A fine way for anyone to save money and then have your earnings returned to you in a lump sum at a stated time in case one lives, if not the beneficiary receives the amount of the policy at time of the insured's death.

RUG DEMONSTRATION BY CLUB LADIES

The Home Bureau Club met Friday at the home of Mrs. Diadem Bone. The club was called to order by the president, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick.

First in order was the project work which was given by the county president, Mrs. Loa Carper. The subject was "Woodwork and Floors." Mrs. Carper assisted by Mrs. Pluma Hamilton gave a demonstration on rugs. This was followed by a short talk by the county president.

Mrs. Harriet Johnson then read a paper on the life of Riley, after which Mrs. Millie Shull gave a reading "Knee-Deep in June."

Following was the business session, secretary's report was read and approved and twenty-seven members responded to roll call with Riley quotations. At this time was the election of officers for the ensuing year:

President, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick; vice president, Mrs. Pluma Hamilton; secretary, Mrs. Cora Curie; assistant, Mrs. Millie Shull; treasurer, Mrs. Katie Storer; press corespondent, Mrs. Mayola Kinsey; assistant, Mrs. Cora Curie.

Delicious refreshments were served by the committee.

Mrs. Bone's birthday being the 13th of this month the club presented her with a beautiful box of candy.

The next meeting will be held December 20th at the home of Mrs. Linua Thorpe. This will be an all day meeting with pot luck dinner.

"Talkies" of Crime Suspects Help the Police

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

Movietone talkies of suspects and criminals were made for the first time in Philadelphia. It is the idea of Director of Public Safety Lemuel Schofield to have talkies made of suspects so that when the trial comes up the talkies can be shown and the confessions of the criminal also recorded by themselves, so that no prisoner can say he was tricked into a confession. Photograph shows a general view of the interior of the detective bureau where the talkies were made.

ATWATER KENT RADIO

SCREEN-GRID ··· ELECTRO-DYNAMIC

Battery or House-Current

"SERVICE . . . WHAT FOR? look again . . . It's an Atwater Kent"

ASK any Atwater Kent owner if he ever does anything more than tune in, sit back . . . listen.

Service? He's bought the kind of radio that almost never needs it, the kind that you will find in most farm homes today.

It's as mechanically perfect as a well-made watch. Please look inside and see. Every part is precise—accurate to a hair's breadth. That's why you can expect uninterrupted performance month after month, year after year.

This holds true for the millions of Atwater Kent Radios sold in past years. It holds true for the greatest radio Atwater Kent has ever built—the new Screen-Grid Set—Electro-Dynamic, of course.

You can have this new set operated either by batteries or from house-current, in a compact table model or a wide variety of fine cabinets. Either type assures you a radio that lets you listen every time you turn the switch.

ON THE AIR—Atwater Kent Radio Hour, Sunday Evenings, 9:15 (Eastern Time), WEAF network of N. B. C. Atwater Kent Mid-Week Program, Thursday Evenings, 10:00 (Eastern Time), WJZ network of N. B. C.

Date of Christ's Birth Not Positively Known

It is generally assumed that we are living in the year 1929, but the year may really be 1933, or even later.

This fact is indicated by a record of an eclipse of the moon. Bible history says that Christ was born during the reign of Herod the Great. But Herod died in the spring of 4 B. C., the exact date being fixed by a lunar eclipse which took place the night before his death.

Obviously, therefore, Jesus might have been born not later than 4 B. C., and possibly earlier.

The church has no definite knowledge of the date of Christ's birth. It fixed the year, month and day of the month arbitrarily.

Astronomers are able to calculate the dates of past eclipses as accurately as those of the future, and so have determined the very day and hour of the eclipse that ushered Herod the Great out of this life.—London Mail.

Fine Botanical Gardens

The University of Kentucky is rapidly bringing its new botanic gardens into final shape. The gardens are nine acres in extent and it is the aim of the university department of botany eventually to include in the collections specimens of every type of plant that will grow under Kentucky climatic conditions. A feature of the gardens is the collection of hybrid rhododendrons, the most comprehensive in the state. These shrubs require a special soil, which has been prepared for them by the use of peat, moss and aluminum sulphate.

Snowy linens are the pride of every housewife. Keep them in that condition by using Russ Bleaching Blue in your laundry. At all grocers.—Adv.

Encourage French Births

The French firm of Michelin began some years ago to make family allowances among its employees, based on the size of the family. The birth of a child is a positive economic advantage. As a result it is reported that the birth rate in the Michelin community is twice that of France as a whole. Living conditions are good; therefore, the rate of infant mortality is low.

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

Ginger Ella

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, his motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph.

While Ginger complained, however, she obligingly did her share of the straightening, and the dusting, and the rearranging.

"Nice sensible girls like ours, no frills, no nonsense, no put-on about them. Work hard. Good natured. Easy to live with. But let a man darken the horizon—disgusting, simply disgusting. Do you understand it, father?"

"Well, perhaps—at least, I am used to it," he evaded acridly.

Helen, returning, laughed good naturedly. "Now, now, little one, don't be jealous," she said.

"Jealous—jealous! Me, jealous? Jealous of a—a male school teacher?"

Helen frowned. "Father, I wish you wouldn't let her say 'male school teacher' in that insulting manner. A professor of mathematics with two degrees is not the same as a male school teacher. And besides, as you know very well, he isn't going to teach for ever. He is going to write textbooks."

"Textbooks! But they've already got textbooks. Don't tell me they're going to discover more mathematics to make us learn."

"Ginger, don't talk so loud, for goodness sake. He'll be here in a minute. Sh! Here he is."

"Disgusting — simply disgusting," Ginger buried herself once more in the despised paper.

Horace Langley came in, greeted Helen with a perfunctory, before-the-family kiss, and shook hands with Mr. Tolliver.

"What's the matter with Ginger?"

Ginger looked up. "Oh, hello—are you here? I was just interested in—uh," she stole a look at the paper, "what Lloyd George said to the Elks—I mean, to Coolidge." She nudged her father with a sharp little elbow.

"Ellen, suppose we run down and have a cream cone? I feel quite fatigued with the strain of living up the Marjory's beauty. Won't you come along, Miriam? Helen, why don't you and Horace come, too?"

"Oh, I don't think so, father. Not this time, thanks. You go. And do keep an eye on Ginger. She's so apt to break out unexpectedly, you know."

But Ginger, disdaining answer, with great hauteur led the way down the flagstone path that curled through the green grass.

CHAPTER II

It was a pleasant house, the old brown Methodist parsonage at Red Thrush, Iowa. While it was old in point of years, it was not called the old parsonage for its age, but because a new one was in projection.

It is true that it boasted all modern improvements, but they were improvements so obviously added to cater to a progressive generation that they fitted but inharmoniously into its general contour. The bathroom had been painstakingly installed in a corner bedroom. Electricity had been wired in, at as little expense as possible. A furnace had been introduced into a cellar room, and at that time, to facilitate the piping, the partition between parlor and sitting room had been removed to make one large living room, in strict conformity with the style.

It was the living room which boasted the second charm of the old house, in the form of a circular staircase rising grandly from the back of the room. Perhaps, in the most technical phraseology, it was not altogether a circular staircase, but it curved gracefully upward, and gave the same effect. The girls loved it.

But where the old parsonage was merely of a drab pleasantness, the new one was to be a model of modern architecture. It was to have electric refrigeration—a parsonage! Only five houses in Red Thrush had electric refrigeration—the new parsonage would be the sixth.

In the true sense of the "Discipline," the old parsonage was no parsonage at all. It was merely a house, owned by a member, and rented to the church for its pastoral use for ten dollars a month. The Methodist church had thrust its small spire above the surrounding maples when there were no more than a dozen houses in the township, a staunch little testimony to the indefatigable determination of early Methodism. The building itself had not been much in its best days, and was nothing at all in these, its worst ones. As anything but a church it would have been abandoned for practical purposes years ago.

It was the growing realization—and it takes a church group many years to grow up to this realization—of the absolute need for more ample accommodations that brought Mr. Tolliver to Red Thrush. The district superintendent had been asked to pick out a "hustler" to put the new church over on the congregation. Mr. Tolliver was known as a hustler, and so he came with his four daughters to the shabby brown parsonage in the maple grove beside the old brown church.

It was the nervous strain of overwork attendant upon rustling the new church into Red Thrush that finally resulted in a nervous reaction and physical wearing down which led at last to temporary blindness, a cloud over his eyes, a thick mist fogging his vision. Rest, the specialists in Chicago said he needed, good food, good air, a general building-up. The eyes would be all right, when he was all right. He must take it easy for a while. And so his eyes were carefully bandaged from even the faintest light, to insure complete relaxation and freedom from strain, but his entire system must gain strength in order to feed strength to the weakened members. His body must rest. His mind must rest. His intense and eager spirit must rest.

But before this catastrophe, the church was an assured fact. Within a few weeks, by the first of September at latest, it would be ready for its formal opening. The new parsonage existed in blue print. After all, a few months of blindness was a small price to pay for this achievement.

Freedom from worry, the doctors promised, complete rest and mental ease would soon restore his sight, and Mr. Tolliver, although greatly handicapped in his work, did not worry as to the final outcome. True, upon his first visit to the doctors, some three months previous, they had thought a month's time would be amply sufficient for his recovery, and at the end of the month the mist was still dark upon him. Another month, and still the mist. He should have returned some days ago for a third examination and treatment, but the financial situation in the parsonage was such as to render this impossible. He told himself there was no hurry, he would go soon. For what with the travel, and hotel expenses, and medical treatments, the burden of his misfortune was more financial than physical.

But all this was only for a short time. When the new church was a fact accomplished, he felt it would be easier for his ardent spirit to find the rest that would mean restoration for his eyes. He felt no sort of resentment for his affliction. He got on very well. The girls were good, they helped him greatly. The members were patient, full of sympathy, because they loved him. He knew his Bible from cover to cover, and his every thought was centered upon his work, so that his sermons did not deteriorate. Just a little rest, freedom from killing worry. If only there were more money!

If the girls felt anxiety on his account, bravely they gave no sign. A hundred dollars a month is not a great deal of money on which to support a family and maintain three daughters in school. And Mr. Tolliver had never relinquished it's old custom of tithing—a tenth of his mite for the Lord. If sometimes the girls felt that ten dollars a month could better be spared from the church than from the parsonage, that the Lord in His affluence might better be deprived than the pastor in his poverty, they did not complain. Ellen thought about it, of course, for she was turbulent, given to turbulent thoughts. It was her birth which had cost the home its mother. Perhaps it was sorry knowledge of what she had cost the family that stirred her to a great eagerness to do something for them, that determined her to carry life before her with a high and triumphant hand. Perhaps it was only her youth, for she was not yet seventeen. It was for this turbulence of hers that she was known as Ginger Ella.

Helen, who was twenty-three years old, after two years of training at the normal school, had served for two years as a teacher in a neighboring town. Her small check coming into the parsonage every month had meant something almost akin to richness, until the unaccustomed expense of medical treatments had made such voracious demands upon them. Now the twins also were ready to go into the normal school for training in the fall. Ginger felt that it was a real extravagance on the part of the family to assume the expense of educating Marjory to teach school. That money might better be saved. Marjory was beautiful. The obvious end of beauty is marriage to great fortune. From her earliest childhood, in her queer, small heart, Ginger Ella had sacredly dedicated her beautiful sister to that high estate. She would enrich the family by marriage.

In her inexperienced youth, Ginger divided all men broadly into three general groups—regular men, romantic figures and base pretenders. Regular men were like her father, settled, urbane, and immune to sex. Like Eddy Jackson. Ginger called him a regular.

Eddy Jackson had been one of their first friends when the Tolliver came to Red Thrush. He was a farmer. Not but Ginger called what Eddy Jackson did farming. The neighbors did not call it that, either. Ginger Ella called it playing. They called it kid-gloving. Eddy Jackson was an agriculturist, an experimentalist. He was of the new school, one of those who studies the land as a mechanic studies his tools. The neighbors laughed at what they called his high-dinkuses—but the fact that he made, in spot cash, every year, nearly twice as much money as they did from the same amount of land, gave him a certain authority among them. They said he was lucky, but they went to him for advice.

There was a long low building on his farm which Ginger called the sacred shed. Eddy Jackson called it the lab. And there, with microscopes and plates and curious tubes and queer liquids and funny little boxes and bottles and cans of sand and soil, Eddy Jackson did strange things, with soil, with seeds and sprouts.

Often, during the summer, young men, students from the state universities, came and stayed at the farm—which Eddy called Pay Dirt—and hobnobbed about with him fraternally. But when Eddy told them to do anything, they obeyed as if they were servants. And so they were. But not the servants of Eddy Jackson—servants of the soil, of the state, the great farming state of Iowa.

So Eddy Jackson, for all his youth and his sometimes flippant way of dealing with serious subjects, fitted into Ginger's classification as regular—just like her father. He never waxed sentimental. He never succumbed to what she bitterly termed "pawing." He went about with Helen until Professor Langley attained the heights of monopoly in her time as well as her affection, and then he obligingly transferred his attentions to the twins, taking them interchangeably according to the occasion, or both together, and sometimes, although she always protested, Ginger herself.

Reveals Simple Method of "Invisible" Writing

An ex-convict who spent 15 terms in prison, recently visited the office of the London Daily Chronicle, and left a letter purporting to reveal a secret method of invisible writing by means of which prisoners were able to communicate with friends outside. In the letter he claims that this was the method employed by two prisoners who committed suicide, when, as stated at the time, they were able to send a request to friends to forward them poisoned sandwiches under the system which enables prisoners on remand to receive food from outside. The letter continues: "In this letter is the method under which they sent out their messages. Can you find it?"

The explanation and a test of the trick were finally volunteered. In the blank spaces of the letter the ex-convict had penned an invisible message by dipping the pen nib in his mouth and writing with saliva. Lightly done, this cannot be seen by the naked eye. To reveal the writing all that had to be done is to rub ordinary ink over the blank space, blot in quickly and the invisible words stand out like ordinary penmanship.

Lesson for November 24

THE HIGHER PATRIOTISM

LESSON TEXT—Jonah 1:1-3; 3:1-5; 4:5-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Love for Everybody.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Love for Everybody.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Is True Patriotism?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Patriotism and Internationalism.

The lesson committee has rightly suggested the entire book of Jonah as the basis of our study. The topic selected by the committee may seem a little strained. It will hardly do to call the spirit which moved Jonah to preach to the Ninevites, patriotism; rather, we should recognize it as the passion of a missionary going forth with the message of God, calling upon men to repent and turn to Him. Patriotism means love for one's country, while the spirit of the missionary is passionate love for lost men of all countries.

I. Jonah's Call and Commission (1:1, 2).

Jonah, a Jew, was called to go and preach repentance to a Gentile city. In a real sense, salvation is of the Jews. In the seed of Abraham all nations of the earth shall be blessed (Gen. 12:1, 2). The story of Jonah graphically portrays the history of Israel as a nation. God separated Israel to be the channel through which His mercy and salvation were to be carried to all the nations of the earth. They, like Jonah, have been recreant to duty. Because of this God has caused them to be swallowed up by the nations, who will one day in the future spue them out upon dry ground, Palestine. After chastisement they, like Jonah, will discharge their obligation and nations will repent and turn to God.

II. Jonah's Flight From Duty (1:3).

He turned his back upon God and attempted to flee from His presence. He went in the opposite direction to which he was sent. He did not believe in foreign missions. In the same way, Israel has become an apostate people, and instead of a blessing has become a burden and curse to the nations.

III. Jonah's Correction (1:4-2:10).

1. Overtaken by a storm (1:5).

Trouble soon came upon the disobedient servant of God. So with the Jews, misfortune after misfortune, storm after storm have overtaken them because they turned from God. They are now tossed about by the nations. They, like Jonah, are asleep.

2. Cast overboard (1:15).

In their perplexity the sailors cast lots and the lot fell upon Jonah. According to his own direction they did this. God had prepared a great fish which swallowed Jonah.

3. Jonah's deliverance (ch. 2).

Jonah in his affliction turned to God and prayed (James 5:13).

God miraculously preserved him while in the belly of the fish. God has miraculously preserved Israel while in the heart of the nations. The fish could not digest Jonah, neither can the nations assimilate Israel. Jonah repented while in the fish. So Israel will repent as she goes into the great tribulation. God made the fish to vomit out Jonah. So He will at the proper time cause the nations to cast out Israel.

IV. Jonah's Commission Renewed. (3:1-10).

Although Israel has been rebellious and failed in the execution of her commission, she will repent and go forward to fulfill her commission in preaching the gospel to the nations of the earth observe.

1. The field of his ministry (v. 3).

It was to be the great Gentile city Nineveh.

2. His message (v. 4).

He was instructed to "preach the preaching" which God had commissioned him to utter—Nineveh was to be overthrown within forty days.

3. Effect upon the people of Nineveh (vv 5-10).

They repented and sued for pardon. In the time to come the Gentile nations will repent of their sins when the gospel of the kingdom is preached unto them by the Jews.

V. Jonah's Behavior (4:1-11).

1. His displeasure (vv 1-3).

He now makes known the real reason for his flight from duty. He knew that the gracious God would spare the people who repented.

2. God reproves Jonah (vv. 4-11).

By means of the gourd God shows him his error. The closing scene affords a striking example of the patience and pity of God in contrast with the hard-heartedness of man.

Hidden Gold Found

A story is told of a man whose home and mill, all that he had in the world, were swept away by floods. But, as he stood on the scene of his loss, after the water had subsided, broken-hearted and discouraged, he saw something shining in the bank, which the water had washed bare. It was gold. The flood which had bereaved him, had made him rich. "Sorrow strips off loved possessions, but reveals the treasures of the love of God."

Needless Pain!

The man who wouldn't drive his motorcar half a mile when it's out of order, will often drive his brain all day with a head that's throbbing.

Such punishment isn't very good for one's nerves! It's unwise, and it's unnecessary. A tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin will relieve a headache every time. So, remember this accepted antidote for pain, and spare yourself a lot of needless suffering. Read the proven directions and you'll discover many valuable uses for these tablets. For headaches; to check colds. To ease a sore throat and reduce the infection. For relieving neuralgic, neuritic, rheumatic pain.

People used to wonder if Bayer Aspirin was harmful. The doctors answered that question years ago. It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled! For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Bayer Aspirin for immediate relief.

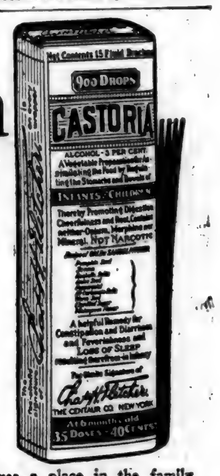
Children Cry for it



Children hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and harmless as the recipe reads. (The wrapper tells you just what Castoria contains.)

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, use it to keep the system from clogging. Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your child is grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a boy in his teens. With this special children's remedy handy, you need never risk giving a boy or girl medicine meant for grown-ups.

Castoria is sold in every drug store; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

Train Makes Record Run

What is claimed to be the longest non-stop railway run ever made was recently accomplished in South America. A Beardmore-Diesel electric engine hauled a special train from Buenos Aires to Cipoletti, a distance of 775 miles, in 20 hours 37 minutes.

Glory Enough

Blinks—I have no great desire to be honored.

Night Life Gets You if You Don't Watch Out!

War Vet almost takes count, but pals help.

HOW would you like it if every two weeks you had to give up your good night's sleep, and work all night instead? This is what happened to W. H. Huggins of 90 Savannah Street, Rochester, New York. When he came back from the War, he took a night "shift" job.

"It certainly shot me all to pieces," said Mr. Huggins. "I was licked before I started. My pals noticed that the night shift got me, so during a 'lunch' period in the middle of one night one of them said to me, 'Hug, I bet I know what's the matter with you. This irregular life gets us all unless we watch out. Why don't you try Nujol? Most of the boys are onto this little health trick. Try it!'

"Well, that very night on the way home I got a bottle and within a week I felt like a different person. I wouldn't know myself. You can lick any job, even a night one, if you get the poisons out of your system regularly. Nujol sure did it for me!"

That's the great thing about Nujol. It absorbs the poisons in your system (we all have them) and cleans them out regularly. It cannot hurt you no matter how long you take it, and it forms no habit.

This kind of man wins no matter where you put him

Nujol contains no medicines or drugs. It is simply the world's most famous method of bodily lubrication.

You can get a bottle at any good drug store, in a sealed package, for less than the cost of a couple of good cigars. Begin today to prove to yourself how Nujol can help you to lick the toughest job and feel bully!

R. L. Case, of Shipshewana, former principal of our schools, was in town Sunday, taking dinner in the J. R. Shilling home. Other guests were Rev. G. D. Stoll, Mrs. Lela Northrup and son, Curtis of Spencerville, Mrs. Jennie Sechler and Merritt Sechler of St. Joe. Afternoon callers were Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Doll of Spencerville and Mr. and Mrs. Otis Fitch and children of Fort Wayne.

HIGH SCHOOL WINS ANOTHER

Pleasant Lake came down last Friday evening and received a defeat to scale of 44–20. The Pleasant Lakers were a very pleasant bunch of boys and had excellent floor work but the keen guarding of the home team kept the Lakers form scoring. Our local High Schoolers have developed considerable speed and accurate basket shooting over last year and it is predicted that the team, although short in tall timber, will make a real fast team under the able coaching of Mr. Stomm.

The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel.

TRAINING OR DISCIPLINE

"Oh, oh!" cried Brother Jack, "Dorothy May spoiled my house."

"Dorothy May," called the children's nurse in firm but kind tones, "go and sit on that bench until I say you may leave."

The little girl, with a resentful look, obeyed the nurse. "What does Jack want to play house for anyway?" she thought as she watched her small brother rearrange his benches.

"That child minds nicely," remarked a second nurse girl who sat next to Annie, the one in charge of Jack and Dorothy May.

"And that she does," replied Annie, "or I shouldn't have her in charge."

"I wish I had control over Billy like that," commented the other. "How do you do it?"

"Well," replied Annie, "I never say much and the only punishment I use is sending Dorothy May to her room or making her sit on a chair, but she knows she has to mind me."

"You may get up now," Annie turned and called to Dorothy May.

The little girl listlessly arose from her bench and wandered off toward a group of children.

"She's a queer child, though," continued Annie. "She hasn't an imagination like her brother and she doesn't know what to do with herself half the time. She's always bothering the other children."

The conversation was interrupted at this point by a child's scream. Annie got up from her seat. "Dorothy May," she called, "come back and sit on our bench."

"In trouble again," commented Annie to her companion.

In the park sitting near the two nurse girls was an old gentleman who had read three pages of his book without having taken in a sentence of what he had read. The cries of the children and the nurse girls' conversation had occupied his attention. He looked over at the little girl on the bench. "Pretty, bright looking child," he thought. "Too bad! Too bad that there isn't someone to train her instead of just disciplining her. She minds that nurse all right but I'll warrant she defies every other member of the family to make up for it." The man's eyes went back to his book but as he heard Annie's voice tell Dorothy May to get up, his thoughts wandered to the little girl again.

"Has no imagination," he repeated to himself. "Not the same kind as her brother's, at any rate." The old gentleman's thoughts wandered on. "There just isn't anything here in which she is interested; that is the trouble. All those children are too young for her. Too bad! Too bad! And I suppose her mother thinks she is having the best of care in the fresh air with a competent woman in charge. Her mother doesn't know and even if she were here maybe she couldn't see how her child is being neglected. That little girl is perhaps not quite like the average child of her age. Someone who loves her should study her and guide her energies in some positive direction. There's something she would be interested in. She may not know what it is herself as yet. Someone ought to help her find that interest instead of raising black ire in her little soul by making her sit on park benches."

The old gentleman watched the group a few moments in silence, then uttered a disgusted "Bah!" under his breath and began the page over again.

"Dorothy May," again he heard the kind but firm tones, "come sit on this bench. No, sit on this one right here," added Annie. "That old man's going."

"I certainly am," said the old gentleman to himself. "I can't endure to see again the black look in those bright young eyes. Too bad! Too bad!"

TELEPHONE PROGRESS

The work of the telephone in aiding the social and industrial progress of the world cannot be estimated.

The United States has 19,500,000 telephones and the number is increasing at the date of 800,000 annually. Each year the American people send more than 26,000,000,000 messages.

We can at a reasonable cost, speak to many great foreign cities. Only 15 per cent of the world's telephones are unconnected with the American system. In a fraction of a second a voice by telephone travels to a listener across continents and oceans.

International civilization owes the world a great debt.

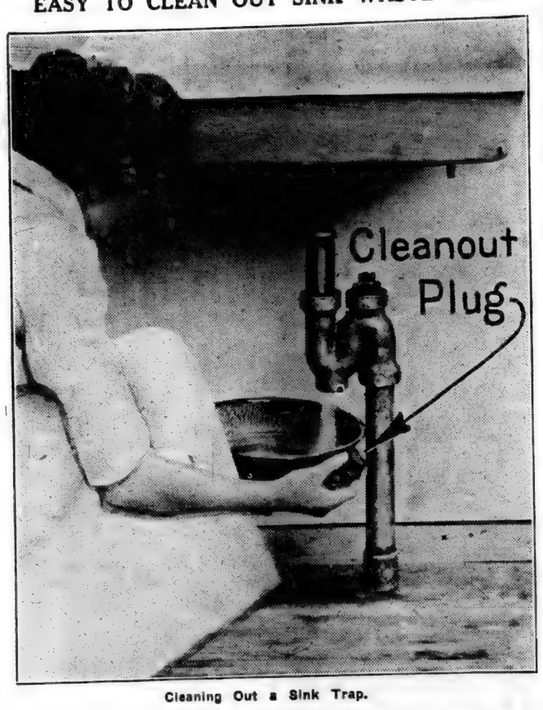
EASY TO CLEAN OUT SINK WASTE TRAP



Cleaning Out a Sink Trap.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It is advisable to clean out sink or laundry tub waste traps from time to time. Dirt collects in the bottom of them and grease adheres to the sides of the pipes. It is not hard to unscrew the cleanout plug and wash out any obstructing matter or pull it out with a wire bent to form a hook, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Grease, hair, or lint, can often be scraped out with a stick when the trap has been opened. Coffee grounds are among the commonest sources of stoppage at the trap. Melted wax used for sealing jelly glasses finds its way into the trap, and when hardened is another frequent cause of trouble. Small obstructions are often forced down or drawn up by the use of a simple rubber force cup, sometimes called "the plumber's friend," costing 30 to 50 cents. The cup is placed over the fixture outlet and the fixture is partially filled with water. The wood handle of the cup is then worked rapidly down and up, causing alternate expulsion of the water from beneath the cup and suction upward through the waste pipe and trap. Chemical solvents are sometimes needed to free the pipes. Caustic soda or potash are sometimes used. Directions for their preparation and use may be found in Farmers' Bulletin 1426-F, "Farm Plumbing."

DEAL CAREFULLY WITH ILL CHILD

Begin Early to Teach Youngsters Right Food Habits.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Training children in the right food habits can be accomplished largely by expecting them from earliest babyhood to like and eat what is set before them. At the same time the mother has definite responsibilities in connection with the child's food. It must be of the right sort, temptingly prepared and served, so that it is attractive in color, odor, and flavor. It must be served at regular times and there must be no interruptions or distractions. Small portions should be given so that the child can clear his plate without discouragement. The mother must especially learn to discriminate between a genuinely upset appetite and mere finickiness.

Lack of appetite, says a specialist in child training of the bureau of home economics, indicates that something is wrong. Constipation, sometimes arising from improper eating, is an all too common cause. Sufficient emptying of the bowels is essential to keeping up the desire to eat. It is encouraged by drinking plenty of water and by the use of vegetables and fruits in the diet. Fortunately, these foods are all good sources of the vitamine that increases the appetite.

Fatigue and approaching illness interfere with the normal desire to eat. The child who is tired needs a short rest without sleep just before the meal hour, and very small portions of food when he comes to the table.

Behavior upsets near or during the meal often destroy the appetite. The frightened, angry, or disappointed child is likely to have no interest in food or to refuse it violently. Parents must handle emotionally disturbed children carefully. Otherwise, refusals will be aggravated, or unpleasant memories will become attached to the foods in that meal.

Allow the ill, tired, or upset child to miss a meal or to eat lightly while he is temporarily out of order, and place no emphasis on refusals at such times. He may need rest or wholesome activity to restore his appetite. If poor appetite persists in spite of all efforts, consult a physician as to the cause.

These situations are very different from obvious devices children sometimes use to avoid eating certain foods or to gain the center of attention. Games to induce eating are fruitless in the long run. Better let the child go hungry for a long enough interval to bring back a normal healthy appetite. Piecing or eating between meals is sometimes responsible for poor appetite and should be consistently discouraged. However, for some children a little light food, such as milk or orange juice and a cracker may be needed as a sort of extra meal about mid-morning or mid-afternoon. When such lunches seem desirable they should be given at absolutely regular times, but if they interfere with interest in the three usual meals they should be discontinued.

Split Pea Soup Is Great Favorite on Big Liners

If you were fortunate enough to make an ocean voyage this past summer you probably enjoyed pea soup many times, for it is a great favorite on ocean liners. The same reason for having it often on the sea holds good for the household, namely, that dried split peas can be stored easily and for a considerable length of time, so that the principal ingredients for making this delicious soup may always be kept on hand. In case you have never tried to make pea soup, here is a recipe from the bureau of home economics. Note that the soup must be begun the night before it is wanted, by soaking the peas. The final touch—a thin slice of lemon covered with chopped parsley on each plate as it goes to the table, is a suggestion that can be applied to a number of other soups and which adds to the flavor to make them tasty.

Split Pea Soup.

2 cups green split peas.	1 large onion, sliced.
2 quarts water	2 tsp. salt or to taste.
1 pint milk or 1 cup milk and 1 cup cream.	2 tbs. flour
¼ pound salt pork, sliced.	2 tbs. butter
	Dash of pepper

Pick over the peas and wash them well. Soak overnight in one quart of water. In the morning, add the remaining water, the salt pork, and the onion. Simmer covered about one and one-half hours or until the peas are soft. Remove the pork, press the peas and onion through a fine sieve, and be careful to save all the liquid. Brown the butter, add the flour, and mix until well blended. Pour in the milk and stir until thickened. Mix with the strained peas and serve when hot. Lay a thin slice of lemon with finely chopped parsley over the top in each plate of soup just before it goes onto the table.

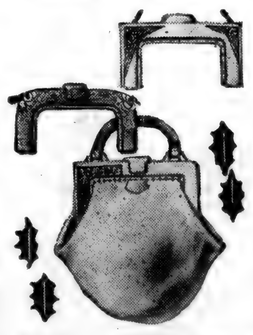
Directions for Washing Various Silk Garments

Silk manufacturers have given considerable attention to the matter of dyeing their products in such a way that they can be washed. While it has been found possible to use certain dyes that will withstand high temperatures, the silk itself suffers if put into too hot water. Both colors and fabric come out best when lukewarm water is used for washing.

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture gives these directions for washing silk garments of any kind: Use lukewarm and neutral soapsuds. Do not rub hard. Squeeze and work the garments in the suds. Do not twist the fabric. Rinse thoroughly in water of the same temperature, and remove the water finally by squeezing and patting between dry towels. Dry as quickly as possible, but never in the sun. Silk hose should not be ironed, and many other knit silk garments do not need pressing. For crepe de chine and other woven silks, use a warm, but not hot, iron, and protect the fabric with cheesecloth. The fabric should be evenly damp, but not wet. To keep pongee silk from spotting, iron it dry.

USEFUL CHRISTMAS PRESENTS TO MAKE OR TO PURCHASE

Carved Wood Mountings



Handbag or pocketbook frames of carved wood! Aye, there's an idea for bewildered minds who are seeking out-of-the ordinary Christmas suggestions. Too chic for words are these little mountings made of hard-as-ivory hand-polished and hand-carved wood. Their lovely natural brown tones tune in with the fashionable costume browns for this season. The bag which may be made of felt or velvet or any chosen fabric is sewed to the frame in the usual way, a row of perforations being made in the wood for the stitches.

Italian Leathercraft

In beautiful Italy where art ever survives, hosts of skilled craftsmen are busy creating intriguing handbags of finely wrought leather. Almost unprecedented enthusiasm marks the present vogue for bags of the type illustrated, the leather of which they are made being hand illuminated and tooled in the inimitable Italian way. Some have zipper fastenings and leather-laced edges. Others are mounted on rare frames with handles. No Christmas gift suggestion one may make will outrival that of one of these choice bags. One of the many attractions of these bags is that they are obtainable in all the fashionable costume colors.

For the Little Folks

Here is where work is made play for the children. The cunning "dolled up" coat-hangers and hat stands which are so numerous in holiday displays, are enough to train any wee boy or girl to be orderly. Which is a hint to doting parents and relations as to "what to give" the little folks for Christmas.

Artful Glass Toiletries

If you're asking what's "smart" to give for Christmas, decorated glass toiletries is the answer. A bottle for every lotion or medicine, cold cream jars, powder boxes, soap dishes. Oh! there's no end to the intriguing articles to be had, each prettily painted, many in dainty flowers, others adopting unique designs like the little fish set in the picture.

ELEGANCE IN VELVET AND FUR; SUMPTUOUS FOX FUR NECKPIECES

Afternoon Outdoor Costume.

WHEN it comes to luxury and novelty, fashion is traveling at a terrific pace these days. Formal suits and ensembles are especially luring style creators into an orgy of opulence and intriguing detail, the like of which has not been equaled for many a season past.

Seeing that there is no surer way of arriving at a goal of super-elegance and flattering effect than to form an alliance between rich velvet and handsome fur, designers are doing just that. In consequence, the style program for autumn and winter, so far as formal, dressy suits and ensembles are concerned, is largely a matter of superbly furred velvet, stylized with all the artistry, the skill, and imagination which genius can command.

As an example par-excellence of the trend to elegance in the afternoon outdoor costume, attention is called to the handsome model in the upper picture. "Raisin" is the color Patou favors for this formal ensemble of velvet with collar and muff of wolf. The soft feminine hues are accomplished with a novel hipline drape which fastens to one side.

Color is an outstanding fascination of the velvet suit or ensemble as presented this season. Such delectable rich tones as raisin, blueberry and fuchsia are given prominence, also deep beautiful greens are featured. Likewise beguiling browns, wines and related shades. Of course it goes without saying that black retains its prestige in no lessening degree.

The new fur trimmings place accent on the muff. This very fashionable item is conspicuously stressed not only in connection with dressy velvet ensembles, but many of the new er cloth coats boast an accompanying muff which matches their fur trimmings.

As the model in the picture bears witness, the designing of the muff be-

In vanity fair furs of almost overawing sumptuousness are crowding the autumn and winter fashion scene. It matters not whether one considers the question from the standpoint of the all-fur coat, or of the fur-trimmed cloth or velvet suit or ensemble, or of the smartly-furred cloth coat, the fact remains, that not in the memory of this generation have furs been so gorgeous, so beautiful, so luxurious as fashion now presents them. Nor is the word picture too extravagantly drawn, since it must measure up to the magnificence of such regal furs as two of filmland's prettiest stars, Barbara Kent (standing) and Mary Nolan wore when they posed for their photographs as reproduced below.

The imposing double fox scarf to the left tells not only a story of fur elegance, but it is especially interesting in that it so handsomely interprets fashion's present hobby—the black-and-white theme. This sumptuous neckpiece complements a charming black-and-white suit which is youthfully styled with a short jacket and plaited skirt. The effect is very chic.

With an afternoon gown of white crepe satin, Miss Nolan wears a most lovely white fox fur, which is enough to excite the envy of any woman who aspires to fur aristocracy. The gown is very beautiful, being elaborated with exquisite French hand embroidery and lace.

There is much to be said about fur neckpieces which cannot be told in a few short paragraphs. One of the outstanding vogues is that of fur "sets," ensembles as it were, consisting of neckpiece and matching muff, speaks fascinating originality. That designers are making the most of the muff vogue is evidenced on every side. With becoming modesty the first muffs made their appearance in tiny form but already the vogue has developed into a program of unique and captivating styles which are entirely a matter of the resourcefulness of the designer. In the instance of the muff illustrated, fur trims the velvet, but often the order is reversed and a huge velvet bow elaborates the muff which itself is made of the fur.

and sometimes, if the fur be of flat fabric type, including a pocketbook, also a little hat into the making of which enters in a bit of the fur.

The thing which fascinates about the new fur ensembles is their cunning originality. They present a fascinating field of design, of infinite possibilities. Muffs are either large or small which accompany fanciful dressy sets, but with the furred cloth or velvet coat, the muff is usually quite tiny.

Weak After Operation

"About five months ago, following an operation for appendicitis I did not gain strength enough to be up and about. My mother and sister advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have taken five bottles and it has helped me to get strong so I can do my own housework now. I have recommended it to several friends who have been weak and rundown."—Mrs. Oscar Otsam, Box 474, Thief River Falls, Minn.

WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph. D., LL. D.

The Truth About Vitamines

UNTIL recently no one had ever seen a vitamine, nor had the chemical laboratory isolated one; sixteen years ago no one had ever heard of one. And yet a real science of food is impossible without a knowledge of vitamines. Without vitamines (or something just as good) there is no normal growth, health, reproduction, or living out the span of life.

Scurvy was known to the ancient Greeks, and through the centuries ravaged armies, crews of ships, and explorers cut off from fresh fruit and vegetables; seven years ago no one suspected the existence of the anti-scorbutic vitamine. Thousands of children have hobbled out a pitiable existence on a rickety frame; until recently no one suspected it was because of lack of a specific mysterious antirachitic vitamine now known to exist in certain foods. About thirty years ago it was known that chickens fed on polished rice developed beri-beri, and that the same chickens fed on whole rice recovered; but no one then suspected the existence of an antineuritic vitamine in the polishings of rice or in milk.

Innumerable experiments have now proved the existence of four, and possibly five, vitamines, and their necessity for human life and the metabolism of all food. Because of their minute amounts, their close association with the complex food substances, their proneness to disappear under manipulation, and because no good controls could be devised in testing, they defied isolation. But, by relying on feeding and by huge industry and patience, definite results have been obtained—and civilization again catches up with desiccated and tin-canned progress. In other words the human body could find all it needed in the old vegetable garden and shambles; when food began to be refined, the vitamines were thrown out with the screenings.

Fat-soluble A (because soluble in fat), or antirachitic vitamine, is probably first in importance. All animals, experimentally treated, die if their diet contains no vitamine A. It is presumably necessary for all higher animal life. It is known to be necessary for growth. Rachitic children presumably suffer from lack, among other things, of vitamine A. With vitamine A their bones assume normal growth. Rachitic children were numerous in parts of Europe during the World war; when the milk supply became normal the rickets disappeared.

Vitamine A abounds in milk, cream, butter, egg yolk, cod-liver oil, and presumably all animal fat except pork. It is less abundant in spinach, tomatoes, cabbage and lettuce. It is not destroyed by ordinary cooking, but is destroyed by great heat.

Water-soluble B, or antineuritic vitamine, is found in eggs and seeds. It is essential to growth, and lack of it is known to produce beri-beri. Seidell has recently isolated in nearly pure form from brewers' yeast, a substance which has antineuritic properties. Presumably it is vitamine B.

Water soluble C, or antiscorbutic vitamine, has thus far defied isolation in any form. It is easily destroyed by alkalies and by oxidation. It is found especially in lemons, oranges and tomatoes; also in all fruits, leaves, and root vegetables. Without such foods, scurvy. Vitamine D, known to accelerate growth, is probably identical with bios, a substance that promotes the growth of the yeast plant. Its molecule consists of five atoms of carbon, eleven of hydrogen, one of nitrogen, and three of oxygen. Enough bios to cover a pin-point will restore normal growth in a young animal stunted by a diet which does not have proper vitamines.

Vitamine X is the latest. Evans has been experimenting with rats. If they get no vitamine X, they become sterile. He has also proved that natural foods contain a substance or substances essential for the normal functioning of the mammary gland. But certain substances (for example, vegetable oils) which promote fecundity do not necessarily improve lactation.

In short, there are foods and foods: water, mineral salts, carbohydrates, fats, proteins, vitamines. Is sunlight a "food" also? It depends. Children and hogs that play in the sun need no antirachitic vitamine; they do not develop rickets. Light is a marvelous oxidizing agent. Foods with no known vitamine A can, by ultra-violet radiation, become possessed of antirachitic property. These same rays get into our skin and "sunburn" us; they will paralyze an ameba in a quarter of a second, or kill and tear its body like a bolt of lightning in three seconds.

How much of this or how much of that is good or necessary or lethal for us is a kind of knowledge that did not seriously trouble our remote ancestors, but which, with our increasing tendency to get away from cows, chickens, and gardens, and from natural conditions in general, becomes of first-rate importance. There was a time when a cook was a cook, good or bad as the case might be; today a cook should be a first-class chemist, the kitchen a chemical laboratory.

Low Temperature Right for Fruit

Important Factor in Best Storage of Many Different Products.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Temperature plays a most important part in the storage of many fruits that are shipped to market from distant areas of production. Most fruits keep well only within a rather limited range of temperature. With meats and dairy products the important thing is to keep them cold enough, but many fruits are injured seriously by a temperature only a few degrees lower than the most favorable temperature for storage.

Life Processes.

"The life processes of fruits and vegetables," says Dr. Lon A. Hawkins, of the United States Department of Agriculture, in explaining this fact, "are chemical or physical in nature and are governed by chemical and physical laws. According to Van Hoft's law, the rate of a chemical reaction is doubled or trebled for each 18 degrees F. rise in temperature. The rate at which the life processes of fruits and vegetables proceed in storage increases as temperature rises."

Experience With Pears.

Doctor Hawkins illustrates the point by giving experience with Bartlett pears. "As a rule," he says, "this fruit will keep twice as long at 31 degrees as at 36 degrees twice as long at 36 degrees as at 43 degrees, and twice as long at this temperature as at 53 degrees. In other words, it will keep about eight times as long at 31 degrees as at 53 degrees. At 65 degrees, however, the fruit keeps about as long as at 53 degrees."

Secret of Making Good Silage Is to Exclude Air

The secret of making good silage is to have all the air excluded. For this reason the silage must not be too dry, and one or two men in the silo should be kept busy distributing and tramping. When filling, the material around the wall should be kept higher than the rest and thoroughly tramped. Otherwise molding around the edge is apt to result.

The preservation of silage is due to three factors—pressure, heat and acid. The pressure excludes the air. The heat due to fermentation pasteurizes the silage, killing many of the spoiling molds. The acid is also detrimental to many of the spoiling molds.

Kill Mediterranean Fly by Cooling All Fruit

The Department of Agriculture now plans to fight the Mediterranean fruit fly by cooling fruit to a temperature of 28 degrees for five hours followed by holding it for about five days at a temperature of 30 degrees. Another treatment is to hold the fruit at 110 degrees for eight hours. Both the high and low temperatures are fatal to the eggs or larvae of the fly. It is also feasible to attain either the maximum or minimum temperatures in the existing practices of handling citrus fruits.

Cream for Churning

The best way to hold cream on the farm where ice is not available is to keep it in a water tank in a building near the well. A good way is to have a small water tank to keep the cream and then to pump the water for the stock tank through this tank. This will change the water in the cream tank often and keep it cooler. The best temperature to hold cream is between 50 and 60 degrees Fahrenheit. When it is churned it should have about one-half of 1 per cent acid.

Agricultural Hints

The earlier the plowing for wheat, the better the crop.

A shelter belt enhances the value of the entire farm property.

Proper cleaning and repairing of harness may double or treble the period of its usefulness.

For next year's clover to be seeded in wheat on sour soils, apply lime soon after the land is plowed.

It pays to grade and standardize farm products. They sell for a better price and are more in demand.

Eradication of abortion from a herd presents a difficult problem, but can be accomplished by means of the blood tests.

Trees where poultry roosts soon become infested with mites, which can't be eradicated as easily as from a shelter.

Calves which are being fattened during the winter must be well fed to be ready for market next spring or early summer.

Three points of a good silo are: strong walls, smooth inside, and tightness enough to keep the juice in and the air out.

• • •

In handling the farm gardens it is probably just as well to burn all the crop residues, rather than to turn them under.

Organization Need of Honey Industry

Co-operative Marketing Is Necessary, Says Expert.

The honey industry needs organization, says M. P. Rasmussen of the New York State College of Agriculture.

"Further development of co-operative marketing associations among beekeepers is necessary to meet effectively problems confronting the honey industry. Local co-operatives are needed to establish local prices and grades. Regional co-operatives are needed for warehousing, processing and merchandising honey. A natonal co-operative, or possibly a federation of regional co-operatives is needed to advertise honey, establish standards, develop export outlets, and obtain needed legislation.

"Tell the man who eats it about the healthfulness and food value of honey. This offers the most promising solution of the honey marketing problem. The unorganized state of the honey industry makes this step extremely difficult, and unless honey is standardized, it will be difficult to increase demand for honey to any appreciable extent.

"Honey is now retailed to the consumer in containers of such capacity and type as to impress the consumer with the fact that honey is a luxury. Honey can and should be sold in cheap tin and large glass containers in quantities readily recognized by the consumer—not less than one pound or multiples thereof. Corn sirup outsells honey ten to one and is put up in only five sizes, all in tin cans."

Many Dairy Bulls Sold Before Value Is Known

Too many dairy bulls are disposed of before their breeding value is known, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. A study has just been made of the ages at which "proved" bulls were disposed of in one state. No bulls disposed of for breeding purposes, or for injury or other natural causes, were included in the study.

Of the 124 bulls studied, 88, or 71 per cent, were disposed of before the age of five years. One hundred and seventeen, or about 94 per cent, were disposed of before the age of eight years. Two bulls were kept until eleven years of age and one bull until fourteen years old.

Usually a bull will be five years old or older by the time he is proved. The disposing of such a large percentage at an earlier age, or before their true value can be ascertained by means of dam and daughter comparisons, is one of the big losses of the dairy industry.

Roofing Cement Used to Advantage With Silage

There are several ways in which roll roofing and roofing cement can be used to advantage in filling the silo. Often the silage spoils in the pit because of bad leaks where the staves part fits onto the top of the pit and because the pit wall may have no square a shoulder that the silage does not settle into the pit properly.

A liberal use of trowel roofing cement around the bottom of the staves will remedy any leaks. If there is a square shoulder, it may be remedied by sloping up the square shoulder by building in with concrete mortar, or by filling in with stiff clay mortar and then fastening a strip of roll roofing around the bottom of the staves so that the lower edge hangs just below the top of the pit wall.

Rigid Culling of Aged Ewes to Improve Wool

Quantity may go hand in hand with quality in wool production. Investigations by the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, show that length of staple and weight of clean wool per fleece are associated with superior quality. The inheritance of the sheep, its feed, management, and seasonal environment are the most important factors that influence quality and quantity of wool. Successful sheep raisers have found that rigid culling of aged ewes and light producers is a good practice for the immediate improvement of their flocks.

Good Winter Management of Cows Pays Dividends

Good winter management of the cowherd will pay big dividends in the spring calf crop. Proper feeding of the cows during the winter is necessary to insure the birth of strong calves. For this purpose, nothing excels good legume hay such as alfalfa and clover. If the cows have all the dry fodder or silage or preferably both that they want with four or five pounds of alfalfa or clover hay per head daily, their needs will be supplied. If preferred, a pound to a pound and a half of linseed or cottonseed cake or meal may be used in place of the legume hay.

Origin of Stocks

The question of stocks for apple trees has attracted much more attention abroad than in this country. It has long been the custom in England for growers to distinguish between types of stock of different habit, such as dwarf Paradise stocks, semi-dwarf stocks like Doucin, vigorous Paradise stocks, etc. The result has been that these stocks have been propagated for years, until now pure lines of several types exist.

"I Won A $25 Prize For A Loaf of Bread At Our County Farmer's Institute"

Women Now Find It Easy To Bake Prize Bread and Pastry

WOMEN all over the country are now saying: "No longer is there need for worry about baking results. Now you can be sure of success with pies and cakes, bread and biscuits."

They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Melted Granite Saves Labor

To save the tedious labor of chiseling away granite foundation blocks on which rests the county morgue at Pittsburgh, Pa., contractors planning to move the structure melted the granite rocks, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The chiseling operation would have required two months, but the granite was transformed into molten lava in less than one month. An oxygen welder first was applied to the granite, eating out a small hole, after which a steel pipe attached to an oxygen tank was inserted in the hole and oxygen released into it. When the pipe started to melt, chemical reaction also served to melt the granite.

Apperception

The Herbartian theory of apperception states that mental activity consists in the clash of two factors that unite to form experience. Herbert conceives them to be, on the one hand, a new datum for experience and, on the other, the mass of organized experience through which the new datum obtains meaning and interest. The mental resultant of previous experience wherewith we meet and receive a new experience is termed apperceptive or apperception masses.

Sermon for Today

By Rev. H. J. Studabaker

Text: I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.

Our years come and go; all about us is changing, there is nothing permanent in this world, all subject to change and decay. But one never changeth: He abideth and is always the same. Our blessed and adorable Lord remaineth as he is always has been and always well be. What he said to Joshua long ago, is as true today as it was then, "I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee."

What Isaiah declared of him has not changed since then, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged!"

All His promises are unchangeable as He is. Several thousand years ago he spoke to his people through his chosen instrument words of cheer and comfort: "Fear not, I will help thee. Be not dismayed, for I am thy God." He still speaks thus to his own and assures them of his faithfulness and of his power. He is the same yesterday, today and forever. Of him it is written, "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of Thy hands."

As our years come and go and the end of our earthly pilgrimage draws nearer, our need, as his people, is to draw closer to himself and to find out our all, our joy, our help, our strength and our comfort only in him.

He is enough for the sorrows, trials and troubles of his people. He is all-sufficient to sustain us in all circumstances, in the perplexing experience often so mysterious. He announced beforehand that his own should have tribulations in the world. Often the sufferings and trials of God's children are unexplainable; they are mysteries which we cannot fully understand now. He himself afflicted in all our afflictions, well may we sing triumphantly, "Hallelujah, what a Saviour, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me."

Like the poor woman who laid upon a bed of sickness and in want, when she was asked what her needs were, she answered, "I have Christ, what need I more?" He is enough.

And what will it be when we are at last with him? In eternity we shall be able in his fellowship in never-ending glory. May we then find him daily the all-sufficient ONE. This is our need and in this is our strength.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

FOWLS AND SNAKE BITES

IN MANY parts of the country the flesh of a fowl is regarded as a sure cure for snake-bite; in fact, the superstition is rather general. There are sections also where the same "folk-medicine" is recommended for rheumatism, shingles, scarlet fever and diphtheria.

There are several variations of the superstition: In some sections it is insisted that the application made should be the raw and bleeding flesh of a fowl which has been stunned and is still alive, while in others it is sufficient that the fowl be newly killed. This superstition should read "a cock" instead of a "fowl," and there are places where they still say that a cock should be used in case of a man and a hen in case a woman is to be cured.

The origin of the superstition is easily seen in the relation which the cock bore in Greek mythology to Aesculapius, the god of medicine and the son of Apollo, the sun-god. The cock's connection with the sun, whose first beams he hails with his crowing, made him a particularly acceptable and appropriate offering to Apollo's son.

"Sacrifice a cock to Aesculapius" were the last words of Socrates. Though the ages have broadened the superstition a little so that we no longer are particular as to the sex of the fowl sacrificed, yet when we attempt to cure disease or snake-bite by the application of the flesh of a newly killed fowl we are, in effect, sacrificing a cock to Aesculapius in the hope that the old Greek god will accept the sacrifice and give relief.

Got Idea From Hoop Skirts

One can hardly see any connection between hoop skirts and the electrical industry, but one may be traced, strangely enough, which took place in the early days of the electrical development. The first cables were not insulated satisfactorily till Walter T. Glover, an Englishman who braided steel hoops with cotton, had an inspiration. Crinolines were going out—so was his business. So he used his machinery for insulating copper wire with cotton braid, and he soon had no cause to regret the passing of the crinoline.

Fish and Game Cub Information

FISCAL YEAR OF THE STATE ENDED SEPTEMBER 30TH

The fiscal year of the State ended September 30th. The annual report of the Division of Fish and Game will show receipts of $334,015.56, with disbursements of $295,169.54; amount of receipts over disbursements, $38,846.02. The receipts for the year were $1,015. 68 short of those for the previous year. The Division suffered a serious loss in receipts in the fall and winter of 1928, due to rabbit hunters failing to go afield, widespread publicity having been circulated that rabbits were affected with disease. This later was found to be greatly exaggerated. Approximately 32,000 less licenses were issued during the hunting season, but this shortage was nearly made by increased numbers issued to fishermen in the spring and summer in 1929. The total number of hunting and fishing licenses issued to residents and non-residents was 320,674, compared to 321,257 the year previous. This is a difference of 583. The following shows the number of licenses, permits and certificates issued in the fiscal year just closed:

Resident hunting, fishing and trapping licenses, 309,191.

Non-resident fishing licenses, 11,015.

Non-resident hunting, fishing and trapping, 468.

Free permanent permits to soldiers, sailors and marines, 11,639.

Resident licenses to take mussels, 770.

Non-resident licenses to take mussels, 31.

Wabash River Commercial fishing licenses, 56.

Dog kennel licenses, 533.

Lake Michigan commercial fishing licenses, 20.

Scientific permits to collect birds and eggs, 15.

Ferret permits to drive out rats, 3.

Certificates of inspection, (breeders' permits,) 697.

Permits to kill rabbits doing damage, 7.

Taxidermist's permits, (for migratory birds,) 3.

Output of the State's 5 Fish Hatcheries

The total number of fish propagated and delivered to applicants from the 5 State fish hatcheries in the fiscal year 1929 was 9,206,410, made up of the following:

Black bass small-mouth fingerlings, 252,285.

Black bass large-mouth fingerlings, 462,075.

Rock bass fingerlings, 94,250.

Bluegill fingerlings, 389,450.

Crappie fingerlings, 62,550.

Red-eared sunfish fingerlings, 11,000.

Channel catfish fingerlings, 22,700.

Bullhead catfish fingerlings, 700.

Yellow perch fingerlings, 38,400.

Yellow perch fry, 1,305,000.

Pike perch fry, 6,568,000.

Total fish delivered to applicants, 9,206,410.

Number of applications, 1,745.

Number counties to which distributions were made, 87.

Estimated value of output, $69,000.00.

Fish Rescued

In the fiscal year 86,610 game fish were salvaged as follows: crappie, 8,035; bluegills, 56,775; black bass, 2,410; rock bass, 1,535; catfish, 17,535; sunfish, 260; other species, 60; total, 86,610. From 15 to 20 per cent were adultts, the balance fingerlings. The men engaged in this work also destroyed 291 gar and 51 dogfish. No record was kept of the rough fish rescued. Most of the fish were returned to the waters from which they came.

7,447 Gar and 2,162 Dogfish Removed From Lakes

9,609 gar and dogfish and 331 large carp were removed from the following lakes this year: Lake Manitou, 1,490 gar and 217 dogfish; Lake Bruce, 505 gar, 15 dogfish, 20 carp; Lake Maxinkuckee, 584 gar, 83 dogfish, 40 carp; Lake Wawasee and Syracuse, 2,326 gar, 686 dogfish; Lake George, 236 gar, 148 dogfish; Lake James (group,) 796 gar, 605 dogfish; Barbee Lakes, 528 gar, 107 dogfish, 244 carp; Lake Tippecanoe, 385 gar, 129 dogfish, 18 carp; Dewart Lake, 582 gar, 170 dogfish, 9 carp and 15 gar and 2 dogfish from Beaver Dam Lake. Total: gar, 7,477; dogfish, 2,162; carp, 331. The fish averaged from 4 to 5 pounds in weight. Some taken out weighed 16 to 18 pounds. Four crews were employed for 5 months at this work. It will be continued next year.

Number of Arrests and Convictions Made in Fiscal Year

The number of arrests for violations of fish and game laws made in the fiscal year 1929, October 1, 1928, to September 30, 1929, was 2,153. The convictions numbered 1,988; cases dismissed, 52 and 113 cases pending. Fines and costs amounted to $45,566.35. The leading offense for the year as usual was for hunting, fishing or trapping without license. 669 arrests were made for this offense; next was possession or use of illegal seines, nets and traps, 259 being arrested for this offense.

Ginger Ella

By Ethel Hueston

ONE of four girls in a shabby old parsonage, all to be provided for and educated on the father's slender means — and that father threatened with blindness — Ella was fairly well acquainted with the problems of life. Her ups and downs, her unquenchable optimism and triumphs of management, make a finely pleasing and cheerful story.

Charming New Serial in THE ST. JOE NEWS

SOME TRUCK DRIVERS, DO—

Dreams are generally "the substance of things hoped for." Dreams are visions of things as they should be or as we should like to have them. What motorist does not dream or have visions of a truck driver who would give half of the road all the time.

Pictured above is what the psychologist calls a "positive," that is, visualizes things as they should be, but generally are not. Surely it is just a phantom picture of a motorist's dream.

Yet some truck drivers do—but not many—give half the road and are courteous and smiling. Some big corporations now actually pay a bonus to drivers who have high rating for courteous, efficient driving and good records for no accidents.

The next time you pass a smiling courteous truck driver take his number and write his firm a nice letter. Here is a campaign in which every motorist can appoint himself a committee of one. The next time you pass one of those "Hit Me, D——You" kind, write the Accident Prevention Department of the Hoosier State Automobile Association giving the license number and the name of the firm, as they are always conducting a regular campaign and have a method of education for truck drivers that will be effective.

ROAD 27 OPEN SOUTH OF BUTLER CENTER

State road No. 27 south from Butler Center to the Allen county line has been reopened to traffic after being paved. The completion of the work had been delayed because of the time required to fill a sink hole. Contractor Harris is now engaged in filling two sink holes between Butler Center and Garrett, on the new route before the paving of that section of the road can be finished. The paving of these sink holes will not be done until spring, but the road may be opened in the near future for winter driving with gravel surfacing the sink holes. The south end of the road in Allen county, north of Fort Wayne, is closed for the filling of sink holes preliminary to paving in the spring, also.

NEWVILLE TO ENTERTAIN FARMERS INSTITUTE

The Tri-Township Farmers' Institute, comprising the townships of Concord, Spencer and Newville, met in the Community Hall at Spencerville last week. The usual bad weather was a feature, and one which has been accepted as a natural accompanient of these gatherings of the farmers. During the business sessions it was decided that the next meeting of this organization would be held in Newville. Burl Enzor was elected chairman; O. E. Ginther, vice chairman and Lewis Washler, secretary and treasurer. The attendance, attention and good order were fine, if we except the morning session Tuesday. Things did look blue for a while in both a literal and figurative sense, for the furnace which heats the hall was in a bad humor and persisted in trying to smoke the audience out. But in a few hours things began to look less foreboding and the institute, program somewhat belated got under way at 10:30 o'clock.

Some changes were made in the program, as usually happens in any public gathering, due to absence of speakers, etc.

The program was opened by an invocation by Rev. Homer Studabaker of the M. E. Church, Spencerville, followed by the song, America by the audience.

Demonstration by economic class of St. Joe High School was given, which was good. The demonstration by Spencerville economic class was not given at this time as they were not ready, but they gave it later. A very pretty song was given by three quite young ladies of Newville, Fusselman and Mendenhall; this number as well as others given by Newville people, was not on the printed program. Musical number by St. Joe School, Carolina Moon, was good. Joyse Fusselman of Newville, gave a fine comic reading, as did Ronald Borthwick of St. Joe.

On account of sickness in the home, John Krider was not present to deliver talk on Poultry.

This morning session was completed by an exceptionally fine number given by the ladies quartette of Spencerville. They received a hearty encore to which they responded. A few remarks by Pres. Ginther and a short business session and then adjournmet for dinner.

Tuesday Afternoon

Saxophone solo by DuWayne Kinsey was given as the opening number for the afternoon. It was well received.

News boys clog dance given by girls who would be boys, that is, if apparel makes the man, was a hilarious riot of sound and clever interpretation of scenes, not familiar in the daily life of the actors.

Earl William Kinsey's reading, in which he demonstrated his lack of fear, except that inspired by girls brought forth an encore. R. L. Case, of Wolcottville was now prepared to give his experiences on practical sheep raising. The principal diet recommended is hay, corn, oats and water. Feeding corn to stock has its advantages, among which it obviates the necessity of husking the corn, when it is fed in this manner. Mr. Case answered questions in regard to what weight is desired when buying sheep also, where to buy, whether 'tis better to buy at Chicago or from the state of Montana.

A song by St. Joe boys and girls brought forth on encore. A solo by Loren Dale Laub revealed a voice exceptional for a youngster of his years.

An address by M. Cliff Townsend, of Marion, Ind., was the feature of the afternoon. Mr. Townsend is a man of fine personality and a clear concise thinker. The program does not announce his subject, but, he does not proceed far till the subject, "Has the American Farmer a Problem?" becomes fixed in the mind of his audience and that problem is not the one advocated by those who are trying to advise him, that is, the class who say he is lazy, etc. The war demonstrated the fact to us that the farmer is efficient. In fact, his efficiency has been so great, that today it is contributing to his undoing. Control your own business, other business controls its business, of what use is it to raise more crops, if more crops tend to lower prices? A farmer cannot limit crops to his liking, the manufacturer can, more or less, control his production.

A short business session followed in which nominations were made. The beginning of this report gives the final result of the nominations. After this Vivian Richmond gave a comic reading which was very good.

Eunice Shilling gave a reading which was truly great.

Wednesday Forenoon

"Onward Christian Soldiers" was substituted for "The Star Spangled Banner," as the opening number, followed by Rev. Geo. D. Stoll of the Lutheran Church offering prayer.

Mrs. Carl Tuttle, of Pleasant Lake, used as her theme, "Potter and Clay," which subject was taken from a stanza from the "Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam."

"For I remember stopping by the way
To watch a Potter thumping his wet clay;
And with its all-obliterated tongue
It murmur'd;—
'Gently, Brother, gently, pray!' "

From this she evolved the subject matter of her address. Character, the building of which requires tools which tools are health; work, the balance wheel without which no character of worth can be found. Education; books are a natural adjunct, we cannot properly round out our lives without books. Religious music has a bearing. As a striking contrast to the ancient and accepted classical lore, Mrs. Tuttle recited a modernistic effort at

CELEBRATE THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Knisely celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary, Sunday while the event really occurred on the 21st. All their children and grandchildren were home and a great dinner was served in honor of the aged parents.

They were married in Paulding County, Ohio, near Antwerp and in 1881 they moved to St. Joe, when he began to work on the B. & O. With the exception of seven years, the family have lived in and about St. Joe since the above date.

Five children are living, while there are two boys dead.

Mr. Knisely is past 72 years of age and can get out and do a real day's work. Since September he has been working at the Auburn Auto. A remarkable man for good health, only one time has the doctor prescribed medicine for him and one time a physician called to lance a carbunkle. Indeed a wonderful health record.

Many useful gifts were received by the aged couple.

OBITUARY

Bess Elizabeth Henly, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Mohr, was born at Defiance, Ohio, November 20, 1888. Departed this life November 18, 1929. She was united in marriage with William E. Henly the 15th of February, 1912.

To this union four children were born, Golda, Eunice and Clarence. A son, Robert preceded her in death. A daughter, Carrie and a son, Donald by a former marriage. And one granddaughter, Mitzie Jane Williams.

Also four stepchildren, Roy Henly, Rollie Henly, Mrs. Hazel Baltz and Mrs. Dessie Mohr.

One brother, Ross Mohr, and two sisters, Mrs. Jane DeLauder and Mrs. Pearl Sherrick. Besides other relatives and many friends.

Funeral services were held at the Church of Christ, Wednesday at 2:30. Interment at Forrest Home Cemetery.

"A wonderful Mother from us is gone,
Her place will vacant be,
No words can tell how we shall miss her welcome smile.
Having to submit to the One who Doeth all things well."

CARD OF THANKS

We take this means of extending our heartfelt thanks to the neighbors and friends for doner of the many flowers, kindness and sympathy shown us during the illness and death of our wife and Mother.

The Henly Family.

Eloise Bowman and Frank Miser, of Purdue, were home over Saturday night and Sunday.

DeKalb county has 4,614 sportsmen, according to figures compiled on the year up to October 1, by George N. Mannfeld, director of fish and game division of the department of conservation. Noble county has 3,889; Elkhart, 7,655; Whitley, 2,604; Steuben, 4,122 and Allen 23,597. A total of 309,191 licenses were sold in the state.

CONVENTION OF MERIT HELD LAST SUNDAY

Paul Fetters is responsible for the success of the Sunday School convention last Sunday by his careful planning of a program that appealed to those interested in the work and a fair sized audience greeted the participants at both the afternoon and evening sessions.

Rev. Bechdolt and Rev. Dunkin, Garrett were afternoon speakers and were enjoyed and the musical numbers added much to the program also the reading. Reports showed that few of the officers were working.

The evening program sponsored by the young people was attractive. Donald Kinsey's orchestra made a wonderful contribution to the program, and Rev. Stoll and Clyde Hart were masters of their subjects, dealing with the seriousness of handling a life and dealing with the difficulties confronting it.

The finances of the organization shows up well with a bank balance of $34.12.

RECEIVES PROMOTION WITH KELVINATOR CO.

The Detroit Free Press of a few days ago contained the following item of interest concerning "Business Notes:" "Vance C. Woodcox, who has been employed by the Kelvinator corporation for the past four years has been promoted to the position of domestic sales manager, as a result of his service in connection with domestic sales development. Mr. Woodcox's first position with the company was in the sales department. Previously he was with the Standard Oil company in Detroit."

THANKSGIVING AND THE CHRISTMAS SEAL

Thanksgiving time is uniquely American. The memory of the Pilgrims kneeling around Plymouth Rock in gratitude for the bare living which Providence had accorded them in the new land is not matched by similar sentiment in other coutries. But with the vast development of the new land into the world's richest living place, the significance of Thanksgiving perhaps grows a little less poignant with each year unless new reasons for Thanksgiving are apparent.

To the thinking person such new reasons are constantly appearing in the airplane, the radio, the general prosperity which has been distributed perhaps more definitely to the average man in the United States than anywhere else in the world. For all those myriad blessings, Hoosiers and the citizens of sister states should be perhaps even more thankful than were the Pilgrims for their pitifully small endowments there at Plymouth Rock. But it is likely that too often we forget the real spirit of Thanksgiving in our bizarre enjoyment of the vast realm of physical luxuries which we have come to possess.

There is one field, however, in which inspiration for Thanksgiving constantly is apparent—the field of public health. There is no nation in the world which has so much to be thankful in this field as do Americans at this Thanksgiving time. It is opportune for us all figuratively to kneel and offer thanks for a longer life span and the elimination of disease after disease that formerly worked havoc among human beings. Predominant in this field of preventive medicine perhaps, is the anti-tuberculosis program. It was not accident that Thanksgiving day was chosen as the starting point of the Christmas Seal Sale. Thanksgiving Day may well be emphasized by "Indianans" as the starting of the 1929 Seal Sale from

THE CHRISTIAN HOME IN A MODERN WORLD

LESSON TEXT—Deut. 6:3-9; Matt. 19:3-9; Luke 2:40-52; 24:28-32; Eph. 6:1-9; II Tim. 1:3-5; II Tim. 14:15; Luke 2:40-52.

GOLDEN TEXT—Honor thy father and thy mother.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Pleasing God in Our Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Pleasing God in Our Home.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Living as Christians at Home.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Home: Its Helps and Hindrances.

Instead of an exposition of the printed text, as suggested by the lesson committee, it will be better to make a synthetic study of the salient points of the several reference texts proposed by the committee.

I. The Makers of the Home (Matt. 19:3-9).

The home is a divine institution. Its makers are the man and the woman joined together in holy wedlock, according to God's primary law—one man for one woman and one woman for one man.

1. The union is so vital that God declared the man and the woman to be one flesh (Gen. 2:24).

2. Divorce was not in God's thought for man (v. 6).

It was only permitted because of sin (v. 8). Divorce has the disapproval of God and right thinking men and women.

3. Fornication the one and only ground for divorce (v. 9).

Laxness of the divorce laws causes the Christian to hang his head in shame

II. The Ideal Child (Luke 2:40-52)

Marriage has as its primary purpose the propagation of the race. Children are to be desired and expected. Christ stands as the ideal child in the home.

1. His central interest (v. 49).

"My father's business." Being conscious of His Mission He entered the temple to inquire into the meaning of the ordinances of God's house.

2. His obedience (v. 51).

Though fully conscious of His divine being and mission, He went down to Nazareth and lived a life of filial obedience.

3. His development (v. 52).

(1). Bodily—"Increased in stature." His body became strong. A strong, healthy body is the inalienable right of every child, and parents are obligated to provide food and raiment such as to preserve their health.

(2) Mental—"Increased in wisdom." As a normal human being, his mental powers developed.

(3) Spiritual—"The grace of God was upon him," and He increased in favor with God and man. How beautiful is the picture of the symmetrical development of the Savior of men.

III. The Place of God's Word in the Home (Deut. 6:3-9).

The home has a vital teaching function. The child develops slowly; remains in the home for a long time to give an opportunity to be taught the things of God.

1. The central truth to be taught (vv. 4, 5).

This is twofold. The unity of God (v. 4) and man's supreme obligation to God (v. 5).

2. How the truth was to be kept alive (vv. 6-9).

(1) It was to be diligently taught to the children (v. 7).

(2) It was to be talked of everywhere and under all circumstances.

(3) It was to be bound upon the hand and placed as frontlets between the eyes (v. 8).

(4) It was to be written upon the posts of the houses (v. 9).

IV. The Early Training of the Child (II Tim. 1:3-5; 3:14, 15).

Timothy was taught the Scriptures from his childhood by a godly mother and grandmother. The Holy Spirit uses the Word of God in the salvation of children as well as adults.

V. Christ a Guest in the Home (Luke 24:28-32).

At the urgent invitation of certain disciples, Christ tarried in their home and sat at meat with them. Christ will come into the home and bless those who sincerely invite Him.

VI. Mutual Relation of the Members of the Home (Eph. 6:1-9).

Each member has certain rights and privileges which must be respected. Children are to obey and honor their parents. Parents are not to provoke their children to wrath, but to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Servants are to be obedient to their masters and to render service as unto the Lord. Masters are to show consideration to their servants, since they themselves are servants to the heavenly Master.

Faith

When we are confronted by misery which needs relief, suffering which requires sympathy, folly which should be reproved, ignorance waiting for counsel, sin pleading forgiveness, the true prayer is, "Lord, increase our faith." Nothing is impossible to faith.

A Daily Thought

I say to you truly, the heart of him who loves is a paradise on earth; he has God in himself, for God is love.—Lamennais.

CRANBERRIES FINE FOR SAUCE OR JELLY

Making Cranberry Sauce to Last Several Days.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Don't wait for Christmas to treat the family to cranberry sauce, cranberry jelly, or other good things in which cranberries are used. Get some of the first cranberries you can to use with chicken, rabbit, veal, pork, or any meat that is better for a sweet-tart accessory. The recipe for cranberry jelly given below is from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. Cranberry sauce is even more easily made, as the skins are not strained out. You can make enough cranberry jelly and sauce for several days and keep it in the ice box. Use rather small jelly glasses, of the size that your family will finish at one meal. Cranberry products "weep" or run when they are out and so it is more attractive to place a fresh mold on the table at each serving.

1 quart cranberries 2 cups sugar
2 cups hot water

Select sound firm berries, discarding any that are soft or withered. Wash well and place in a saucepan with the water. Cover and cook for a few minutes until the berries have broken, then uncover and cook rapidly a few minutes longer, stirring all the time. Press the fruit through a fine sieve to remove seed as well as skins. To the pulp add the sugar and cook for two or three minutes, or until the jelly sheets from the spoon. Mold in small wet bowls holding about the right quantity for one meal.

If you prefer cranberry sauce, add the sugar to the cooked unstrained fruit and watch for the jelly test in the same way.

Cranberry pie may be made of cranberry sauce or uncooked cranberries, with or without raisins. Cranberries may also be used in muffins as described in the recipe below.

Cranberry Muffins.

⅓ cup melted butter	2 cups sifted flour
¼ cup sugar	4 tsp. baking powder
1 egg	1 cup cranberries
¾ cup milk	2 tbs. sugar
¼ tsp. salt

Break the egg into a mixing bowl. Beat it lightly. Add the milk. Sift the dry ingredients. Then add the milk and egg mixture; also the melted butter. Roll the cranberries in the two tablespoonfuls of sugar, and fold them carefully into the batter. Place in greased muffin pans. Bake in a moderate oven, about one-half hour, or until brown. This makes 12 muffins.

ORANGE BAVARIAN CREAM DELICIOUS

This Fluffy, Spongy Dessert "Melts in the Mouth."

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Bavarian creams usually have whipped cream among their ingredients, as well as egg whites. When gelatin is combined with these, lightly beaten, the result is a fluffy, spongy dessert that literally "melts in the mouth." Various flavors may be used for Bavarian creams. The recipe below for orange Bavarian is from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. Orange flavor is among the most delightful, and the use of orange juice assures the family one more way of enjoying this delicious and valuable fruit:

1½ tbs. gelatin	⅔ cup orange juice and pulp
¼ cup cold water	2 egg whites
½ cup boiling water	1 pint cream, whipped
1 cup sugar	¼ tsp. salt
5 tbs. lemon juice	¼ tsp. vanilla

Soak the gelatin in the cold water, then add the boiling water, and stir until the gelatin has dissolved. Add the sugar and lemon and orange juice. Chill this mixture until set and then beat until foamy. Beat the whites of the eggs with the salt until stiff and fold into the gelatin mixture. Then fold in the whipped cream and the vanilla. Pour into a mold and put in a cold place until set. When ready to serve, turn out onto a platter and garnish with orange sections.

Stuffed Onions

Remove the skins from onions, and parboil ten minutes in boiling salted water to cover. Turn upside down to cool, and remove part of the centers. Fill the cavities with equal parts of finely chopped cooked chicken, stale soft bread crumbs and the finely chopped onion which was removed, seasoned with salt and pepper and moistened with cream or melted butter. Place in a buttered shallow baking pan, sprinkle with buttered crumbs, and bake in a moderate oven until the onions are soft.

String Beans

Cut off both ends from one quart of string beans, string them carefully and break into pieces about an inch in length and cook in boiling salted water until tender. Add salt. Reduce the liquid to about half a cupful. Heat two tablespoonfuls of butter or fat, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, one teaspoonful each of salt and sugar and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper, and add one cupful of strained tomatoes. Cook until smooth and pour this sauce over the beans. Let cook slowly for about 15 minutes and serve hot.

Delicious Cocktail

A glass of tomato juice makes a delicious and inexpensive cocktail and appetizer for winter meals, and it also provides vitamine C, so valuable for health, especially in children.

Necessary Supplies for Useful Mending Basket

The task of keeping garments in order will be much easier if the necessary supplies are kept together in a convenient place, suggests the United States Department of Agriculture.

Every woman who has much mending to do should have a comfortable chair set in good light, and near it she should keep a well-stocked mending basket. In this should be a pincushion or a needle-book in which are needles threaded with silk and cotton thread of different sizes and colors, ready for emergency work. The basket should also contain whatever sewing materials experience has proved most useful for her particular needs. They should include at least the following: Hooks and eyes, snap fasteners, buttons, sewing thread of different colors, sewing silk, tape of several widths, small pieces of cotton, linen, woolen and silk materials for patching, darning cotton, mending tissue, scissors, thimble, emery, needles, and pins.

It is also a good plan to have each bedroom, including the guest room, equipped with a small box or basket containing the articles most used in mending. Anyone who travels frequently will find useful a compact little sewing kit that can be slipped into the traveling bag.

Pecan Waffles Make an Acceptable Variation

Chopped nuts in waffles make an acceptable variation of flavor which everybody will enjoy. Pecan meats in season are especially good, as they go well with maple or other sirups usually eaten with waffles. Other nut meats may be used when pecans are not available. But meats are better cut with a knife or chopped in a bowl than put through a grinder. The proportions below are given by the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

1¼ cups sifted flour	1 cup milk
2 tsp. baking powder	2 eggs, separated
¾ tsp. salt	1 or 2 tbs. melted butter
1 tbs. sugar	1 cup chopped pecan nuts

Sift the dry ingredients together, add the milk and the beaten egg yolks, then the melted butter. Stir in the nuts, and then fold in the well-beaten egg whites. Have the waffle iron hot enough to brown the waffle quickly. If an electric waffle iron is used, it does not require greasing and two tablespoonfuls of melted butter should be used in the batter.

Use for Marshmallows

There are numerous ways to combine marshmallows with cake fillings. Or the marshmallows may be used alone as a filling. Simply put the marshmallows between the layers of a cake while it is hot.

Or you may melt the marshmallows in the double boiler and spread on the layers after they are cool. This melted marshmallow mixture may be used instead of jelly roll.

If the marshmallow filling is to be used you may add chocolate to the cake.

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, his motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has affected Mr. Tolliver's eyes to the point of threatened blindness.

Eddy did not talk nonsense. He never stopped the car to leap out and pluck a wild rose to present with a flattering word, a soft look, and a shy touching of fingers. He did not quote poetry. He did not sing. He just strolled blithely in with an offering of fruit from the farm, fresh vegetables, or a chicken ready for broiling, and announced that he would like company for a ride. Regular. Just like father. That was Eddy Jackson.

Ginger took her responsibilities to the family with a great deal of solemnity. If only she could hold them in line, the twins, that is, for Helen was now irrevocably lost to her sisterly schemes. Still, even Ginger found some grounds of justification for Helen. She was getting old—nearly twenty-three. And Helen was an even-tempered, unexcitable, unromantic type. Perhaps after all it was just as well.

She regretted that they could not afford money enough to adorn Marjory's beauty in a fitting manner. Ginger was not very patient. And it did seem hard to wait, and keep on waiting, for Marjory's hour of triumph at the side of the romantic figure dispensing countless millions in charitable enterprise—and looking well after the Tolliver's, also.

In the meantime, Ginger quite burned to do something on her own account. It was not that she had not tried. What, indeed, had she not tried? She had bought, from her personal allowance, at Iowa rates, copies of Sunday editions of all the Chicago papers, for the sake of the advertising sections. Column after column she had studied, ad after ad she had answered. But these, although in type they seemed to promise such lavishness of reward, turned out most disappointingly. The one about addressing envelopes for instance, in the advertisement it had seemed a rosy road to fortune, home work, quiet, easy. And Ginger had to try it before she realized how very, very long it took to address a thousand envelopes, and how very, very little remuneration was sixty cents for this expenditure of time and ink.

The plain sewing had turned out to be the complete manufacture of overalls at fourteen cents apiece, and Ginger ruined three of them and was obliged to pay for the material before she would confess herself beaten.

One magazine's private road to fortune, she discovered, proved to be via the taking of subscriptions, and this was not just the thing for a minister's daughter in a small town, where parishioners felt obliged to do whatever the minister's daughter asked, and then were aggrieved at her for asking.

Very nearly had Ginger become a raiser of ginseng. She had read a simply thrilling account of how one could take an absolutely negligible amount of ginseng seed, and set it out in a small shady corner of the garden, where in practically no time at all the produce would attain a market value almost unbelievable. She had written, feverishly, for the promised details, and while awaiting their receipt, unwilling to allow one unnecessary moment to elapse between her effort and the market value, she went to work on the shadiest spot in the garden. She dug, she hoed, she raked. And long before the details arrived in Red Thrush, her garden spot was ready, and subjected to most inquisitive and ironical comments from her sisters, who teasingly wondered if she had prepared the soil for manna from Heaven.

When the letter of details at last arrived she carried it, in quivering expectancy, to her attic studio, her sanctuary, only to find that there was an original outlay—for seed, for especially prepared soil rich in humus, potash and phosphoric acid, for particularly recommended lath frames to supply artificial shade. The entire expenditure amounted to not more than forty dollars, from which, within an amazingly short time, according to the printed matter, but what to Ginger was not less than a five-year eternity, a fortune was guaranteed.

Ginger reluctantly sowed flowers in the garden spot, and laid in a fresh supply of Sunday papers.

In her pursuit of profitable exercise, she was an insatiate. Although she chafed at her inability to turn effort into cash, she did not despair. As long as the Chicago papers continued to hold out rose-colored inducements, so long would Ellen Tolliver, called Ginger Ella, follow the rainbow trail.

* * * * * * *

Barred from the comfortable living room, occupied by Helen and Horace, by the unwritten law of a family of sisters, Miriam, Ginger, and their father sat on the veranda. They were thrilled and expectant. They must wait—wait for the wealth of prizes—wait for Marjory shining, rapt, triumphant—for fifty dollars in gold.

"Oh, father," cried Miriam suddenly, "if we are just sitting here—waiting for it—and she should not get it—she will feel bad—about disappointing us—"

Breathless with the horrid fear of thus embarrassing their beauty, they rose simultaneously and hastened upstairs, crowding upon each other.

"As if we care whether she gets it or not," said Ginger stoutly.

Mr. Tolliver, with the courage of his conviction, went instantly to bed. Not for worlds would he confuse a daughter of his with the thought that he expected her to bring him money by her loveliness. But the two girls, however much they might wish to spare their sister's feelings, could not entirely sacrifice their own. They must see her—they must!—must catch the first thrill of her voice—feel the first touch of her quivering fingers.

They took off their shoes, making pretense, and thrust their feet into their shabby old mules. This was to prove that they were utterly indifferent to the outcome, practically in bed and asleep. Then they sat on the bed and waited a while. It seemed a long time to them.

"She won't be here for hours and hours," mourned Miriam.

"But if we go to bed we may fall asleep," protested Ginger. "And she would come home in whispers, and it would be morning before we knew what had happened."

This was too hopelessly awful even to consider. They stared at each other disconsolately.

Sheer desperation finally drove them up the corridor, beyond the twins' room, to the one which Ginger shared with Helen. Helen, in spite of the excitement attendant upon the beauty pageant, had been putting some last tender touches to her wedding gown, and had left it carefully spread out across her bed.

"So slinky," cooed Ginger.

"Real lace," exulted Miriam.

"If only it were the prince of Wales instead of Horace Langley."

"But Helen loves Horace."

"So dumb of her."

They lapsed into moody silence.

Ginger broke it at last. "It's not that I'm altogether opposed to marriage, you know. But people should marry somebody that is somebody, if they're going to marry at all. You must admit that it is silly of Helen to marry a common school teacher who doesn't earn a cent more than father does. She's not gaining a thing by it, not a thing. She's giving up a rollicking good time with us just to shut herself up alone with one mathematical man. You have to admit it's dumb."

"Money doesn't make happiness."

"No. But it keeps it from starving."

In absolute depths of desperation, although the slightest touch upon the shimmery whiteness of the gown was strictly prohibited, Ginger lifted it up carefully, and held it against her own slight figure, smiling at her reflection in the mirror.

"Oh, beautiful," she sighed rapturously. "It would be almost worth attaching a husband just to get to wear it. Miriam, listen. There isn't a thing to do—she won't be home for hours and hours—and she won't come up while he's there! I'm going to try it on."

Miriam's start was one of abject horror—but she listened, frowning. And she showed interest. Still arguing against it, she held the gown carefully high from the floor, while Ginger slipped out of her modest little frock and into its silken slip. Giggling ecstatically, nervously, both girls held their breath as Miriam lifted the soft folds over Ginger's sleek little head.

Ginger posed with great dignity before the mirror, practicing a slow bridal step.

"Oh, Ginger, it is lovely. Why, really, you're quite pretty."

Ginger paraded back and forth before her mirrored reflection in a complete ravishment of delight. "How sumptuous—I mean, scrumptious," she exulted. "How dignified I am! Why, I look as old as Helen. Oh, I wish we had a veil." Her face fell disappointedly.

Unfortunately, the family finances had not yet admitted of the purchase of that ultimate bridal accessory.

"Look in Helen's drawers, Miriam. She must have something. You can't get the effect without a veil."

Miriam obligingly ransacked the cedar chest, the dresser drawers, but in vain. She did produce however a small circlet of creamy white flowers saved from the hat of a previous summer, and these she twined prettily on Ginger's head, admiring the effect. But Ginger was not to be pleased.

"But we've got to have a veil. It looks like a nightgown, or anything, without a veil."

"You must wear white gloves. Wait." Miriam ran noiselessly to the bathroom, and returned with a pair of shapeless white canvas ones which Marjory kept there in reserve for her infrequent turns of dusting. She tucked these effectively into Ginger's hand, but Ginger would not be distracted from the quest.

"Miriam, think—we must have something. Look! The curtains!"

Forgetting the sacred gown, she swung herself lithely up to a chair by the window, but was quickly drawn from danger of disaster by her sister.

"Ginger, be careful. Come away. I'll get it."

Balancing herself on the chair, she removed one of the long thin curtains from the rod, and shook it carefully out the window to remove the dust. Then, with a nice regard for effectiveness, she attached it by pins to the wreath in Ginger's hair. Ginger trembled with delight.

"Oh, Miriam—honestly—I'd marry him myself. Think of walking into church like this."

"You must walk slowly and look very sad. Brides always look sad. To keep from laughing, I suppose."

"Can't I have your white slippers, Miriam?" Ginger cast a disapproving look at her clumsy old mules. Mercy! What—on—earth—"

Sudden discordant clamor pierced the stillness of the night, and brought a sudden pause to their mischief. Ginger stopped in her peacock pluming, and tilted her small head under the creamy flowers and the filmy curtain, listening intently. Downstairs, Helen and Horace also heard the unaccustomed uproar, and went to the front window to investigate. Mr. Tolliver heard it, and sat up in bed, wondering, regretting his helplessness in his own home. But his life with four gay daughters had accustomed him to accept strange experiences without much question, and he subsided quietly.

The mad medley of noises presently detached itself into distinct and recognizable consonants. There was an overtone of excited girlish laughter, a chorus of admiring bass.

"Marjory!"

The big car careened dizzily up to the end of the flagstone path, and figures, many figures, disentangled themselves from running boards, fenders and hood. The dark shadow of them surged across the lawn, and standing out against it, laughing, pale silk, dull gold, with cream-white face and arms glimmering in the moonlight, was Marjory. The wailing siren had fallen to sudden silence, only the twanging discordancy of the ukulele proclaimed her triumphant return.

"Oh, Margie," cried Helen, as she ran to the door to greet her. "How wonderful! How lovely!"

Like moonlight Marjory tripped into the dull old house, with her shadowy train of admirers—glimmering moonlight.

Book Collection Shows Printer's Art at Best

Among the countless millions of books on the shelves of the library at the British museum, are about 200 volumes considered the acme of the printer's art. They form an exhibition of books illustrating the most beautiful and expensive British and foreign printing during the last ten years. Centuries-old Chinese manuscripts and illuminated books from the monasteries of medieval Europe are exhibited in the same room as these masterpieces of post-war printing which attracted the attention of printers whose names are famous among book collectors in the two hemispheres. Books from the leading presses of England, Scotland, the United States, France, Germany, Holland, Spain, Italy, Poland and Belgium are included in the collection. They have all been printed within the last ten years, and experts are unanimous that the art of the printer has greatly improved since the opening of the Twentieth century.

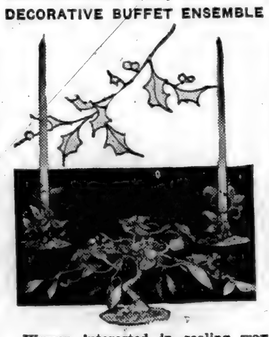
Timely Suggestions for Christmas Gifts

CROCHET CREPE TWIST MULES

An ideal Yuletide gift for the young girl who loves boudoir finery. These dainty "mules" are crocheted of crepe twist which looks like raffia. It's really hard-twisted crepe paper and it comes in the loveliest colors. Six skeins make one pair of mule tips. Mount them on satin padded soles. Sew on tufts of gay ostrich flues as an extra beauty touch.

DECORATIVE BUFFET ENSEMBLE



Women interested in sealing wax flowercraft will be fascinated with this resplendent ensemble consisting of candlesticks and centerpiece. It glorifies buffet or formal dinner table with equal grace. They are teaching this fascinating art in fancywork departments where materials for paper flowers are sold. To tell in this brief space "how to make" would be too long a story. Suffice it to say that the bases of candlesticks and the tree are formed of melted-to-softness sealing wax plied in a mass and then left to harden. The flowers and leaves are cut from crepe paper, wired and lacquered with transparent sealing wax paint.

GIFT OF DISTINCTION

This aquarium is suggestive of a geographical globe, showing the terrestrial meridian and vertical plane of the earth's axis. Not only does this unique article qualify as a Yuletide gift of distinction which will grace any environment of culture and refinement, but then there's the goldfish—think what a "Merry Christmas" they are sure to have in this home of world-wide dimensions.

HASSOCK OF ENAMEL CLOTH

Here's a Christmas present which either Mister or Mistress will welcome. It is of enamel cloth, distinctly modernistic in its hectic colorings and striking design. Brings a wanted dash of color into any room. Quite one of the most popular types shown this season.

Determining Turtle's Age

There is no sure way in which to determine the age of a hard-shell turtle. In most instances the plates are examined closely with a microscope and on these plates there can be noticed scale expansion. This scale expands as the turtle grows, leaving a ring of growth. These rings are counted the same as those of a tree.

The first duel fought in this country was in 1621 in Plymouth between two serving men.

Bayer-Tablets of Aspirin Genuine

The Mark of Genuine Aspirin..

BAYER ASPIRIN is like an old friend, tried and true. There can never be a satisfactory substitute for either one. Bayer Aspirin is genuine. It is the accepted antidote for pain. Its relief may always be relied on, whether used for the occasional headache, to head-off a cold, or for the more serious aches and pains from neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatism or other ailments. It's easy to identify Bayer Aspirin by the Bayer Cross on every tablet, by the name Bayer on the box and the word "genuine" always printed in red.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Wireless Worship

The congregation of the village church at Kleinow, Germany, has decided to economize by dismissing their pastor. His place will be taken by a wireless set to be placed in the church. On Sundays the congregation will meet as usual, and the set will be tuned in to receive sermons broadcast from Berlin.

For any BABY

We can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Sometimes constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked without delay. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't, you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother does not change to stronger medicines as the child grows older. Castoria is readily obtained at any drugstore, and the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature that appears on every wrapper.

Girl Fights Big Handicap

MANY a girl would give up in despair when she found herself snubbed in school and unpopular in college, but not so Mrs. Norma Kussel Jones of 1567 Cramer Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

"When I was seventeen I went away to college," says Mrs. Jones. "Freda, my room-mate, was a very popular girl. Soon she asked to have her room changed. It seems I kept her awake at night, I slept so restlessly. No one knows how I suffered.

"One day one of my teachers found me sobbing. 'Why', she said, 'sometimes sluggish circulation causes restless sleep. Why don't you try Nujol?'

"In two weeks Nujol had begun clearing out the poisons in my body, my skin had a clear healthy appearance, and everything looked brighter. 'What have you been doing to yourself?' asked my room-mate. 'You are a different girl.' The days and years that followed were filled with every activity and not long ago Freda was maid of honor at my wedding. That's what Nujol did for me!"

Such a simple way to health and happiness! Your doctor will tell you that Nujol contains no medicines or drugs—it is simply bodily lubrication—harmless, normal, and it works easily so you will be regular as clockwork. You can get a bottle in a sealed package at any drug store for what you would pay for two or three sodas.

Get a bottle today and try it. If you are like most other people Nujol will make you brighter, happier, more able to succeed. Don't put off good health! Start being well this easy way, this very day.

verse making, which was so obviously at variance with accepted standards as to provoke smiles among her auditors. Respect of authority was stressed as an important aid in character building. Mrs. Tuttle is a very pleasing speaker and possesses that admirable faculty of holding the attention of her audience.

Virginia Shull gave a recitation which brought forth an encore.

Demonstration by primary and intermediate grades of Spencerville High School very well demonstrated the necessity of caution in prevention of accidents from railroad trains, automobiles, trucks, etc., this is a subject that cannot be overdone or mention made too often.

The subject of Mr. Ferris' address, "Growing and Utilization of White Clover," was listened to with interest by farmers who are interested in soil building. Sweet clover is not primarily a hay crop, but its chief function is to build up worn out soils. To test your soil it is necessary to dig down deep, as well as to take the top soil, to ascertain its acidity, for top soil may not show what that of a lower depth may reveal.

A description of the scarifying of seed and of innoculation was dwelt upon. Pure culture innoculation was advocated as well as explained; also varieties best to use. Spring seeding was advocated.

To use as a pasture crop, pasture heavily. Upon being told that the exclusive feeding of the legume would result in the thinning of the blood of live stock, causing hemorrhages to occur. Questions were asked as how to feed. Mix with other feed and do not feed too heavily of it, was the logical answer.

Wednesday Afternoon

This session had as its headliner the Ladies Quartette of Spencerville which was pleasing to all lovers of good vocal music.

Guy Platter in a poetic vein contrasted the courtship days of a past generation with the present in which the poor old horse got the worst of it, but Saturday night in spite of the automobile is just the same.

"Equality for Agriculture," This was Mr. Ferris' second topic for the day, having spoken earlier in the day on a dissimilar subject.

The accumulation of wealth says Mr. Ferris is not the supreme end but only a means to an end. Scientific farming is not alone the problem though one should aim to farm scientifically, but what is the use of all this science, this growing of better and greater crops if not intelligently made use of. A surplus becomes a burden; it is unfair to urge better crops for less pay. The law of supply and demand is an unfair proposal to the farmer. Cooperation is not the whole panacea either though it will help. In fact the address by Mr. Ferris, agrees in toto with Mr. Townsend in its trend of thought and in the arguments presented. Mr. Ferris is a real dirt farmer, and "knows his onions," when these subjects are mentioned.

The "Doll Dance" by girls of St. Joe High School was a pretty dress up affair which proved its title no misnomer in this instance, "As pretty as a doll" could be said of the charming participants, who surely measured up to the title. And did they "strut their stuff? We say they did."

"The Twentieth Century Woman" by Mrs. Tuttle, was a spicy piece of wit and humor, which showed what woman should be; every virtue she should possess was illustrated by a verse or witticism, all of which fell from her lips in such a rapid fire manner that pen could not follow. In fact we did not try to for we did not want to miss a word, so we have nothing to report, if you were there you know what we mean, if you were not, you don't know what you missed.

The song by St. Joe High School which followed Mrs. Tuttle's address received an encore.

The secretary's report was read and announcements were made for future meetings, the result of which has been given in the opening of this article.

At the request of some one or more persons, the newsboys' clog dance was repeated.

Wednesday Evening

Wednesday evening marked the closing of the Tri-Township institute. This was the purely entertainment feature and was given by Mark Township (Ohio) High School pupils, under the direction of Forrest Beams and Paul H. Underhill, the former a young teacher of Spencerville. The play, "Sonny Jane," which has been characterized as a "mirthquake," proved that the characterization was correct. In the classy way of its presentation it reflects credit upon both the managers and the young gentlemen and ladies who participated. It was, altogether a plot clever in conception, and full of amusing situations.

The persons chosen for the different parts seem to have been well adapted to fit the characters allotted to them.

The play was a success if the audience is a correct criterion by which to judge. An orchestra accompanied the young people of Mark Township which proved a valuable aid making this entertainment the success it proved to be.

NOTES

The radio set was drawn by Mrs. Harold Krafft.

This institute made most manifest the fact that we have some fine amateur talent in our section of the county.

Also the fact that damp weather could not depress, nor the cold chill the spirits of our optomistic people.

And unstinted praise is due to Chairman O. E. Ginther for his generalship in handling the situation. Ginther fits the position as the paper to the wall.

The expenses were $87.34 exclusive of premiums.

335 membership tickets were sold.

Premium lists and awards will appear in a future issue.

Special Exhibits

The Special Exhibit consisted of tables, set by girls of the Spencerville and St. Joe Schools. On the tables were displayed foods that comprise a perfect meal.

The awards were as follows:

First cash award, Leone Laub, $3.00.

Second cash award, Beatrice Storer, $2.50.

Third cash award, Shull, $2.25.

Fourth cash award, Eunice Gerig, $1.50.

Fifth cash award, Dorothy Fetters, $1.25.

Sixth cash award, Dorothy Wasson, $1.00.

The work of remodeling will be tsarted on Thanksgiving day and will be rushed to completion so as not to interfere with anything now cheduled.

THANKSGIVING AND THE CHISRTMAS SEAL

the proceeds of which all anti-tuberculosis work in the state will be carried forward in 1930. Ninety-two county tuberculosis associations on Thanksgiving Day begin the annual Seal Sale. If citizens respond generously to it, so will the Double Barred Croas continue to issue protection for each of us against tuberlucosis. The Christmas Seal means prevention and cure of this dreaded disease. It means the steady development of fresh air schools, the Modern Health Crusade, more clinics, additional sanatoria, more public methods of fighting the disease. Since organized work began in Indiana less than a score of years ago, the death-rate from tuberculosis has almost miraculously been cut in half. There is much yet to be done; thousands of cases continue to spread their barbarous tentacles in the life blood of the Hoosier public. It has been proven definitely that when discovered early, tuberculosis can be cured and that gradually the campaign of education against the disease can lower the death-rate and decrease the prevalence. To keep this campaign functioning, citizens must buy Christmas Seals.

There is no better day to start the purchase of these little health workers than Thanksgiving Day. The Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock thanked Providence for the bare necessities of life. The Hoosiers, grouped around the banner of the 1929 Christmas Seal Sale, may well give thanks in hard dollars for the saving of lives and happiness that the anti-tuberculosis program is bringing. Let's use Thanksgiving Day for a re-inspiration in the field of public health —let's make it count this year against tuberculosis. Let's buy Christmas Seals in larger amounts than ever before in the history of the state. It's good business—it's good citizenship. Let's give thanks for the Christmas Seal and its work by financing it adequately during this holiday season and thus insuring a continuance of the life saving program in 1930.

The Word "DUCO" and What it Means to Public

St. Joe, Ind., Nov. 22, 1929.

Editor St. Joe News.

Although not an automobile owner, I want to say a few words concerning the plant of the Larson Automobile Service Company of Hicksville, Ohio. It may not be generally known by the public that in order to operate a Duco finishing plant it is necessary for the operator to bind himself to use none other than the Duco products, manufactured by the DuPont De Nemours Co. The Duco goods are in the forefront as a finishing medium, and are not to be confounded with various lacquers used by others and masquerading under the name of "Duco."

It has been said that "Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery," and the proof of this assertion can be readily ascertained by any person who wishes to make a test by trying out a lacquer job along side one turned out by the Larson Automobile Company, which Company contracts to use only genuine Duco products. They are well equipped to do your work in a thorough and satisfactory manner. Then too, they are in position to give attention to your brakes, a thing which is of supreme importance to any driver of an auto. Poor brakes and poor brake service, may mean the difference between life and death, can you afford any but the best of service?

In all their departments, the Larson Company, give only the best of workmanship and most courteous attention. We have only words of praise for these people and their methods, and recommend them to all people requiring things in their line of service.

Yours cordially,
A. E. Coburn.

An intimate closeup of Mr. Turkey Gobbler, the "National Bird" of America, who will lose his official head, with many other members of his family, to grace the tables of America on Thanksgiving day.

Wild Turkey Ranked King of the Woods

When Charles the Ninth of France sat down at his wedding banquet in the year 1570, he was probably entirely unaware that something was about to happen to him which had never happened to any other king of France. Perhaps his mother, Catherine of Medici, had knowledge of what was coming, for Catherine was a managing sort of woman and kept a watchful eye on everything that was done or planned in the royal palace. But chefs are an independent tribe, intolerant of interference with their affairs, and possibly only the palace chef and his underlings knew that a rare distinction was about to be conferred upon their exalted master.

History is silent as to these details. The important fact—vouched for by Charles Lucian Bonaparte, the French naturalist—is that Charles the Ninth at his wedding banquet consumed, doubtless with great gusto, liberal portions of a strange new fowl never before eaten in France—a large and extraordinary and very delicious bird known as a "Cock of the Indies."

Thereby Charles the Ninth of France established a precedent. That "Cock of the Indies" was, as a matter of fact, a turkey. No other French king, probably no other European king, had ever dined on turkey, and certainly no African or Asiatic potentate had enjoyed that experience. Hence Charles the Ninth's wedding banquet may be set down as one of the turning points of history. Then and there the turkey, noblest of his royal race, came into his own as the king of all table birds, fit provender for monarchs and for presidents.

Second to None on Earth.

He is not only the king of table birds. He is also, in his wild state, the king of game birds, certainly the noblest game bird of the Western hemisphere and probably unexcelled anywhere on this planet. "It has been given to but a few hunters," says Dr. William T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological park, a great sportsman as well as a naturalist, "to seek this bird in its native forests, witness its splendid flight, and afterward shoulder a splendid gobbler weighing from 25 to 30 pounds for a ten-mile carry. He who has done this, however, will thereafter rank the bird as second to none on earth." To the naturalist and nature lover, also, the turkey is the feathered monarch of the woods, just as the eagle is the winged lord of the air. He is one of the wildest and in many ways one of the wisest of all woods creatures, and a glimpse of him in his wilderness haunts is an event never to be forgotten. I have seen him many times in the woods, for I am fortunate enough to live in a region where the wild turkey still exists in considerable numbers; but I have never yet seen him without experiencing that thrill of delight which only the wildest of wild things can impart. And so it will be until my woods-roaming days are over.

Wild Gobbler Beautiful Bird.

The man who knows only the domestic turkey, and who has seen that pompous and rather foolish swaggerer often in the barnyard, may find it a little difficult to understand why the sight of a turkey in the woods always and invariably makes a red-letter day. Let him go hunting wild turkeys—either with or without a gun—and he will understand why. As a matter of fact, the tame turkey of our barnyard and the wild turkey of our woods are two entirely different birds, differing not only in plumage (though in this respect the difference is slight) but also in form, in bearing, in mentality and in personality.

In the wild gobbler, for all his size and weight, there is something of a gamecock's slimness. His form is powerful and stalwart, yet beautifully molded. His bearing is proud and confident; yet one sees in him always a hair-trigger alertness which accentuates his wildness; and somehow that wildness is apparent in every line and curve of his body, in the poise of his head, in the glance of his eye, in the springiness of his stride. His rich coppery-bronze plumage glows and glints in the sun and in certain lights gleams like burnished gold; and when he is on guard (and it is no easy matter to catch a wild gobbler napping), he holds himself splendidly erect so that his tail form seems amazingly tall and that clean thoroughbred slimness which distinguishes him delights the eye of the beholder. There have been times when, fresh from a meeting in the woods with some superb bronze monarch of the sunlit glades, I have almost been ready to agree with old Ben Franklin that the turkey and not the bald eagle should have been chosen as our national symbol.

Not Match for Fierce Eagle.

Almost, but not quite; for the wild turkey, with all his stalwart grace and stateliness and pride of bearing, cannot compete with the eagle in those supreme attributes which render the "Bird of Jove" the most impressive of all the denizens of the air. The turkey's name is against him, too. It lacks both majesty and beauty, and to many people it implies, naturally enough, a Moslem origin. Moreover, familiarity too often breeds contempt, and though the wild turkey is as far superior to the domestic turkey as a gamecock is to a dominicker rooster, it is the barnyard bird that generally comes to mind when the turkey is mentioned. The turkey, whether wild or domestic, belongs not with the martial birds but with the game birds, a much less dashing and aggressive group than the eagles and falcons; and though he is fairly strong and swift on the wing for short distances, his power of flight is as nothing compared with that of the great eagle family. As for physical prowess, the largest turkey gobbler, though far outweighing the largest eagle, would have no chance in a combat with the latter bird. Not many miles from where this is being written such a combat once took place, though the eagle in this instance was not the bald eagle, our national bird, but a golden eagle. The turkey was already dead and the eagle was feasting on its body when a gunner shot the victor.

Belongs to New World.

Nevertheless, though it is probably just as well that Franklin did not have his way, the wild turkey might be regarded as, in some respects at any rate, a logical second choice for the symbol of the United States; and lumping the wild and the domestic forms together for the moment, the popularity of the turkey as a table delicacy in America and the prominence which it assumes at Thanksgiving and Christmas might well entitle it to be called "Our Other National Bird." Hence the history and natural history of the turkey constitute a subject of particular interest, especially in view of the fact that most Americans know very little about this bird which plays a gala part in our gastronomic lives, while a good deal of what they do know about it is not true.

Perhaps the most widespread error concerning the bird is the vague idea shared by thousands of people that the turkey came originally from Turkey. This is an utterly false notion. The turkeys are a distinctively New world family and were entirely unknown until the first explorers crossed the Atlantic. Possibly the turkey owes its misleading name to the habit once prevalent in England of calling every strange and foreign object Turk, Indian, and so forth; or possibly the English of those times saw in the headgear of this bird a resemblance to the headgear worn by the Turks. No one really knows how the name originated and most of the suggestions which have been offered are guesswork.

Another common error is the notion that the tame turkey is the descendant of the wild turkey of our woods. It is quite natural to assume that some person or persons in the early days caught some wild turkeys and tamed them and that from these our domestic turkeys are derived. Like a great many other plausible and widespread assumptions, however, this idea is incorrect.—Herbert Ravenel Sass, in American Legion Monthly.

FROM FLAPPERISM TO FORMALISM; ALL-BLACK FOR DAYTIME WEAR

Exquisite Afternoon Model.

HOW elegant the model! Rich fabrics, fine furs, sophisticated styling, thus fashion turns from flapperism to formalism. One cannot dress carelessly and "make the grade" this season. To answer to the call of the mode each costume must be "thought through" down to the slightest detail. Gone are the carefree days, when one might nonchalantly saunter through a department and "pick up at a bargain" a mere slip of a thing, sleeveless, lengthless and waistless, and call it a dress or a frock.

The trend now is toward that imposing dignity and quality-kind which expresses itself through the best of everything which money can buy. The handsome costume pictured above typifies the new style movement which so insistently calls for handsome velvets, flattering furs and a studied finesse which bespeaks ladylikeness down to the minutest detail.

This exquisite afternoon mode is of dark brown chiffon velvet, showing a shirred side trimming and a lovely lingerie collar and cuff set. A close-fitting soleil hat, luxurious furs and suede shoes complete this modish "study in brown."

More velvet conscious than ever are they that dwell in fashionland this season. Velvet for coats, velvet for suits, velvet for ensembles, is the cry of the hour. Of course hand in hand with velvets, go furs. So there you have it, the modes most outstanding trend when it comes to formal and dressy costume, summed up in two words—velvet and fur.

The latest in Paris is the velvet ensemble in two colors, that is the skirt is of one velvet, the jacket of another. Such, for instance, is a costume which poses one of the new draped-about-the-hips jackets of red velvet over a dipping-at-the-back skirt of black velvet. Along this line of thought is a stunning green ensemble, the skirt in a very dark tone, the jacket in a slightly lighter shade.

The new velvet shades are adorable. The raisin tones, blueberry hues, fuschia colorings, wondrous greens, browns most radiant are carrying on a merry warfare with black, and in this case each is victor.

Paris modes have gone black, very, very black. Which means that now the vogue calls for black frock, black coat, black hat, shoes, gloves and purse.

The lower picture shows one of the very latest coats. It is made of broadcloth which has a glossy surface and is generously furred with elegant black lynx. The close-fitting brow-revealing hat is black felt. The shoes are black kid in a one-strap street model and the pocketbook is made out of corresponding dull-surfaced black kid. The hosiery is light gun metal. Study this ensemble detail by detail, for it stands for consummate chic, in the world of fashion.

In adopting the dip-to-the-back hemline coats have followed the precedent set by afternoon frocks. For a coat to have a longer to the back hemline is unmistakable evidence that it is of last-minute styling. In fact hemlines are a very important factor in coat styling this season. It may not be too extreme to say that a coat is known by its hemline. That is, if the salesperson brings forth a coat whose hemline is much longer at the back, rest assured that this same is none other than a model of smartest new lines. The same may be said of the three-quarter length coat which is so frequently heavily bordered with fur, the same very often outlining rounded corners at the front opening.

An All-Black Costume.

The vogue for coats much shorter than the frock is not confined to evening wear, but is gaining favor in the daytime mode. In fact coat lengths are almost any depth one chooses, from fingertip to full length. Then, too, not only do coat hemlines accent flares, but they also place emphasis on slenderizing wrap-a-round effects. In event of the latter, the hemline swings around at the front, describing a curve of upward tendency which joins a diagonal front opening.

As to the wide use of black fur on black broadcloth, velvet or broadtail cloth, stylists show no partiality to type, employing the long-haired pelts as frequently as the flat types and vice versa.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Take Care of Your Kidneys!

One should not neglect kidney and bladder irregularities.

Too many people sacrifice health by failing to heed the early danger signals of kidney disorders. Even minor irregularities should be dealt with promptly.

A drowsy, listless feeling; lameness and stiffness; constant backache and bladder irregularities are often timely warnings. Don't neglect them.

To promote normal kidney action and assist your kidneys in cleansing your blood of poisonous wastes, use Doan's Pills. Recommended the world over.

Control of Oat Smut With Dust

Disease Will Respond in Same Manner as With Copper Carbonate.

Indications are that the smut disease of oats will also respond to dust treatments in the same manner that treatment with copper carbonate dust is now satisfactorily controlling smut in wheat.

Two Control Dusts.

"There are two dusts which give promise of controlling oat smut when applied to the seed before planting," says G. W. Fant, plant pathologist at the North Carolina state college. "One of these is a compound containing mercury in organic combination and the other is a fine clay which has been impregnated with formaldehyde. As well known, we have used a formaldehyde solution to control oat smut heretofore. This is not so simple a treatment as it might appear because under some conditions the germination of the seed oats is reduced and the grains may swell because of absorbing moisture from the disinfectant."

Mr. Fant says there was much oat smut this past spring. Fields in which about one-half of the heads were affected were found frequently and in some instances fully 80 per cent of the heads in a field were found to be infected. This is a serious loss. During the spring months the smut spores pass from these infected heads to the healthy grain and remain there during storage and through planting time. When the grain is planted, the smut spores grow and infect the seedling grain which eventually produces diseased grain. By treating the seed oats before planting, the smut spores are destroyed and healthy plants produced.

Receiving Attention.

These new dust treatments for oats are receiving careful attention in all parts of the United States. Mr. Fant says that several successful farmers have used them during the past two seasons with encouraging results. He thinks that the same barrel used to treat seed wheat with copper carbonate dust may be used in treating oat seed with the new dusts.

Tennessee Says Farmers Can Go Broke Farming

The division of extension of the University of Tennessee has recently released ten points telling how farmers can go broke farming. Farmers will be interested in these points in order that they may avoid the consequences. Here they are:

1. Grow only one crop.
2. Keep no live stock.
3. Regard chickens and a garden as nuisances.
4. Take everything from the soil and return nothing.
5. Don't stop gullies or grow cover crops—let top soil wash away, then you will have "bottom land."
6. Don't plan your farm operations—it's hard work thinking—trust to luck.
7. Regard your woodland as you would a coal mine, cut every tree, sell the timber and wear the cleared land out cultivating it in corn.
8. Hold fast to the idea that the methods of farming employed by your grandfather are good enough.
9. Be independent—don't join your neighbors in any form of co-operation.
10. Mortgage your farm for every dollar it will stand to buy things you would have the cash to buy if you followed a good system of farming.

Fresh Air Movement of Benefit to Seed Corn

Seed corn should be kept where there is good air movement so that the products thrown off by respiration may be readily moved away from the corn, or there may be a loss of viability. After the corn has become thoroughly dried out, respiration becomes lowered and ventilation is not so important, nor will materials put on the corn prove so injurious, but even then it is best to apply nothing to the corn.

Perhaps you can arrange to hang the corn on wires so the mice cannot reach it.

Inspect Equipment to Order Needed Repairs

It is a good idea for farmers to look over their machinery in ample time to place orders for repairs. The farm equipment industries prepare, during the winter, for furnishing repair parts and they can serve agriculture to good advantage, if the repair part orders are sent in early. One cannot wait until the day he begins to use a machine and expect the implement industry always to be in position to supply him with repair parts. Very often expensive delays are brought about due to late orders for repairs.

Inefficient Methods

The feeling has grown more prevalent in recent years that inefficient methods and practices in farming are as wasteful and unprofitable as undesirable live stock or crops. A worn, out-of-date machine or piece of equipment is just as much a cull as a boarder cow. The poor cow can be replaced with a higher producer and the worn out, inefficient machine can be replaced by equipment which does the work quicker, cheaper and better.

Strawberry Crop Is Put in Cold Storage

Berries Are Like Fresh Ones From Field When Used.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

More than 100,000 barrels of strawberries were packed by the "cold-pack" or "frozen-pack" method in 1928, according to George M. Darrow, senior pomologist of the United States Department of Agriculture. This amount is the equivalent of 4,000 to 5,000 carloads of fresh berries in crates, he says.

Handling strawberries in this way is the outstanding development of the industry in recent years, Mr. Darrow says. The fresh berries are packed in 50-gallon barrels, usually with one part sugar to two or three parts berries, and placed in storage at a temperature below freezing. Packed in this way they are like fresh berries when ready for use.

Preserves have found that a better preserve can be made from cold-packed berries than from berries fresh from the field.

Also because preserved berries deteriorate after a time, cold packing and storage offer a remedy for this difficulty by making it possible to put up preserves as they are needed. Furthermore, the preserves can utilize their preserving plant the year through instead of for a brief period of a few weeks at the strawberry season.

A still newer development, Mr. Darrow says, is the cold packing and storage of both strawberries and raspberries in small containers for home use. Several million packages were handled by the cold-pack method this year.

Soil Erosion Control Is Big Farm Problem

The control of soil erosion is a major agricultural problem. Its consideration is prominent in programs of most learned societies having to do with agriculture. In Illinois alone, thousands of tons of our best soil is washed away each year to be deposited in sand bars on the Mississippi or in deltas of lower Louisiana.

The terracing of sloping land subject to heavy washing is the only effective control we know if that land is to be continued in cultivation, says the Illinois Farmer. Definitely formed ravines and washes may be checked by brush and earth dams and the hillsides may be seeded to permanent grass crop or planted to timber and allowed to sod over. It seems likely that a considerable proportion of our lands most subject to erosion would be more profitably used as grazing or timber land than as plow land. The problem of erosion therefore allies itself with the problem of marginal lands—areas which are not sufficiently productive ever to pay a good return, yet whose yields help to create a surplus which in turn depresses the value of crops grown on highly productive fields. An agricultural policy which will consolidate and solve these several problems is needed. Forest experts, looking years ahead, assure us that on no less than one-seventh the total area of Illinois, timber will prove the best paying crop.

Check Movement of Sand by Planting Pine Trees

Sixty years ago the father of Senator Henry W. Keyes was troubled with the blowing of sand from a certain part of his property at Haverhill, N. H., says a report to the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture. In high winds, sand would be scattered all over the estate. To correct this state of affairs, in 1870 the elder Keyes planted the sandy lot with northern white pines brought from a nearby pasture. As a result sand piles are no longer seen on the drives and walks of the Keyes estate and the planted area of about one acre now has a stand of thrifty pines about 60 feet tall.

Agricultural Notes

Winter is the time of year when the poultry flock needs the most attention.

Shavings are better than straw for litter and for nest material to prevent soiled eggs.

Have you tried putting nicotine sulphate on the roosts just before nightfall to rid the poultry of lice?

Pullets must have proper body size and weight if they are to lay large eggs steadily through the winter.

Poultry house floors should be higher by six or eight inches than the surroundings to insure good drainage.

One of the biggest mistakes that a poultry raiser can make is to underfeed pullets during the growing season.

Encourage chickens to roost while they are still young to prevent crooked breast bones and crowding and to aid ventilation.

There is very little danger of hens getting too fat in the winter, and it is a certainty that they cannot lay unless they are reasonably fat.

Put alfalfa or clover hay in an open wire basket where the hens can get the leaves. They are a first-class substitute for green feeds during winter.

POULTRY FACTS

HEAT AND LIGHT MEAN MORE EGGS

Maintain Feed Consumption in Sudden Cold Spells.

Heat and light in the hen house mean more eggs when eggs are high in price. And the purpose of both heating and lighting is to keep the laying hen eating as much feed as she can be persuaded to take.

No slump in egg production is likely to accompany a sudden cold snap if the normal feed consumption is maintained, according to the poultry husbandry department of the Ohio State university. One method of controlling the temperature is through insulation of the chicken house. This, however, may nearly double the cost of the structure. Some poultry men are finding that by placing brooder stoves in the laying houses and firing them during the extremely cold weather, they can sufficiently raise the temperature. In case neither insulation nor artificial heat is practicable, the poultry specialists recommend the feeding of small quantities of milk-moistened mash and small quantities of grain, at frequent intervals during the day.

When artificial lights are used to increase egg production, they should not be used to give more than a total of 14 hours of light a day. Failure to supply lights regularly, or to provide water and feed when the lights go on, also give bad results.

Poultry Tuberculosis Widespread in Spots

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Tuberculosis in poultry flocks has been found much more prevalent than was suspected, and in many counties, especially in some of the North Central states, the disease is present to a greater or less extent in about 70 per cent of the flocks, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

Tuberculosis birds show loss of vigor and flesh, lameness, swollen joints, drooping, and general unthriftiness. T. B. in poultry can be definitely diagnosed by a post-mortem or by the tuberculin test given by a veterinarian.

If the disease is discovered in the poultry flock, all diseased birds should be immediately killed and burned, and the remaining fowls over one year old should be marketed. The chicken house should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected, and moved to clean ground. Lots and runways should be plowed up and seeded to some grain crop, and a new start made on clean ground with young, healthy, vigorous birds of good breeding. Avian tuberculosis is doubly harmful in that it affects swine as well as poultry.

Number of Elemental Eggs Developed by Hen

A pullet at maturity has a certain number of elemental eggs which may be developed. Counts at the Maine experiment station show from 1,000 to 3,500. More recent investigations show even greater numbers. There are always a great many more elemental eggs than any hen is capable of developing.

The rapidity with which eggs are developed will depend upon the hen's inherited ability to produce eggs and upon the feed and management of the flock.

Profits from the flock will depend upon securing as many eggs as possible during the first couple of years of each hen's life.

Poultry Hints

Crowding at the feed hopper stunts the growth of chicks.

Lameness is one of the first symptoms of tuberculosis in poultry.

Keep the nonlayers out of the flock by culling out birds with yellow beaks and shanks.

If the hens are kept indoors throughout the winter, they should be given cod liver oil as a substitute for sunshine.

The majority of poultry buyers are now refusing to buy any poultry that is diseased or which is not in condition to be put in fattening pens.

Much of the recent experimental work shows a benefit in the health of the hens, and especially on the hatchability of the eggs, if the birds have free range all winter.

Crowded houses cause many good birds to become pale faced and later join the cull class.

Turkeys may die of black head at any time from three weeks old to three or more years. The only safe way is to keep young turkeys on clean ground away from chickens and old turkeys.

Pullets should be placed in the laying house when they show signs of being nearly ready to lay. The comb and wattles begin to enlarge and take on a bright red color.

Katahdin's Height

Katahdin, Maine's highest mountain, is 5,268 feet high, only 12 feet short of a mile. In 1869 a Maine water power report gave its altitude as 5,386 feet. In the '70s Dr. M. C. Fernald of the Maine State college, now the University of Maine, placed the elevation at 5,206 feet above sea level. In 1906, during a survey of the west branch of the Penobscot river, still another finding was that Katahdin was 5,273 feet high.

CHRISTMAS PRELUDE TO FEATURE P. T. A.

The next P. T A. meeting on Tuesday evening, December 10, will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock, featuring a Christmas prelude with Miss Martha Miser at the piano, Mrs. C. R. Price in the role of story teller and C. A. Woodcox as song leader. Mr. Woodcox will then present "What the old time singing school did for the Community." The following group of entertaining numbers has been arranged by and will be given under the direction of Miss Thelma Curie, S. J. H. S., '27, who for some months has been studying with Mrs. Virginia Philley-Withey:

Welcome .....Junior Curie.
Candy Land, a playlet by eleven children.
Reading ....Earl William Kinsey.
Playlet—Ashes of Roses, by the Misses Grace and Thelma Curie, Miss Viola Coburn and Mrs. Roy Bowser.

Mr. H. L. McKinney, Superintendent of the Auburn High School, will address the P. T. A.

After adjournment everyone is urged to tarry awhile to enjoy the candy and popcorn, some of which each family is asked to bring and turn over to the committee at the Gym. And please remember the request of the Program Committee. They want you to suggest the type of program you desire, also what you think would make the P. T. A meetings better, more helpful and co-operative and of more vital use to the Community. The secretary, Miss Morr will receive these slips at the door Tuesday eve and they will be considered and disposed of at the discretion of the Committee. Community betterment is more sure of achievement when home and school work together. Come on, let's boost for the P. T. A. Join now. Dues are but 25 cents per member.

CHARLES KOCH FIGURES IN BANKERS' REWARD

One thousand dollars the reward for the capture of the Spencerville bank bandits, was distributed Friday, by the Protective Committee of the DeKalb County Bankers' association.

The Farmers and Merchants bank of Spencerville was held up and robbed by three men early in October. A posse was organized and within two hours the bandits were captured in a cornfield near Harlan. Within thirty-six hours they had been sentenced to long terms in prison.

The beneficiaries of the reward were John Armstrong, sheriff of this county, $100; Fort Wayne police department, $100; LeRoy Sapp Grabill, $50; Ed. H. Ekle, New Haven, $50; Hugh Thimlar, New Haven, $50; Walter Tyndall, Spencerville, $200; Water Baker, Spencerville, $75; William G. Erick, Spencerville, $100; E. P. Keller, Woodburn, $75; Henry Roemke, Woodburn, $75; Charles Koch, St. Joe, $50; Mark Tyndall, Woodburn, $75.

The bankers' committee, composed of E. P. Lombard, cashier of the Auburn State bank, chairman, O. S. Fisher of Butler and Monte L. Green of Garrett, went into the matter thoroughly and apportioned the reward on the merits of the performance of duty by members of the posse.

The committee besides making the awards highly commended Judge W. P. Endicott and Prosecuting Attorney Richard Sharpless of the DeKalb circuit court for the speedy manner in which justice was meted out to the three bandits.

SEND LETTERS TO NEWS FOR SANTA

The St. Joe address of Santa this year is Care of the St. Joe News. Letters to him will be published in this paper, if the writers remember to sign their names.

Santa is, of course, extremely busy at this time of year, putting finishing touches on his toys, but he takes time to read his St. Joe News, so will in that way receive all letters sent to him and published in The News.

Every year Mr. Santa Claus receives letters from young people who can write their own letters, and from many more who just dictate their messages to older members of the family who can write, and who do write exactly what they are told by the young correspondents.

Christmas is only three weeks away. So Santa Claus puts on his glasses after work, every Thursday evening and eagerly reads his News to see letters written to him. He doesn't want to disappoint any boy or girl just because they had neglected to write to him what they wanted for Christmas this year, and remind him of the good deeds to their credit.

In other years Santa has been especially pleased to read letters from young correspondents, who go out of their way to remind him of the good deeds of others, not just the writer's own.

Then's when he takes out his big pencil and makes stars after the names in his Big Book.

Santa Claus has his pencil sharpened and ready. How is yours?

ANNUAL THANK OFFERING SERVICE

The Women's Missionary Society of the Lutheran church will present their annual Thank Offering Service at the church on Sunday evening, December the 8th at 7 o'clock. Following the worship service a religious pageant, "Blessing and Responsibility" will be given under the direction of Mrs. Frank Bowman. The caste is composed of the Mesdames Carl Perkins, Verne Monroe and Harvey Hull; the Misses Grace and Ruth Curie, Violet Pflaummer, Violet Baker, Enid Curie, Geraldine Thornton and June Ridgway; Derwood Ridgway, Carl Perkins and Ralph Sechler and three small children. Music for the pageant will be furnished by the choir. Your presence at this meeting will be greatly appreciated. Come and bring your friends.

Your magazine needs can be taken care of at News office either by subscription or by the month. Let us hear from you. You can make up your own club.

FARMERS' SHORT COURSE ASSURED

DeKalb county is very fortunate in being favored with one of the ten short courses given in Indiana each year. The short course in this county will be held in Auburn on February 11, 12 and 13. The custom in the past few years has been to have all Purdue short courses in the county seat town where suitable places for the meetings can be secured. Due to the fact that DeKalb county is so well organized it is going to require extra large places for meetings.

Every short course as now organized consists of 3 separate and distinct parts. The first and one of the important features of every short course is the educational or the instructting of those in attendance on the special phases of agriculture and Home Economics by the very best talent that the university has to offer. The local committee has selected hog raising, dairy cattle management, soils and crops as the subjects for the agricultural part of the program. The Home Economics will have Home Economics Extension depatment and advanced work in the partment and advanced work in the art of "Feeding the Family" by Miss Aneta Beadle.

For the men's part of the program a gymnasium will be needed so that a saw dust ring can be constructed on the floor for the livestock that will be used in the class room demonstration work. It is planned to have a class of dairy cows for judging and demonstration work and a good dairy sire for the expert in charge of this part of the program to score and show the farmers how to select their herd sires. Professor Schwab will use a class of four hogs in one of his demonstrations. The crops expert will use hay, lime, marl and other illustrative material for his talks. These sessions will be given in the forenoon and afternoon.

The Home Economics section will need a building that will seat at least a thousand persons. The experts in this division will make the work very practical and will use the materials needed in the construction of the article that they are talking about.

The second part of the short course is the large free evening program that consistts of the cream of all the local talent from all over the county. This will include every kind of a stunt that is good and worth while — dance numbers, quartet, old fashioned fiddling solos— in fact everything that is real good. There will be two nights of this. In other places the amusement in the evening has been the largest session by far. A building will be needed that will sent 3,500 people. These evening programs are absolutely free and give a chance for every one with a special number to give it.

The third part of the short course is the good will banquet on Neolithic Relics?

Containing bones of animals and human beings and showing signs of fire, an enormous cave was discovered in the Pilis mountains, near Budapest, Hungary. One of the most interesting objects found was an ax made from antlers of a stag. The excavators believe that the find dates back to neolithic times and are pushing their work for other traces of human life.

HELPING NEIGHBORS IN NEED

LESSON TEXT — Luke 10:25-37; James 1:26, 27; 2:14-17; Matt. 25:31-46.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Being a Good Neighbor.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Being a Good Neighbor.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Be a Good Neighbor.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Modern Good Samaritan: Who is He?

It is difficult to discover a thread of unity running through the texts selected by the lesson committee. The teacher should choose between them, making a study of the one best suited to the needs of the class. If the use of all the texts be desired, the teacher will be under the necessity of selecting the verses from each unit best suited to the needs of the class. Perhaps the nearest approach to unity of treatment of the texts in the light of the lesson subject would be the following:

I. Who Is My Neighbor? (Luke 10:29, 30).

The parable of the Good Samaritan makes clear who is a neighbor and also what it means to be a neighbor. This destitute and wounded man left on the highway by the robbers needed a neighbor. My neighbor therefore, is the one who needs my help—whether he lives next door or on the other side of the world.

II. What Being a Neighbor Means (Luke 10:31-37).

Our primary concern is not—who is my neighbor? but whose neighbor am I? Being a neighbor is:

1. To be on the lookout for those in need of help (v. 33).

2. To have compassion on the needy (v. 33).

Human need called forth Christ's compassion. All who have His spirit will be likewise moved.

3. To give to those in need (v. 34).

This means not only to give money but also to minister to the poor.

4. To bind up wounds (v. 34).

5. To set the helpless ones on our beasts while we walk (v. 34).

6. To bring to the inn and take care of the unfortunate (v. 34).

7. Genuine love is not spasmodic, but completes its service.

8. To give money (v. 35).

It costs much to be a neighbor. Love is the most expensive thing in the world. It cost God His only Son; it cost Christ His life.

III. The Test of Pure Religion (James 1:26, 27).

1. The tongue is bridled (v. 26).

This means that those who have experienced Christ will speak with discretion.

2. Sympathizing with and helping those in need (v. 27).

The widow and orphan are the symbols of helplessness and need. Those who have true pity will visit such and render necessary aid.

3. Keep unspotted from the world (v. 27).

The one who has truly experienced the life from God will separate himself from the world.

IV. Judgment of the Nations (Matt. 25:31-46).

It is difficult to see what bearing this text has upon neighborly responsibility as it is a picture of the judgment which is to take place at the end of this age.

1. The Judge (v. 31).

He is the Son of Man who died to redeem the human race. He will then be clothed with majesty and power, occupying His throne as Judge.

2. The time (v. 31).

It will take place when the Lord comes in His glory, accompanied with a retinue of glorious angels. It will take place after He has gathered the elect remnant of Israel.

3. The place (v. 31).

From Zechariah 14:1-5 we learn that it will be in or near Jerusalem. Since, according to Luke 1:31-33, Christ is to sit upon the throne of His father David, we conclude that the place and the throne will be real.

4. The people judged (vv. 32-45).

They will be the living nations upon the earth after the translation of the church (1 Thess. 4:16, 17). They will be people unto whom the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached (Matt. 24:14). Those who preach this gospel will be Jews (Rev. 7 and Romans 11). They will be the brethren of the Lord in the flesh.

5. The issue of the judgment (v. 46).

(1) The sheep, Israel, shall enter upon their inheritance of the prepared kingdom.

(2) The goats, rejecters of Christ, go into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

A Glowing Service

There is no greater or more glowing service in the world than that of recovering from the human refuse pile those who have been thrown there by a world's bitter condemnation, and giving to them that new hope that will "turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God."

Beneath the Humblest Garb

Gentleness and a kind heart are often found beneath the humblest garb.

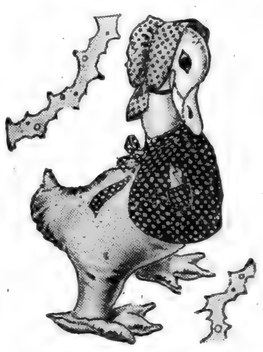
SOME TIMELY SUGGESTIONS FOR CHRISTMAS GIFTS

What to Give Him

If he is a man of discriminating taste here is something worthwhile to give him for Christmas—a brass magazine and newspaper holder, designed by that master American genius whose modernistic conceptions are creating such a sensation in art gift sections. The Diana motif in the picture is one of the masterpieces which is attracting the attention of connoisseurs. Other unique and characteristic conceptions include lamps, the sea gull motif best known, also such intriguing articles in brass or bronze such as doorstops, smoking sets, candlesticks and so on.

Nonbreakable Toys



All dressed up in its best "bib and tucker" this amusing little duck is on its way to say "Merry Christmas" to some fortunate youngster. Nonbreakable toys are the call of the modernistic juvenile world. If fancy happens not to turn to ducks, then there are stuffed giraffes, elephants and other cunningly devised creatures to intrigue the heart of the child.

Multi-Drape Necklaces

If anyone should ask you "what's the latest in necklaces," tell them multi-drape effects. Collections of jewelry for holiday giving abound in dainty types which feature a trio of festoons as you see in the picture composed each of as many as eight or more strands of tiny satiny seed beads, in white or in lovely pastel tints or in vivid hues. The necklace to the left is one of the new twisted rope types which is so voguish just now.

Quilted Bath Mats

Sure to intrigue the woman who appreciates dainty bathroom furnishings are colorful ready-to-applique quilted bath-mats with cushion tops. They are made of machine-quilted padding in white or pale greens, lavenders, pinks or blues. The applique florals of colorful percale are basted on ready to sew, which gives them the "made-it-myself" touch. Charming to give for Christmas!

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, his motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has affected Mr. Tolliver's eyes to the point of threatened blindness. Ginger has tried in many ways to add to the family's slender income, but she is not discouraged.

CHAPTER II—Continued

In her arms were roses, heaps of roses, soft-petaled and fragrant. Marjory's face was flushed, her eyes were twin stars, her red lips tremulous with sheer delight. Eddy Jackson bore trophies of her conquest, a great loving cup, pieces of silk and lace, shimmery silver, golden chains. But in her own hand Marjory held a small purple box that bore the prize, fifty dollars in gold.

"It—was—unanimous," she stammered, with shy pride.

The two evildoers above, rapt, speechless and spellbound, had forgotten their mischief as they crept to the stairs, noiseless, without breathing, hearing every word—sharing every heartbeat, softly, softly, down the top step, the next and the next, nearer and nearer, irresistibly drawn by the currents of joy that surged through the shabby parsonage.

Helen kissed her sister rapturously, and Horace Langley, flinging pedagogical dignity to the winds, clasped her in a boisterous embrace.

"This is my sister Helen—and Professor Langley. Helen, this is—everybody," Marjory introduced, almost incoherently. "Where are the girls? Where's father?"

"Angels," cried Eddy Jackson, gazing suddenly up to the curve of the circular staircase. "Or are the goddesses coming down from Olympus to gaze upon, and envy, Beauty?" He pointed dramatically to the stairs where Ginger Ella, with Miriam fast on her heels, crouched in quivering excitement, the wedding gown forgotten, forgotten, too, the veiling curtain, the canvas gloves, the flappy mules.

"Ginger—run!" cried Miriam, in sickening realization.

But Ginger, trapped, was not one to fly before confusion. She proceeded calmly down the stairs, even strutting a little.

"I didn't hurt it a bit, Helen," she reassured her sister. "It's—oh, just a—a rehearsal."

"Why, it's little Cinderella—just got a fall from her pumpkin," chortled Eddy Jackson, and a ukulele caught its cue and whined into the wedding march.

But Ginger turned away from them, scornfully, a bit too scornfully, for one of the flapping mules, too large for her, slid from her slender foot. Ginger, as she felt it slipping, in sudden consternation, hesitated for the barest fraction of a second. It was too long. Eddy Jackson saw and seized it, and ran to kneel mockingly at her unslippered foot.

"Cinderella, the prince returns your glass slipper."

In the midst of their merry laughter, the ukulele's sudden hush silenced them.

"See here, somebody ought to introduce me," protested the player, plaintively. "You forget I'm a stranger—I wasn't even invited." His eyes wandered to the bottom step of the circular staircase where Miriam sat just as she had dropped in that first shocking moment, still, rapt and breathless.

"Oh, I forgot," apologized Eddy Jackson. "Everybody's supposed to know everybody in Red Thrush. This is our old friend Tub Andrews. He went to school with us when he was a kid, but they moved to Detroit, and now he's come back to help run the First National bank. Janitor, aren't you, Tub?"

"Assistant janitor," said Tub Andrews pleasantly. "But next week they are going to promote me to stamp-licker. Pleased to meet you." He dropped down on the step beside Miriam. "Why didn't you go into the beauty pageant and give your sister a run for her complexion?"

"I?" Miriam was shocked with amazement. "She!"

"Sure. I was one of the judges. Your sister had it easy, the way it was. But if you had been against her—well—me—I'm one gentleman who don't."

"Don't what?" Miriam followed the jovial young banker with some difficulty, but with interest.

"I peel 'em." He indicated the golden Marjory with a light wave of his ukulele. "They freckle on the nose, and peel on the neck, and go dark in streaks—their hair does. I'm a blonde myself. I know all about 'em."

"I'm going to turn you all out now," called Marjory, with a smile that took the sting from her light dismissal. "I want to go upstairs and see my father, and all my sisters have to come along. You've been perfectly marvelous to me—Eddy, you're an angel—"

"I know it," he agreed, briskly.

With much laughter, many light sallies, a hundred gay words, the happy group dispersed slowly.

"I'll come and take you for a ride tomorrow," said Tub Andrews to Miriam. "If you have not objection to flivvers."

"I haven't. I like them."

"I don't. I only drive them. About eight, then."

And then, breathlessly, with Ginger still in the forbidden gown and the ridiculous curtain, the four girls ran upstairs into their father's room and flung themselves upon his bed, where he sat erect, waiting, knowing they would come to him. Marjory dropped on her knees beside the bed, and buried her bright face in his shoulders laughing, with tears in the laughter.

"Father—I got it. It was unanimous."

"I had a sort of a vague idea maybe you got it," he said, teasingly, but with tender warmth, transferring her from his shoulder to the curve of his arm, where he held her closely. "It just seemed to me there couldn't possibly be such a racket without some prize to show for it."

"Father, give me your hand."

Into the outstretched palm she pressed five small round pieces, gold, fifty dollars in all, and curled his fingers tightly upon the treasure.

"Oh, my dear—" he began protestingly.

"Father, don't say a word. Why, Providence put on that beauty pageant—to give us the money for you to go to Chicago again. Oh, father, we knew you were just putting it off because you couldn't afford it! And now you can. For your eyes, darling."

The silence that followed was so slight as to be barely noticeable, and his voice was only slightly husky as he said:

"You're a nice girl, Marjory. And you are quite right—the eyes need care, and I hadn't the money. It is a joy to take it from you—one of my girls. You're more than good looking, Marjory, you're just plain nice. You're all nice. I wish they'd offer four prizes the next time—the proceeds would run the parsonage for a year."

CHAPTER III

"Ginger, do run up and change your dress. Mr. Andrews is coming to take me for a ride, and the very sight of you would disgrace the parsonage. He is in the bank, you know."

"Mister who?" demanded Ginger.

"Mr. Andrews. You know—the young man who came with the crowd last night—"

"To take who out driving?"

"Me. At least, he didn't mention anybody else."

Ginger squared about in her chair, drew the rumpled smock carefully about her, crossed one knee over the other, planting a deliberate elbow on the topmost one and dropped an amazed face in her palm, staring at her sister.

"You don't mean— Miriam, you certainly do not mean— I must absolutely have misunderstood you—you could not possibly intend to intimate that—that Andrews creature, called Tub, as I remember, who twanged that godless ukulele for three hours without stopping—is coming to take you out—alone—in a car—for—for sentimental purposes? Tub Andrews! Father, you will enjoy him. He converses to the squeal of a ukulele. Disgusting, father, simply disgusting."

"They used to live here, father, and then moved to Detroit. He went through college, and now he has a position in the First National bank. The president, Mr. Mills, is his uncle."

"Simply disgusting," reiterated Ginger.

In his heart, Mr. Tolliver was inclined to agree with her. He had found life very pleasant in the old days, with the interest of every daughter centered exclusively in the parsonage confines, the five of them as one mind and spirit. But now, what with Helen and Horace, Marjory and a townful of admirers, and now Miriam and this new young man with the ukulele, his sigh rivaled Ginger's own.

There was still the strained, high tension in his bandaged eyes, still the vague sensation of a firm hand circling his brow. It seemed a shameful thing to him, in his gentle orthodoxy, that he should chafe at the temporary restriction upon him. He had so much, was denied so little. Even Paul had suffered his thorn in the flesh. His great yearning for restoration was almost unchristian, certainly unscriptural. He had said that to Ginger a few weeks before.

"Yes," she had agreed pleasantly, "but awfully human."

Particularly, he desired recovery before the formal dedication of the new church. It was a great accomplishment for Red Thrush. He wanted to look into the glad faces of his members on that day, he wanted them to see the grateful joy in his. It is hard for a blinded face to mirror the heart's emotions. He sometimes felt that he would be willing to accept blindness for months—for a year even—at another time, if only on that day he could meet his people face to face, his eyes reading their eyes, and all reflecting their gratitude for the realization of their hopes.

In many ways, his misfortune had come at a critical time for the minister. The building of a new church, designing of a new parsonage, disposal of the old property, all entailed a great deal of careful figuring. It was hard to figure finances through the eyes of committees, and boards, and daughters. Approximately two thousand dollars was still unpledged on the church debt. It had been his dream that on the Sabbath of the dedication, his people, of their own free will, should make up that amount, calling the church a free church, consecrated to the service of Red Thrush without encumbrance. He sighed a little.

The day of rest, in a parsonage, affords scant leisure for sisterly recriminations, and Ginger was forced to forego her plan to subject Miriam to a bitter grilling on the subject of sentiment in general. By nine-thirty, the girls were on hand for Sunday school, leaving their father the entire house for a half-hour of silent meditation and prayer. In the interval while the classes were reassembling for dismissal Miriam ran across to walk with him the short distance to the church, where he usually conducted a brief review of the lesson. Sunday school was followed by the formal morning worship, where, as there was no pew system in Red Thrush, the girls sat where they liked with their especial friends. From a corner far back on the right side, Ginger's heart went out tenderly, as it did every Sunday morning, to her father. She used to say the pulpit was becoming to him. Against the dark wood, he seemed very tall, very pale, almost radiant. His voice seemed gentler, yet somehow more incisively penetrating, since his blindness.

"Poor dear," she thought compassionately, for she followed the sermon but intermittently, and usually consecrated the hour to her own thoughts. "I dare say if the heathen are right, and we really do reincarnate in this world, I was father's mother the last time. I feel like a mother to him now, he's such a lamb."

Sunday afternoon in the parsonage was given up to quiet recreation. Helen went out with Horace. Marjory, too, went out, with anyone who asked her, strolling, driving, or calling, sometimes with Miriam in the party, sometimes not. Ginger usually retired to her attic studio.

Flavor of First Wife's Cooking Found at Last

A middle-aged spinster married a widower, who had lost his first wife after a marriage of 15 years.

The spinster, who lived for years with her aged mother, was brought up in the spirit of immaculate housekeeping. An old-fashioned housekeeper, the mother excelled in cooking and her daughter kept fairly well in her footsteps.

Yet, despite her efforts and her skill in culinary arts, the new bride never succeeded in quite satisfying her husband.

"It's fine, Sadie," he told her often, "but there is just something amiss. My poor Mary could give the food a flavor I never find anywhere else. I don't know just how she did it."

Then came a day when housecleaning kept Sadie on her toes all day. In a rush to have everything clean and in order by the time her hubby arrived, she forgot to look after the meal. When she remembered, it was too late. There was a burned meal.

Ashamedly she watched her husband taste the food. But how surprised was she, when he exclaimed:

"Now, Sadie, that's really fine. It has that delightful flavor which distinguished Mary's cooking."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

STYLING FURRED CLOTH COATS; INNOVATIONS IN FASHION WORLD

All that one might say in regard to the season's furred cloth coats, would fail to do them justice. Such elaboration of fur, such sophisticated styling, such cunning diversity of detail and of silhouette as modern coatology exploits cannot be told in words.

Pictures likewise fail to tell the complete story of the new coats in their glorified detail of colors, of texture and of luxury. As to the handsome model illustrated one would necessarily have to see it with one's own eyes to sense the beauty of the radiant brown coloring of the meltglow coating of which it is made. This cloth has a very pleasing soft-to-the-touch suede finish.

Handsome Furred Model.

The story of the coat pictured centers to a spectacular degree around its flares and its fur. Note the flares set on the sides and the flare cuffs, for when coats flare as they do in the newer styles, they flare at more points than one. The generous kit fur collar and the equally as generous fur border demonstrate to what degree of opulence fur trimmings attain on the coat.

Hemlines have become a theme of thrilling interest so far as coat styling is concerned. Designers are influenced, in devising coat hems, to a considerable extent, by the silhouette of the frock. That is coats flare with frocks also in silhouette adapting themselves to the long-limb line which has quite revolutionized the theory of dress as we have known it in the past.

One of the new tendencies is for coat hemlines to dip to the back in accordance with the course followed by frocks. New and fascinating lines also present the coat shorter than the dress, the idea being to wrap the coat around in a diagonal way across the front, until it draws in taut at the hem, so that the full and uneven hemline of the dress swishes out from below, in a manner which bespeaks the feminine styling for which fashion shows such enthusiasm this season.

The vogue for dressy coats is increasingly noted, now that the social season is getting in full swing, and dressy means "dressy" spelled in capital letters according to the ornately furred models one sees.

An Entirely New Silhouette.

Well, how do you like it, the new silhouette? Here it is in the lower picture, authentic in every detail, from raised waistline to lengthened hemline. Yes, we admit that it is a rather severe test to which fashion is submitting her followers.

Probably these long-limbed, molded-to-the-figure princess lines, which flare and flare below the knee are what we get for so persistently calling for something "new," something "different." It's come at last, the change we have been demanding, and now that it is here it is going to take some time for women to react favorably to such drastic innovations.

Really, the new frocks are not half as trying to wear as one would suppose. Indeed, in some instances they have been known to work like magic transforming the woman of ordinary figure into a creature of stately long-limbed grace.

The costume in the picture is carried out in all-black from its modish little bicorne felt hat to the black suede shoes which tune in with the black of the crepe frock itself. To dress in all black is quite the smartest thing to do, that is, unless color is the ideal set by fashion, and which is more flattering in which event one can find in the current style collections, the new princess frocks made of crepes and satins, failles or moires, in perfectly fascinating wine, dark green, and brown shades. Should you decide on some one of these colors, it adds to the picture for one's hat to be an exact color match.

In the designing of the new short-waisted, long-skirted models, flares are made to play an important role. Some express themselves in terms of flounces describing hemlines which gradually slope to greater length at the back. Then again, circular flares are attached to fitted tops. A method which works out very satisfactorily is to inset godets all around, as has been done in the instance of the dress in the picture. Of course, the coat worn with this frock will be much shorter than the gown itself.

Music in the Church

A short time ago one of the most distinguished church musicians in England gave up a valuable position in order that he might form a school for training church musicians. Music has always been an essential part of church worship, but the class of music has frequently been of such a character as to raise a protest from those who desire to have music in keeping with the sacred nature of worship.—Montreal Family Herald.

Welcomed Cooling Shower

Memories of the tortoise-hare race, renowned in fable, were revived at Northampton, Mass., in the forest fire area. Out of the blazing woods, hustled a rabbit and a turtle, almost side by side. The spray from a fire hose was swished in their direction and the two creatures appeared to welcome the cooling touch on their superheated bodies. The rabbit skipped around in circles under the shower, while the turtle stretched out its neck eagerly into the cascading water. Later the rabbit allowed itself to be picked up and fondled by one of the firemen.

J. R. CULBERTSON DIES AT AGE OF 76

J. R. Culbertson, a well known stock buyer of Auburn, died Monday night at 8:30 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. George Henderson, Auburn, from neuralgia of the heart. He survived his wife less than three months.

The deceased was born February 4, 1853, near Concord and was therefore seventy-six years, nine months and twenty-eight days old.

With the exception of short periods in Allen county and Hicksville, Ohio, Mr. Culbertson has resided in DeKalb county practically his entire life. Living in St. Joe for many years before moving to Auburn.

On December 6, 1877, Mr. Culbertson was united in marriage with Matilda Baltz who died September 16th last. Of this union, a daughter, Mrs. Henderson survives. Other surviving relatives are a brother, Geo. Culbertson of near St. Joe and a sister, Mrs. Jennie Friend of Auburn, two grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

Mr. Culbertson was a member of the Hicksville Methodist church. The funeral service was conducted from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henderson Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Rev. E. J. Wickersham, pastor of the Auburn First M. E. Church, officiating. Burial was made in the cemetery at St. Joe.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Miller and wife are here for a week guests of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Andress. Mr. and Mrs. David Furnish and daughter, also of Detroit, spent Saturday here returning to Detroit Sunday morning.

Mr and Mrs. Walter Keesler and two children enjoyed a fine turkey dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Rigg of Auburn, where they were visitors Saturday night and Sunday. On Thursday of the same week they were guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Keesler of Edgerton, Ohio.

Gasoline tax collections for November reported Saturday by the state auditor's office at Indianapolis totalled $1,606,601.59, an increase of $543,743.52 over the same month last year. Revenue increased 51 per cent and sales by volume 13 per cent, the report states. The total gasoline increase was $4,735,687.

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Langley and Mrs. Alice Warner left town Monday to spend the winter in the H. C. Hathaway home in Auburn. Due to Mr. Langley being on the road as traveling salesman, the women folk do not enjoy the severe winter alone, and besides the keeping up of fires and cleaning of the walks become burdensome. We hope they shall return with the robin.

On "the stern and rock-bound coast" they came, to found a new land dedicated to personal and religious liberty.

Little did they dream of the great, prosperous land that this nation is now. Progress since the Pilgrims landed has been rapid, and is constantly accelerating.

But it was their forethought and prudence that laid the foundations of our present prosperity and freedom. Let us, too, be prudent and exercise foresight, in order to ensure an even greater America inthe future.

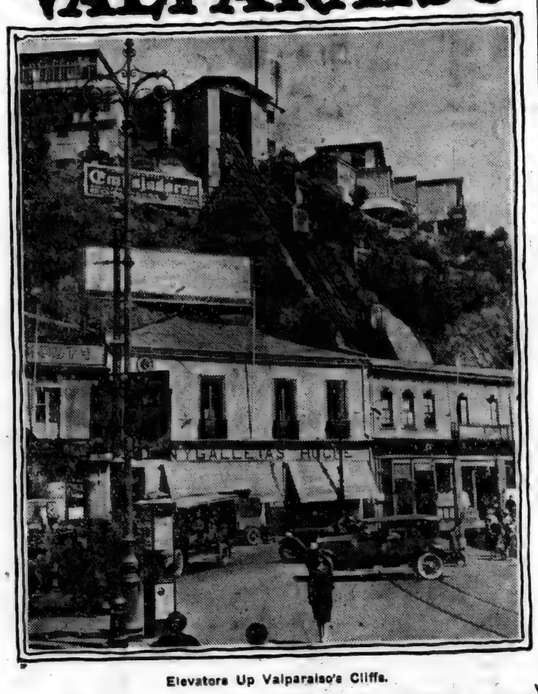
VALPARAISO



Elevators Up Valparaiso's Cliffs.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

LIKE a vast jewel-studded sickle, the long, curved shore line of Valparaiso flashes and twinkles before the traveler sailing into the roadstead after nightfall.

Straight handle and curving blade gleam for miles through the darkness, and in the distance the jewels rise higher and higher until they seem to join the stars of heaven, causing one to wonder where earth ends and sky begins.

When the morning dawns and its mists are burnt away the explanation of this magic night scene appears.

Out of the distance to the left comes the fine boulevard through Vina del Mar, Chile's summer residential dreamland; its lights formed the sickle's handle. Along the arc of the shore creeps the boulevard and the connecting downtown streets; their lights outlined the curving blade. At distances of from one to six blocks from the sea, high bluffs rise, their precipitous faces occupied by small houses anchored perilously to the rocks, and their heights crowned with the more pretentious structures of the older residential district; the lights along the rock stairs and walkways of cliffside and height and in the myriad windows of abutting houses were those that seemed to sing with the stars of the night sky.

"Valpo," as the city is called down Chile way, much after our North American fashion of sometimes shortening Philadelphia into "Philly," has reminded many travelers of other cities. The late Ford Bryce, great traveler that he was, found it recalling Spanish and Italian municipalities which glitter on the cliff-bound shores of the Mediterranean, particularly resembling Messina in being very long and extremely narrow, with the cliffs leaving nothing but a few blocks between their bases and the shore. Others have likened it to Trebizond on the Black sea, or have seen bits of Constantinople and Seattle in it.

Here and there steep paths and rock-hewn stairs lead up deep gullies that come down from the heights to the littoral, but with few exceptions they are too steep for aught but the feet of beasts and men.

Up the Cliffs by Elevators.

In the main, communication between the business district below and the older residential district above is by elevator and ascensor, of which there are a dozen or so.

The main business street runs close to the foot of the rocky bluffs, and it is rather a striking experience to be walking along with fine banks and stores on either side, and then suddenly come to a cross street that becomes a rocky stair winding its way up the cliff, or ending at an elevator which rises perpendicularly up the face of the natural wall. Toward the boundaries of the old city, there is one bifurcated ravine through which trolley cars reach to points on the heights.

The houses of the well-to-do on the bluffs are surrounded by narrow, winding streets, and one seldom sees a vehicle here. The market folk find their way around with panniered donkeys and horses.

The view of the harbor from the balconies of the cliff dwellers is a striking sight. Scores of ocean vessels ride at anchor, hundreds of small craft ply here and there, and one gets a bird's-eye view of the busy scenes around the wharves, along the waterfront streets, and in the business district.

Valparaiso's great earthquake of 1906 did little damage to the houses on the heights, and even those humbler homes, which seem to adhere to the faces of the cliffs as precariously as mud daubers' nests to a wall, went through it unscathed; but when we come down to the alluvial ground of the business district and the crowded tenements, consciousness of the great catastrophe is forced upon us; for the debris in some sections was so great that the city authorities abandoned the idea of its removal and simply piled it into the streets and laid new concrete thereon. Therefore, as one walks along, for blocks the steps go down from the street into the houses—a mute but eloquent reminder of the extent of the damage.

Trolleys and Busses.

The transportation problem in Valparaiso is not as acute as in most cities. The heavy hauling is done on streets near the water front, and there is little use for carriages or automobiles in the business district. The streets, therefore, are almost completely given over to trolley cars and busses. Most of the conductors on the cars are women, and a serious-minded, not-too-prepossessing lot they are.

Most of the trolley cars are double-deck vehicles. The fare on top is 10 centavos, the equivalent of 1.2 cents in United States currency, and the fare below is 20 centavos. Both men and women, outside the lower classes, will stand jammed like sardines in a box below, rather than go up to the top where vacant seats are plentiful.

There are a great many busses, and one wonders how the trolley lines can live at the rate of fare the municipality fixes and with the competition they have to meet.

On the streets which parallel the main thoroughfare on the shoreward side, one sees much of native transportation. Trains of donkeys, with their slim bodies hung about with almost every conceivable article, come and go. Some are loaded with wine casks, others with sacks of flour or cement, and still others with long pieces of iron, with furniture, and even perambulators. Boards 16 to 20 feet long are slung over the sides of the animals, sticking out many feet both fore and aft. The Chileans have a way of making almost anything accommodate itself to packsaddle transportation.

Sharing the streets with the packsaddle donkeys are the strings of carts, drawn in the fashion of the country—one horse hitched between the shafts, and at its left a second, attached to the cart by means of a breast collar and a single rope trace. This second horse carries a saddle, and the free end of the breast strap is fastened thereto. Its main duty is to carry the man who drives the cart. The single trace enables it to help out the horse in the shafts on steep grades or in heavy mud.

Lovely Vina del Mar.

The life which ebbs and flows downtown and on the heights of Valparaiso may be picturesque and distinctive, but the real thrills are reserved for those who go to its Vina del Mar in summer. Playing the dual role of an Atlantic City and a fashionable suburb, this community is one vast flower garden five miles long, climbing from the seashore to the heights. Villas bowered in roses, wistaria, poppies, pansies, blooming trees, and rich shrubs; chalets standing on terraces clad in all the gay colors of Chile's floral wealth; high-walled gardens, formal in treatment but warm and beautiful in aspect—all these join with blue sky, gray rocks and ultramarine sea to make a setting for the gay summer life for which the great seaport has long been famous.

Vina del Mar at the height of the summer social season is the very incarnation of quiet, dignified smartness. The magnificently matched horses drawing the finest examples of the coach builder's art, the dogcarts, and other types of horse-drawn vehicles share the boulevards with the latest European and American custom-built motor cars.

When the inland weather becomes hot and dusty, all of the socially elect of Santiago and of the other cities and towns of central Chile come down and take villas or chalets here.

Horse racing is a passion with the Chileans, and the summer racing season at the Vina del Mar Jockey club brings to its tracks the best stables of the whole country.

DISTINCTIVE ZEST IN MULLIGATAWNY

Suggestion of Curry Makes Soup Different in Taste.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The distinctive flavor in mulligatawny soup that makes it different from most other soups is the suggestion of curry, borrowed from East Indian cookery. The vegetables and seasonings are also a source of its fine appetizing taste, and as some of the meat is added at serving time, the soup is substantial and nourishing. The addition of a tart sliced apple is another touch that makes this soup unusual. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture supplies these directions for making it:

USED FOR STOCK

3 or 4 pounds veal knuckle	1 onion, halved
2 quarts cold water	2 stalks celery
½ tsp. peppercorns	Blade of mace

¾ cup sliced onion	¼ cup butter
1 cup carrot, cut in small cubes	1 cup creamed tomato
½ cup finely cut celery.	½ tsp. curry powder
1 green pepper, finely cut	2 cloves
1 tart apple, sliced	1 sprig parsley
	2 tsp. salt, or to taste.

Wipe the knuckle of veal, put into a kettle with the water, peppercorns, onion, celery, and mace, and simmer for two hours. Remove the scum and strain the soup stock. Cook the onion, carrots, celery, green pepper, and apple in the butter until lightly browned. Add the meat stock, the seasoning, and the tomato. Simmer for one hour, or until the vegetables are tender. If desired, the vegetables may be strained out, rubbed through a sieve, and returned to the soup mixture. Whatever way the vegetables are desired, add one cup or more of the meat finely chopped to the soup. Serve the soup piping hot with croutons.

Best Height for Table, Tubs, Sink and Stove

Is your permanent kitchen equipment substantial, easy to keep in order, carefully grouped and set at such height that you do not have to stoop or strain your muscles as you work? Sink, stove, and worktable should be near together so as to save steps. Scattered equipment means walking many unnecessary miles during the course of a year, the United States Department of Agriculture has estimated. If the kitchen table is on casters it can be easily moved where needed, thus saving steps.

The various kitchen tasks can be done most comfortably at different heights. Sinks especially are often set too low; 30 inches from the bottom of the sink to the floor is considered good average height. Experiment until you find the best height for your table, ironing board, and washtubs. The table can be raised on blocks hollowed out to fit the legs, and with a little ingenuity you can adjust the ironing board and tubs.

Baked Brown Bread

Beat two eggs, add one rounded tablespoonful of melted butter, dissolve one teaspoonful of baking soda in one and one-fourth cupfuls of buttermilk and add half a teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of graham flour, one cupful of cornmeal and one scant cupful of brown sugar. Beat all well. Bake in a well buttered pan in a slow oven for one hour. Raisins and chopped nuts may be added if liked.

Study Various Starches for Stiffening Fabrics

The comparative value of potato, wheat, corn, and rice starches for stiffening fabrics has been given intensive study in the textile laboratory of the bureau of home economics and is reported in a technical bulletin just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. A quantitative method and apparatus for measuring the stiffness of sized fabrics, devised by Esther C. Peterson and Tobias Dantzig, is also described and illustrated.

Heretofore only qualitative methods of showing differences in fabric stiffness had been developed, and oftentimes the stiffness was indicated as part of the "feel," "handle," or some such vague term common in mill and laundry practice. The new method originated by a textile chemist and a mathematician in collaboration therefore marks an advance in the scientific study of fabric sizing. It is also predicted that manufacturers of paper, celluloid, and other commodities will find this method of equal value in measuring accurately the stiffness of their commodities.

The study of starches is being continued by the bureau to determine the value of dasheens and other agricultural products as sources of sizing materials for use in the manufacture and laundering of fabrics.

Copies of the publication on Stiffness in Fabrics, Technical Bulletin 108-T, may be obtained free from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Hot Cocoa for Cold Days Is Food Well as Drink

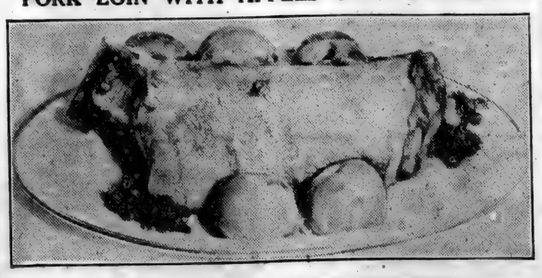
In cold weather it is good for the younger children to have a hot drink before starting for school in the morning. Cocoa made with milk is both a food and a beverage, and most children enjoy it for breakfast. The United States Department of Agriculture recommends cocoa as a suitable addition to the hot school lunch. When it is not possible for the children to obtain it at school the mother may serve it when the children get home in the afternoon, or as part of the evening meal. Few adults will refuse an appetizing cup of cocoa for lunch or supper, when dropping in to call, or when returning late at night from a cold trip.

Make cocoa with whole or skim milk if possible. Allow two level teaspoonfuls of cocoa and about two level teaspoonfuls of sugar to each half pint of milk. While bringing the milk to the scalding point mix the cocoa and sugar to a paste with a little cold milk or water. Add to the hot milk, bring to the boiling point, and boil for about a minute. To prevent scum from rising, beat briskly with an egg beater. Some persons like the addition of a few drops of vanilla. Whipped cream or a marshmallow may be floated on top of each cup.

Cinnamon Rolls

Sprinkle a layer of biscuit dough thickly with sugar, cinnamon and bits of butter. Roll as for jelly roll, cut into one-inch pieces, and set them cut side down in a pan prepared as follows: Butter a pan, sprinkle thickly with sugar, bits of butter and some cinnamon. Pour in sirup to cover the lower part of the pan with a layer of sirup. Set the rolls in this and bake as directed. When baked, turn the rolls out on a rack. If you want a roll that is covered with a plentiful supply of sirup, increase the amount of sirup that is poured into the pan. If a glazed surface is desired, additional sirup or honey may be poured over the tops of the rolls before they are to be baked.

PORK LOIN WITH APPLES OR TART JELLY



Cooked Apples Are Always Pleasant Accompaniment.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Because of their pleasant tartness, cooked apples are an acceptable accompaniment to any of the usual cuts of pork—roasts, chops or sausage. The apples need not always be made into sauce, however. Sometimes serve them baked, or fried, or glazed. Or have an apple dessert. Other slightly acid fruit flavors may take the place of apples; for a change—fried pineapple, for instance, or cranberry sauce in the winter months, or tart jellies like currant or beach plum.

Success in preparing pork cuts, says the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, depends on regulating the heat so as to cook the meat well done to the center of the piece and at the same time to keep the outside from becoming hard and dry. Moderate cooking temperature is best after the surface has been seared to develop rich flavor. It is neither necessary nor desirable to add water to pork roasts during cooking. Hams, shoulders and loins have sufficient fat on the outside to baste the lean meat, and so do not dry out when roasted fat side up at moderate temperature in open pans without added water.

For a pork loin roast have the butcher crack the bones so that it can be carved in slices between the ribs. Wipe the meat with a damp cloth. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and rub with flour. Lay the loin, ribs down and fat side up, on a rack in an open roasting pan. Sear the meat for 30 minutes, or until lightly browned, in a hot oven (480 degrees Fahrenheit) then reduce the temperature rapidly to a very moderate heat (300 degrees to 325 degrees Fahrenheit), and cook until the meat is tender. A loin weighing from 4 to 5 pounds will probably require from 2 to 2½ hours when these oven temperatures are used. A roast meat thermometer can be used with loins, just as with ham and other thick roasts. Put it into the raw meat so that the bulb reaches the thickest part and leave it in during all the time the roast is in the oven. When the mercury in the meat thermometer registers 185 degrees Fahrenheit, the meat is well done to the center.

Needless Pain!

People are often too patient with pain. Suffering when there is no need to suffer. Shopping with a head that throbs. Working though they ache all over.

And Bayer Aspirin would bring immediate relief!

The best time to take Bayer Aspirin is the moment you first feel the pain. Why postpone relief until the pain has reached its height? Why hesitate to take anything so harmless?

Read the proven directions for checking colds, easing a sore throat; relieving headaches and the pains of neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatism, etc.

You can always count on its quick comfort. But if pain is of frequent recurrence see a doctor as to its cause.

Wins Wife as First Prize!

IF you don't think your whole life can be changed by chance, read this. It is the story of a young man who was pretty well down and out, but he figured he might win a prize if he took some advice.

"As far back as I can remember I had been a weakling," says Mr. Calvin L. Floyd of Orlando, Florida. "A headache, it seemed, was to be my life companion. I was always dizzy in the mornings. Nothing I ate seemed good for me. Then I attended a health lecture in a sanatorium and the physician talked on 'faulty elimination.' That was certainly my trouble. One of the patients asked him about Nujol. He recommended it highly. I decided to try one bottle to see if there was anything in what he said about natural lubrication for the human body.

Many a life changed by a message like this one.

"Long before I had finished the first bottle my 'companion-headache' was gone. No more tired out feeling. I get a real kick out of life now. By the way, I almost forgot to tell you I found a new life companion, too!"

Perfectly simple, wasn't it? Mr. Floyd just learned the normal natural way to get rid of bodily poisons (we all have them) and nature did the rest. Why shouldn't you be well?

Nujol is not a medicine. It contains no drugs. It is effective, so you will be "regular as clock-work." You can buy it at all good drug stores in sealed packages for less than the price of a couple of good cigars.

Begin today. Millions have found that Nujol makes all the difference in the world. Nujol will make you feel fine and you can prove it.

Original "Chain Stores"

The trading posts of the Hudson's Bay company were the first chain stores, and some of them existed more than 250 years ago.

Husband—A perfectly civil war, eh?

Now, just how could we "contribute to the happiness of others?" Perhaps, merely by keeping still.

Children CRY for it

It may be the little stomach; it may be the bowels are sluggish. No matter what coats a child's tongue, its a safe and sensible precaution to give a few drops of Castoria. This gentle regulation of the little system soon sets things to rights. A pure vegetable preparation that can't harm a wee infant, but brings quick comfort—even when it is colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance.

And don't forsake Castoria as the child grows older. If you want to raise boys and girls with strong systems that will ward off constipation, stick to good old Castoria; and give nothing stronger when there's any irregularity except on the advice of a doctor. Castoria is sold in every drugstore, and the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

POULTRY

EASY TO DETECT POULTRY DISEASE

Expert Tells of Tests to Show Carriers of Ills.

"Fifteen years' experience has taught the Massachusetts poultry men that the so-called agglutination test is an efficient means of detecting carriers of bacillary white diarrhea infection," said W. R. Hinshaw, of the Massachusetts Agricultural college experiment station. In this test, made under a microscope, specimens of the suspected bacteria are mixed with a sample of diluted blood serum from the infected bird. "The laboratory test alone will not eradicate the disease; it is only one step in the progress."

Under the Massachusetts law, the control of the disease is voluntary with the poultryman, who pays for the service at the experiment station control laboratory at the rate of 10 cents a bird plus 1 cent for the leg band. The cost of 11 cents for each bird includes expenses of the blood collector as well as the actual laboratory work.

Mr. Hinshaw attributes the failure of certain poultrymen to eradicate the disease to a number of reasons. The poultryman may fail to test all his birds, or fail to retest at intervals within the season if the flock is found to be infected, or he may keep chicks which have been hatched before the test had been completed. Other reasons are the failure to remove reactors from the flock as soon as they are reported; the failure to burn offal from birds which react to the test killed for home use; and the failure to clean and disinfect the houses following the removal of reactors.

Sometimes the poultryman makes the mistake of holding reactors for egg-laying purposes, and feeding eggs from unknown sources to baby chicks. Again he may hatch eggs for poultrymen who have not tested their flocks, or buy stock such as eggs, chicks, and adults, from diseased flocks. When he returns birds to the flocks from poultry shows and egg-laying contests without first quarantining them, he runs danger. Lack of attention to details in the field at the time of collection of blood samples may result in failure to eradicate the disease.

Convenience Important in Poultry Buildings

Though convenience concerns the manager directly, it indirectly affects the poultry. The more convenient it is to do the work the easier it is, and the surer that it will be done; the poultry plant should be "get-at-able" for the manager or feeder.

Put the poultry house where it can be got to readily, and also make it possible to feed the poultry without having to run to the granary or stable for grain.

In the gate, the door, the driveway, and everything connected with the poultry, convenience should be studied.

Often this one item determines the difference between pleasure and drudgery, and the one is as easy to have as the other. Not only should the house be accessible, but the internal arrangements ought to be such that the necessary work may be done with the least amount of labor.

If the man can do the work in the hen house with the ease with which it is done in the horse stable, there will be fewer filthy poultry houses and much better returns.

Buckwheat Favored for Feeding During Winter

Buckwheat has some qualities to be recommended. It is oily and, therefore, supplies heat to the birds and is particularly adapted to winter feeding. It is fattening. Because it has so much woody fiber, however, it is only worth about one-half as much pound for pound as wheat for poultry feed. Ground and mixed with skim milk and buttermilk it makes a very good fattening mash. In scratch feeds for laying flocks it is generally used in no greater quantities than 10 per cent for the above reason: too much fiber.

Light Important

Light is very important in the poultry house in winter, because the days are short at best. If the hens do not have sufficient light to take full advantage of their opportunities to eat, they will not be able to lay many eggs. Artificial lights are considered profitable in increasing winter production, and it certainly is worth while to provide for the maximum benefits from natural daylight. Nothing contributes more to contentment and well-being of the flock than clean litter.

Save for Chicks

It is not too early to plan on saving some of the winter egg money to buy early chicks for the replenishment of the farm flock. Money is frequently saved by placing the order early, and the farmer is sure of obtaining the chicks at the right time. Installment buying helps many a man to obtain useful things. A hundred dollars for chicks may be hard to scrape up next spring. But if $20 can be placed in the chick fund every month it is a great help.

Careless Washing Spreads Disease

When Spray Residue Is Not Removed From Fruit Storage Rots Result.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Washing fruit to remove spray residue is another of the newer practices which add to the market value of the product when the job is properly done. But when carelessly done washing may be the means of spreading storage rots, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

Washing Proves Value.

For the past two years the washing treatment has been used commercially and has proved its value, says D. F. Fisher of the bureau of plant industry of the department, who is conducting investigations in this phase of fruit handling. "Comprehensive studies and surveys covering important shipping points and all the larger marketing centers," he points out, "have shown conclusively that both in storage and on the market washed fruit holds up as well or better than that which is unwashed, and in addition it usually offers a more attractive appearance.

"The principal hazard in washing apples, aside from increases in rots due to punctures resulting from extra handling, is caused by soluble arsenic, derived from the spray residue itself. This injury is usually localized at the blossom end," says Mr. Fisher. For this reason, he says, varieties characterized by a large proportion of open calyx tubes—such as Jonathan, Stayman, Winesap, Spitzenburg, and sometimes Delicious—should be sprayed rather than immersed in the cleaning solution. Other varieties such as Rome Beauty, Winesap, Ben Davis, Arkansas Black, and Yellow Newtown may be immersed without danger of starting core rots.

Change Washing Solution.

The department recommends that the washing solution be changed after about 500 bushels of apples or the equivalent in other fruits has been treated in each 100 gallons of chemical solvent. It also advises that fruit be dried as quickly as possible after the washing.

Market All "Weed" Trees Suitable Only for Fuel

Farmers owning woodlots should cull them as the dairy farmer culls his herds, says Parker O. Anderson, forester with the agricultural extension service of the University of Minnesota.

"The discouraging part of this woodlot business is that the owner is usually killing the goose that lays the golden egg," says the forester. "Many valuable trees cut and marketed for cordwood would, if left to grow, be better suited in time for a special and more desirable market and thus yield a higher return. We have weed trees in the woods as well as weeds in other crops—trees which are slow growing but of species that are crowding out the more desirable kinds.

"Weed trees are just as desirable for fuel purposes as the better, fast growing varieties of woodlot timber. Good woodlot management recognizes the same principles inculcated in dairy husbandry—elimination of the undesirables. Woodlots can be conserved and made a never failing source of income by means of selective and improvement cuttings."

Manufacture Pecan Oil From Waste Products

Pecan oil, described by chemists of the United States Department of Agriculture as of very mild, agreeable, and characteristic flavor, is one of the latest additions to the long list of products manufactured from what were formerly farm wastes.

Fine nut fragments accumulate at the pecan shelling plants. Chemists have made experimental pressings of this waste and determined the properties and composition of the oil. This oil is of excellent quality and can be used for making salad dressings or other edible products. It is necessary to express the oil before the nut waste becomes rancid, otherwise, however, the oil would not be edible.

Potatoes Are "Gassed" to Incite Sprouting

Science has awakened an extra amount of ambition in the common potato and literally "kidded" it out of its usual winter vacation. Everyone knows that spuds like to rest about four months before they begin to sprout. At the Nebraska agricultural college experiment station, the spuds are "gassed" and made to believe that the long winter is over. They begin to grow within three weeks after they are dug in the fall. They are dipped in a liquid called ethylene chlorohydrin for a minute, then put in an air-tight container to be gassed for 24 hours.

Repairing Roofs

The repairing of roofs to prevent rain from dripping on the feed and spoiling it will save much money both in feed and in chickens that might die or be thrown out of production by eating such feed. It is a good plan to use all old feed first rather than use a lot of new feed as soon as it is delivered—better see that the new feed is not piled on top of the old feed, for if the old feed is allowed to stand, it might be older than is thought when it is desired to use it.

Growing Tree Stock to Order Best Plan

Nurseryman Knows in Advance What Is Wanted.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the new ideas in fruit growing is that of having nursery stock grown according to specification. It is true that orchardists now specify the particular varieties they want, but other than that they know very little about the stock they plant. Closer co-operation between fruit growers and nurserymen would make it possible for the growers to get stock from high-producing strains and at the same time would allow the nurseryman to know in advance what stock will be wanted.

Such an arrangement would be highly advantageous to the nurseryman since a large amount of nursery stock is annually consigned to the trash pile for the simple reason that it is impossible to predict the demand for all types of stock. If growers placed their orders far enough in advance so the nurseryman could grow the desired stock for delivery two or three years later it would guarantee sale of the lot and justify special attention to it.

This suggestion comes from Dr. L. C. Corbett of the United States Department of Agriculture. Doctor Corbett says that such a plan would be beneficial to the grower because it would eliminate much of the guessing now prevalent in the nursery business. With the knowledge that all of his stock is sold if it meets specifications, the nurseryman could devote more time to producing a high quality product.

Mower Is Continuously Operated at High Speed

One of the farm machines which must continuously operate at high speed and under adverse conditions is the mower. Under the most favorable mowing conditions, the mower is under constant strain. Because it is called upon to do a variety of jobs, from cutting heavy hay in the field to cleaning weeds out of a fence row or along a ditch, it is highly important that the mower be in perfect working condition. Checking the alignment of the cutter bar, seeing that the knives are centered properly on the guards and giving careful attention to lubrication often help to lighten its draft and to improve the quality of work done.

A type of mower has been developed which can be operated at either of two speeds, at high speed in heavy hay where the going is hard, or at low speed when the hay is light and the cutting easy. This 2-speed mower operates on the same principle as the transmission on an automobile. It can be operated with either tractor power or horse power.

Continuous Corn Land Helped by Using Manure

Results from the use of manure on farm land are measured mainly by increases in crop yields. This, however, is not the only benefit derived. A good illustration is had from the Morrow soil fertility plots at the Illinois experiment station. A comparison is made of land that has been in continuous corn since 1876, one plot receiving manure, the other receiving no manure. Aside from increased yield in favor of the manure, the most striking comparison was of the physical condition of the soil. With both plots fall plowed, the land that had no manure was puddled and run together the following spring, whereas the land that had manure was ready to work 10 to 14 days earlier.

Grease is better than oil for protecting the plowshares from rust when they are stored for the winter, as the grease stays where it is put.

That a farmer is ahead in applying a preservative treatment to his fence posts has been clearly demonstrated from the dollars and cents viewpoint.

Every farmer who keeps chickens should study the winter needs of his poultry flock and will find it worth while to take time to supply these needs.

Duck eggs are successfully hatched in incubators at about the same temperature as hen eggs. The main thing is to provide plenty of moisture, which seems difficult sometimes.

The incubator is a success, which has come to stay and which should be considered as necessary upon the farm as a plow or separator. Its operation calls for no heavy manual labor and no remarkable degree of skill.

"Everyone Raves About My Rolls, Cakes and Breads," Says Mrs. Galloway

"They Could Make Just As Good, If They Used Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour"

Mrs. Jake Galloway, Beaman, Iowa

"At the Iowa State Fair last year I won twenty prizes. A first on Cloverleaf Rolls, third on Nut Bread as well as several seconds and several thirds on different cakes—all made with Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour. Everyone raves about my rolls, cakes and breads, but I tell them they could make just as good if they used GOLD MEDAL 'Kitchen-tested' Flour. I can surely recommend it as an all-purpose flour."

A Boon to Women All Over the Country

THOUSANDS of women all over the country now know how to bake prize cakes, pies, breads and biscuits every time. They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe.... it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is 'Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Sheep With Four Horns

A flock of four-horned sheep will soon be scattered through the United States. These strange animals were discovered several years ago by Dr. L. Dunn, who has resided in various parts of Central and South America, and he encountered them while crossing the country from Maracaibo toward the Pacific coast, but as he had been deserted by his native guides he was unable to bring any of the animals back with him, but this time he was prepared and succeeded in catching 24. Twenty-one survived the trip to the coast and it is likely that the remainder will reach this country successfully. The ewes and rams are all supplied with four horns, two standing upright and two turned down.

Peculiarity in Home of Thomas Jefferson

Monticello, historic home of Thomas Jefferson, has many oddities which excite the popular interest, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. For example, it is a home without beds. The master slept (and died) on a cot of his own contrivance located in an opening between his study and what should have been his bedroom. He was able to jump out of it into either room. The cot was so arranged that it was raised to the ceiling during the daytime to leave a passageway between the two rooms.

There are unfounded tales that Jefferson was afraid of his life and took this means to insure safety. One basis for this, probably, is the secret room directly above his bed which has porthole-like openings in the walls, formerly covered by pictures, through which supposed bodyguards could fire down on intruders if need be.

"The butcher's boy answered with a sneer:

"'It wouldn't be worth a darn.'"

Fish and Game Cub Information

Rabbits and Quail Plentiful in Indiana

The real hunting season in Indiana opened on Nov. 11, the 10th being Sunday, on which day it is unlawful to hunt. Reports received from hunters and game wardens indicate that rabbits and quail shooting has been excellent. Rabbits are particularly numerous. That this would be the case was predicted last year when through fear of becoming affected with the rabbit disease, tularemia, thousands of hunters did not go afield. The number of rabbits killed last year in November and December was considerably less than in previous years. This accounts for an increased number during the present year. The Department has received no infomation that would indicate any epidemic disease among rabbits in this State. It would be surprising if hunters did not cripple some game which they never get. Later is found by others and gives rise to thoughts that the bird or animal might have died from disease.

Hunters Need Permission to Hunt

Under Indiana game laws it is necessary to have permission from the landowner or tenant to hunt on his ppemises. Unfortunately a lot of persons do not follow the law and in consequence farmers are greatly incensed. Inasmuch as it is the duty of the Department to enforce this section of the game law as well as others hunters need not be surprised if they are arrested by game wardens for hunting without permission. In cases of this kind the landowners however, are required to sign the affidavits and appear as witnesses. If a hunter will read his license he will find on the face, "Get permission of owner or tenants of land." This is meant to serve as a warning.

Unlawful Hunting with Searchlight

Numerous complaints are coming to the Department from farmers relative to violations of the law which prohibits shooting on or within 150 yards of any public highway by the use of an artificial light. Game wardens have succeeded in apprehending quite a few of these offenders since the rabbit law opened. Most of those violating this statute are market hunters who violate the bag limit on rabits, same being but 10 per day. Shooting at night in itself is dangerous, but when practiced on public highways doubly so. Game wardens will welcome any information that will help to stop this practice.

Winter Feeding of Quail

The matter of weather has a great deal to do with the amount of game birds carried over from one season to the other. Sleet and heavy snow make it difficult for birds to find food. Game wardens have been instructed to feed quail and other game birds this winter. The Department is willing to furnish the grain to persons willing to feed quail when their food supply is shut off.

Arrests and Convictions Made in October, 1929

In October 258 persons were arrested for violating game and fish laws. 240 were convicted; 16 remained to be tried, only 2 were dismissed. Fines and costs amounted to $4,967.69. The leading offenses were hunting, fishing, trapping without license, 74; unlawful taking of fur animals in close season, 44; Sunday hunting, 29; hunting without permission and shooting waterfowl before sunrise, 20 each; shooting on highway, 19; illegal nets, seines and fish traps, 16; shooting quail out of season, 12; possession fish spears, 7; hunting in State park and dynamiting fish, 3 each; taking undersize fish and hunting with searchlight, 2 each.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Limpert, of Hicksville, were dinner guests on Thanksgiving Day at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Shilling.

Mr. and Mrs. Zay Sailer were guests from Wednesday until Sunday in the home of the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Keller in Fort Wayne.

More than 5000 farmers are expected to attend the 28th annual Agricultural conference to be held at Purdue University January 13-17. The conference is the most outstanding agricultural event in the Hoosier state. Since 1903, the attendance has grown from practically nothing to 4,872 last year. It is the occasion when nearly a score of agricultural associations hold their annual meetings. State corn and potato shows are held at the same time. Boys and girls club exhibits, which will be shown during the conference have always attracted a wide interest. The exhibits this year will include corn, potatoes, sewing, canning, baking and health.

FARMERS SHORT COURS ASSURED

the third night. This is the crowning event of the short course and is open to all who care to attend and who purchase tickets. The meal is served by some local organization at a reasonable figure. During the meal an orchestra plays softly. Immediately after the meal is over there is a half hour of good clean fun. This is followed by an address by an outstanding speaker on a subject that is very close to the heart of every one.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hull and F. B. Leighty and wife spent last Thursday with Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Quance at Fort Wayne. In the afternoon ye editor and wife motored to Etna Green and visited with Mr. and Mrs. Howard Renner until Friday afternoon.

Miss Vivian Mason, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Mason, of St. Joe, and Mr. LaVon Murphy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Murphy, of Hicksville, were united in marriage on Thanksgiving Day at the parsonage in Butler by the Rev. S. R. Aldrich. Congratulations.

VOL. XLIII — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, DEC. 12, 1929 — NUMBER 49

Woman Dies In Collision

Deliberately Drives Into Car at Intersection of Scio and Spencerville Road

Mrs. Cora Crabb, 50, living near the Henry bridge over the St. Joe river in DeKalb county, was fatally injured in an automobile collision 2 miles east of Coburntown church, Saturday afternoon at about 1 o'clock.

Mrs. Crabb died in the Amaden hospital at Hicksville an hour later.

Although the view of the crossing of the Scio and Spencerville roads is unobstructed, Mrs. Crabb, on her death bed, said she did not see the other automobile, driven by Lloyd Goldsmith of Spencerville. It was raining at the time of the wreck.

Mr. Goldsmith told authorities that he blew his horn before getting to the crossing. His car was pulling a trailer loaded with sheep.

Mrs. Crabb suffered a fractured left leg and a crushed chest. Mr. Goldsmith was uninjured. The Crabb automobile was demolished, while the other car was only slightly damaged.

Mrs. Crabb was taken to the home of Roscoe Conine, just south of the corner, whence she was taken to the Amaden hospital in an Ambulance.

Mrs. Crabb was on her way to Fort Wayne at the time of the accident, For the last 14 years she had been housekeeper for Charles Webster, who operates a filling station eight miles west of Hicksville at the Henry bridge on the St. Joe river.

The body was taken to the undertaking parlors of Henry Krill at Edgerton. A son lives in Michigan, where Mrs. Crabb lived before she came to DeKalb county.

An investigation will be made, but it is believed that the coroner will determine the death accidental.

DIVIDED HONORS WITH HAMILTON

The boy's and girl's basket ball teams of Hamilton and St. Joe divided up the proceeds on last Friday night by taking a game each. Both Hamilton teams are worthy of being called seasoned High School players and gave the local High School a real romp for their money. But the locals had the thing doped out to take both games and came within two points in the boys game of doing it.

The girls game was first on the schedule which happened to be a real contest. The floor work and guarding of both teams was fast and close. The first half ended 11 to 14 in favor of St. Joe and the last half 26 to 22 in favor of the locals. Ginther was credited with one field goal and Storer had 10 field goals and 4 fouls to her credit.

The boys game was just what the crowd came out to see—a game with the movies in. The game started off with both teams close five men defense and it was nearly five minutes before either team scored. The first half finished for St. Joe 15 to 5 but in the last half Hamilton got some good breaks on long shots and tied the score and took the lead on two free throws from the foul line which they held until the end.

DISCOVERS CURE FOR MENINGITIS

Relief from a disease that strikes terror into the hearts of the afflicted as well as those nearest them—spinal meningitis—is claimed by Dr. Edward S. Lauzer of Hot Springs, Wyoming.

Dr. Lauzer, physician of Rock Springs, said that by withdrawing the spinal fluid and injecting it into the muscle tissue he has effected an absolute cure for the dread disease, which yearly takes a great toll throughout the country.

The treatment was used for the first time last June. Since then, he has employed it on all of his meningitis patients with perfect success.

In a further statement of explanation, Dr. Lauzer said that the withdrawal of the spinal fluid reduces the pressure on the spinal cord, while the injection into the muscle tissue apparently rids the muscle of the disease.

Dr. Lauzer does not know the reasons for the success of his treatment, but said he was busy in further research. A complete report of the discovery and treatment thus far has been given the Wyoming State Medical society.

"We inject the spinal fluid in the muscles, and it cures them," was the doctor's comment. "That's all we know."

FLING PROMOTED TO TRAFFIC DEPARTMENT

H. K. Fling and wife are now in Chicago, where he has been given a position in the traffic department of the Wabash Railroad Company. Eric Elvis, of Wauseon, Ohio, has been acting as relief agent until Thursday, when R. W. Brodbeck returns to take charge of the station.

AVERAGE "STICK-UP" MAN BUT 19

The average stick-up man is but 19 years old, and most of them are between 17 and 22, Warden Lawes of Sing Sing prison declares.

At Sing Sing 200 criminals under 21 have been received in the last 17 months, Three of these were 16; 22 were 17; 34 were 18; 68 were 19, and 73 were 20.

Of minor prisoners now there, two are 16; 16 are 17; 87 are 18; 57 are 19, and 82 are 20.

Farm Woman is U. S. Canning Champion

DeKalb County Housewives Had Entries in National Canning Contest

Great interest has been occasioned among local housewives in the announcement from Chicago of the prize winners in the National Canning Contest held recently. Among the DeKalb county women who had entries in the contest were: Miss Sara Bell Rex, Mrs. Fred G. Rex, Butler; Ella McClelland, Irene Friend, Mrs. E. M. Friend, Mrs. Paul Smith, Corunna, Indiana.

The grand champion winner in the contest was Mrs. Mary Hvass of Kennan, Wis., whose entry of a quart of green peas brought her $1250. Mrs. Hvass was awarded first prize of $250 by the judges for the best entry in the vegetable class, and $1000 as grand sweepstakes prize for the finest jar of food in the three classes of vegetables, fruits and meats.

The first prize of $250 in the meat class went to Mrs. Dudley Brooks, of Roba Red, Ala., for a jar of chicken, while Mrs. Margery Drew, of Athol, Mass., won the prize of $250 on a jar of pears adjudged first in the fruit class.

In all $5825 in cash prizes was distributed to the 208 winners in the contest in which more than 25,000 women and girls from every section of the United States had entries.

Mrs. Hvass is a veteran canner and puts up yearly between 600 and 800 quarts of food to cut living expenses. She had planned to put up ten quarts of peas for home use this year, but took extra pains with one jar which she decided to enter in the contest. From her vegetable patch she picked a milk pailful of peas and as she shelled them she selected the peas by hand and then carefully sifted out those of even size by use of a colander. The result was a jar of perfectly uniform peas which amazed the judges. Mrs. Hvass plans to use the $1250 in stocking the little farm with purebred Holstein cows, an ambition she nurtured for many years.

A significant fact revealed by the contest is that American housewives are abandoning to a great extent the old-time canning methods, like the open kettle, cold pack, hot pack and water bath, in favor of the steam pressure cooker method advocated by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Fully 75 per cent of the prize winning jars, including Mrs. Hvass', were put up by this method. Mrs. Hvass processed her prize peas in the pressure cooker which she uses every day in her cooking, and attributes the greatest part of her success in winning the prize to her method of canning.

MANY COUNTY OFFICIALS TO BE ELECTED NEXT YEAR

Nicholas Funk of Wilmington township, chairman of the board of DeKalb county commissioners, will complete his first term on January 1, his second term starting at that time.

At the general election in 1930 two commissioners will be elected. The second term of Commissioner Edward Kelham of Butler township will expire December 31, 1930, and the first term of Charles G. Potter of Franklin township, a year later. Mr. Funk and Mr. Potter are republicans and Mr. Kelham a democrat.

A large number of other county offices will be filled by the 1930 election as follows: auditor, treasurer, state representative, assessor, recorder, posecuting attorney, sheriff and councilmen. A congressman, state senator, township trustees and township assessors also will be elected.

Nominations for all offices will be made in May and the campaign will open soon after the first of the year.

AWARDS DRAINAGE CONTRACT SATURDAY

The contract for the construction of the George Wade et al drain, location in Concord and Spencer townships was awarded Saturday to Edward Booth of Kendallville for $3,090. Other bidders were Jay Martin of Waterloo, whose bid was $3,250 and Homer H. Donley of St. Joe for $3,095. The estimated cost of construction as given by Charles T. Miser, county surveyor was $3,657.20. Clyde Hart of Spencerville, is the superintendent of construction. The drain was previously sold but the contractor was unable to furnish a bond, making the resale compulsory.

GET-TO-GETHER

A community get-to-gether will be held at the gym Thursday evening at 7:30 with the purpose of getting acquainted with the parent and the teacher, also meeting the new County Superintendent and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Stallman, of Auburn, and having a general good time. Program interspersed with games. The public is cordially invited to attend, and to bring popcorn and apples.

CONG. HOGG WOULD AID DISABLED WAR VETERANS

Congressman Hogg introduced a bill in Congress which when passed will provide compensation for every World War veteran who is totally and permanently disabled or blind regardless of whether such disability was due to service or not.

Mr. Hogg said that in the Twelfth Indiana District there are 48 World War veterans who are totally disabled and who have distinguished service records and who under the present law can procure no compensation. Much support has been promised by other Congressmen to this bill.

REQUEST APPOINTMENT OF MARION CLARK

An unusual request was made of the DeKalb county commissioners during their December term, which ended Wednesday, when the township trustees, by unanimous vote, asked them to retain Marion Clark of Smithfield township, as county highway superintendent.

The board Wednesday appointed Burl Enzor as third drainage commissioner for the Melissa Kelly drain in Newville township.

The resignation of Geo. Miller as superintendent of the Dora B. Weaner highway was accepted and Henry Gunsenhouser was appointed his successor with bond of $2,000.

Everett Francies, of Spencerville, reports selling 300 Stark apple trees to Vern Killian, of near Hicksville, and a new orchard will be started.

THE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT IN INDUSTRY

LESSON TEXT—Deut. 24:14, 15; Matt. 20:1-16; Mark 12:1-9; Luke 3:14; Eph. 6:5-9; I Tim. 6:17-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—As ye would men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Kindness to Those Who Work for Us.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Kindness to Those Who Work for Us.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Fair Play in the Day's Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Golden Rule in the Work of the World.

While some of these instructions were given to Israel, showing what God required of them, we should remember that He requires no less at our hand.

I. Treatment of Hired Servants (Deut. 24:14, 15).

Political and industrial power have been used through the centuries in the oppression of the poor and weak.

1. Oppression forbidden (v. 14).

The man who hires out is usually poor and needy. The employer should not take advantage of his poverty.

2. Foreigners to have the same treatment as fellow countrymen.

3. Wages to be promptly paid (v. 15).

The laborer was to be paid at the end of the day. The credit system in industry is greatly to be deplored. It places the purchaser at a disadvantage, and causes a bad psychological reaction upon his personality.

II. Fidelity to Contracts (Matt. 20:1-16).

In this parable it is clearly made known that there was agreement between employer and employee as to wages and time. Though those employed at a later hour received the same wage, there was no occasion for complaint by those first employed, for they received their wage according to agreement. Fidelity to agreement, is essential in industry.

III. Unfaithful Tenancy (Mark 12:1-9).

In this parable a valuable vineyard was rented out to husbandmen. They not only refused to turn over the just returns to its owner, but shamefully treated his servants who were sent to collect rental. Those entrusted with possessions and power are under solemn obligation to make proper returns therefor.

IV. Contentment With Wages (Luke 3:14).

One of the chief difficulties in the industrial world today is discontent with wages. Oftentimes workers fail to take account of the conditions of business even to the extent of going on strike and make demands as to wages which the proprietor cannot meet. Contentment with wages does not mean that one should not be ambitious to prepare himself for a more efficient service and higher wages.

V. Reciprocal Duties of Servants and Masters (Eph. 6:5-9).

1. Servants are to be obedient to their masters (vv. 5-8).

This obedience should be (1) "with fear and trembling"; that is, the servant should have a proper regard for his master and an earnest desire to please him. (2) With singleness of heart. Servants should perform their tasks as though doing them for Christ's sake. (3) Not with eye service. Acceptable service should be honest, not merely to please the eye of the one who looks on, but as unto Christ. (4) With good will. This expresses the spirit of service. It should not primarily be for approval or pay. Christian servants will perform their duties with the same fidelity as they would unto Christ. (5) Rewarded by the Lord (v. 8). The Lord takes account of our service in the common rounds of life and will one day reward us accordingly.

2. Masters to be considerate (v. 9).

Just as servants are to give wholehearted consideration to their masters, so masters are to look out for the best interests of their servants.

(1) Masters should desist from threatenings. (2) They should be impartial in dealings with their servants.

VI. Responsibility of the Rich (1 Tim. 6:17-19).

Riches are possible to Christians, but most perilous. God charges such:

1. Not to be high-minded; that is, to have a sense of superiority.

2. Not to trust in the uncertainty of riches.

3. Riches to be properly used.

(1) To do good. Not for selfish gratification, but for the welfare of others. (2) To be minister to good works. (3) The rich are under obligation to minister to the poor and the needy.

Intolerable Pride

I think half the troubles for which men go slouching in prayer to God are caused by their intolerable pride. Many of our cares are but a morbid way of looking at our privilege. We let our blessings get moldy and then call them curses.—Beecher.

Preparedness

He is to be pitied, indeed, who has seen better days ahead of him, yet has made no preparation for living them better.

VARYING WAYS ICE CREAM CAN BE SERVED

Nicely Arranged Plates of Ice Cream, Cake and Cookies.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Ice cream can come on the table as just ice cream—dipped from a box or a freezer, or cut in slices from a brick—or it may be served in a charming and interesting way that will give a delightful touch to the entire meal. An attractive setting, of course plays its part—pretty dishes of glass or china, a nicely arranged plate of cake or cookies, a beautiful bowl of flowers. The illustration, taken by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture suggests some of these accessories.

In this case the ice cream was in reality a mousse, made in a ring mold which was filled, when turned out, with canned peaches. Each portion included some of the peach, placed on a plate neatly and attractively with cake to accompany it. Sometimes this combination is reversed. The ice cream is put into halves of large canned peaches. "Peach Melba" is the popular name for this dessert. Half canteloupes and honeydew melons are often used as containers for ice cream, adding greatly to both flavor and charm of appearance. Vanilla cream with canteloupe and lemon or orange ice with honeydew melons, are liked.

A "parfait" might be called a sundae built on a vertical plan. A tall narrow glass is used. In the bottom is put a little of the ice cream; then a spoonful of fruit or chocolate sauce, according to the flavor wanted, then more ice cream, and a generous serving of whipped cream, topped by a candied or maraschino cherry for color.

Ice cream sandwich, which is ice cream placed between layers of sponge cake; pie a la mode, or pie with a helping of ice cream on top; ice cream with berries or cut up peaches, bananas or other fruits; ice cream in sherbet cups with chocolate sauce or maple sirup, are other familiar ways of presenting this wholesome and always welcome dessert to your family.

PROTECT FRUITS AGAINST INSECTS

Plan to Keep Out Various Pests During Drying.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It is hardly necessary to point out that all dried fruits, whether bought commercially or prepared at home, should be stored in tight containers to protect them from insect attack. Adult insects of various species choose dried peaches, apricots, raisins, figs, and other fruits as suitable places for laying their eggs. These will soon hatch out into larvae or worms and make the product unfit for food.

The bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture receives many requests, however, for information on how to protect peaches and other farm orchard fruits from insect pests during the process of drying. All fruit should be covered with a light cheesecloth while drying, to keep out dust as well as insects. An additional precaution suggested by entomologists studying the insects that attack stored and dried products is to sterilize the peaches or other fruits by heating them for a short time in a hot oven. This should kill any eggs that have been laid on the fruit, also any living weevils.

Another method is to fumigate each batch of dried fruit with carbon disulphide and then store it immediately in tight containers. The fumigation is accomplished by placing the fruit in a tight container and exposing it overnight to the fumes of the chemical. One or two ounces of carbon disulphide is sufficient to fumigate a space of ten cubic feet. The chemical should be poured out in a shallow pan and placed on top of the fruit. The fumes of carbon disulphide are inflammable and fire in any form should be kept from the room in which it is being used.

Tuna Fish, Spaghetti, and Tomatoes Favored

The flavor of tuna fish is enhanced by serving it with tomato. Here is an "all-in-one" lunch dish which takes advantage of this excellent combination of flavors, and which introduces our old friend spaghetti in a new way. It is from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.

¼ pound spaghetti, or 1 pint broken
2 tbs. chopped celery
6-ounce can tuna fish
1 quart canned tomatoes
1 tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper

Cook the spaghetti in boiling salted water until tender, then drain. Remove the fish from the can, drain, and cut the fish into small pieces. Cook the celery in the oil from the fish, and add one or two tablespoonfuls of olive oil or other fat if desired. Add the tomatoes and cook until fairly thick. Stir in the spaghetti and the fish and season with salt and pepper. Simmer until well blended, then serve.

If Mayonnaise Curdles

If your mayonnaise curdles or separates, the trouble can be remedied by using a mixture of cornstarch and water. To one tablespoonful of cornstarch add two tablespoonfuls of water. Stir together and add this to the separated mayonnaise. If one treatment is not enough, repeat. You will find that the treatment seldom fails to make the dressing smooth and firm.

Split Pea Souffle Will Make Hearty Lunch Dish

The combination of several eggs with the puree obtained from cooked split peas makes this a hearty enough dish for lunch or supper. Serve it with a crisp raw vegetable salad. The recipe is from the bureau of home economics.

4 eggs
½ cup green split peas
1½ cups water
1 cup milk
2 tbs. flour
3 tbs. butter
4 tbs. finely cut celery
2 tbs. finely cut onion
2 tbs. finely cut parsley
1¼ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
Several dashes of tabasco sauce

Wash the split peas. Soak them in one cupful of water overnight. In the morning, add the remaining water to the soaked peas and cook until very soft. Press through a fine sieve. Cook the celery and the onion in the butter for a few minutes. Stir in the flour until thoroughly mixed, then add the milk, and cook until thick. Pour the hot mixture into the well-beaten egg yolks. Add the pea puree and the other seasonings. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake in a buttered dish in a very moderate oven (300 degrees Fahrenheit) for about one hour, or until set in the middle. Serve at once.

Plan for Making Apple Butter Without Cider

Good apple butter is often made from tart apples without the use of cider. Enough water is added to the sliced apples to make a thin apple sauce, which is then cooked very slowly over a low fire for three or four hours. A pound to the gallon of brown rather than white sugar is added when the cooking is about two-thirds done. The amount of spice and vanilla to be used is determined by taste. Stir often.

Several variations of flavor are possible by using other fruit juices. For instance, a pint of grape juice may be added to each gallon of peeled and sliced apples, cook into sauce and strained. Add also one cupful of brown sugar and one-quarter teaspoonful of salt. Cook slowly and stir often for two hours.

To make apple butter with lemons, slice four lemons, cover with water, and let stand overnight. Next morning put them in a reserving kettle with eight pounds of apples, pared, cored, and sliced. Cook for one hour, add three pounds of sugar, and cook slowly with frequent stirring one and a half hours longer, or until of the proper thickness.

Cereals in Baked Apples

Use any left-over cereal you have. Wash and core the apples and fill the centers with the left-over cereal. Put the apples in a baking dish. Place a dot of butter and one teaspoonful of sugar on each apple. A few drops of lemon juice may be sprinkled over all. Bake in a moderate oven until the apples are soft. Serve hot with cream for breakfast or as the dessert at dinner or supper.

Baked Indian Pudding

Scald one quart of milk and add half a cupful of molasses and one tablespoonful of butter. Mix three-fourths cupful of corn meal with half a tablespoonful of ginger and half a teaspoonful of salt, then pour the liquid over the dry ingredients. Beat in one egg and pour the mixture into a buttered baking dish. Bake for two hours in a moderate oven.

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, his motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has affected Mr. Tolliver's eyes to the point of threatened blindness. Ginger has tried in many ways to add to the family's slender income, but she is not discouraged. Marjory wins the beauty prize, $50.00. She gives the money to her father as part of the expense necessary for the treatment of his eyes by Chicago specialists.

This one small section of the house from the very beginning of their residence, was Ginger's own. It was difficult of approach, for there were no stairs leading to it, and sole admission was by means of a wabbly old ladder of six rounds, which, carefully balanced against the wall at the end of the upper hall, led to the trapdoor which opened upward into the attic. Ginger loved the attic most of all for its inaccessibility. The trapdoor, which swung on a hinged lock and had to be pushed upward with one hand, was no obstacle, but an added charm in her eyes. On the attic side of the door, she had, with her own hands, driven a big staple, added another hook, and when she went thither on matters of any special moment, she locked it furtively behind her.

The studio was her sacred retreat, and on this particular Sunday afternoon she had a definite motive in retirement, for she sought the guidance of the Muses. Ginger had made a find. Eddy Jackson had brought to the parsonage, as a Saturday gift from his mother, a jar of preserved peaches wrapped in an old page of the New York World. Helen had crumpled it lightly into the waste basket, where the sharp eye of Ginger Ella had espied it, whence her greedy fingers had rescued it. And from it she learned, to her delight, that the New York World would pay five dollars each for the Bright Sayings of Children.

One of Ginger's great grievances in life was the tendency of her sisters to recall, and repeat, smart sayings of her own none-too-remote childhood. Such repetition reduced her to abject and helpless fury. But she noted that the auditors always laughed, ample proof of the presence of humor. She cast about in her memory for the most amusing of these pseudo laugh-producers, and unable to discover merit by her own judgment, she hit upon the one that had produced the greatest gales of merriment. Merely changing names and relationships from her own and Helen's to that of a mother and daughter, she wrote:

"Mrs. Ingraham spent an entire afternoon assisting a neighbor to cut out and fit a gown, and when the garment was entirely finished, she wished to make payment for the time consumed. 'Oh, no, said Mrs. Ingraham pleasantly, 'I shall not take a cent for it. I did it entirely out of friendship.' The neighbor was insistent, but Mrs. Ingraham remained firm, and would not take the money. At last she turned to Alice, Mrs. Ingraham's small daughter standing near and said, 'Alice, tell me, how can I make your mother take this five dollars which she has fully earned?' Alice considered a moment, and then announced gravely, 'You might give it to me, and she will borrow it.'"

Ginger wrote, corrected, and copied. Then she read it, distastefully. "It's a dumb thing," she thought frowningly. But the memory of unfailing laughter encouraged her, and she folded it neatly, tucked it into an envelope, and addressed it in a firm large hand.

At six o'clock, the girls came together in the kitchen where they hurriedly set out a light supper, in order to be at church again at seven for the meeting of the Epworth league. Mr. Tolliver did not attend this, as it was a service especially calculated to encourage and train the younger members of the congregation in active participation, and he inclined to the belief that they took part with more freedom in his absence.

On Monday afternoon, at one o'clock, the anxious little family gathered in the living room to say good-by to Mr. Tolliver and Miriam, starting for Chicago. Such tremendous issues were involved in this small journey. Perhaps he would return without the hated glasses, perhaps the dear tired eyes would see once more the love that shone in theirs. Perhaps the dreaded operation would be declared inevitable. Perhaps things would just drag on and on, month after month, as they had dragged in the past.

They went out to the veranda, Miriam leading the way with the light bag. Her father reached for it, struggled with her playfully for possession of it. She tucked her hand into his arm, looking back. The girls smiled at her, she smiled in return. Their smiles were sad, their father could not see the smiles. Their young eyes yearned with pain. Their father could not see the yearning. He waved a hand at them in blithe farewell.

"Be good girls. Ellen don't let anybody else go man-mad while I am away."

"You must mean Miss Jenkins. She is the only one left."

Light words they were, and gay voices, for their father heard.

But Miss Jenkins unaccountably, without a word, detached herself from the cluster of girls and ran up to him. She threw both arms about his shoulders, and kissed him on both cheeks.

"Be careful, oh, be careful," she said, and her face worked with emotion.

In the dramatic silence which followed this unexpected outburst, Miriam's light hand led her father away.

"Why—my dear—" gasped Helen. "Why, why—"

"Oh, the poor, brave, dear, afflicted soul," wept Miss Jenkins. "Going away like that—with just that helpless young girl to look after him. I shouldn't have permitted it. I should have gone myself."

"Oh, Miriam is very capable. She has always gone before. She will take care of him."

But Miss Jenkins, still weeping, without a word, pulled away from her and hurried down the flagstone path toward her own home.

Ginger's eyes were stormily reflective.

"H'm," she muttered. "H'm!—Man-mad. The darn thing's catching."

Later that afternoon, Eddy Jackson, calling by telephone, got Ginger on the wire.

"Have you anyone there who would like a little beauing?" he inquired teasingly.

"Marjory would like it, I suppose, but I'm here to see that she doesn't get it."

"Miriam there?"

"No, she has gone to Chicago with father. Helen has gone driving, and for dinner, with the mathematical squire, and won't be home until late. Margie's here. I'm here, and if you want to hold hands we can get Miss Jenkins."

"I don't. But I have a chap here—man I met in Chicago a long time ago—pretty nice fellow—lives in New York—just back from a two years tour of the world and all points east. I thought perhaps Marjory might take him on for the evening, but since Miriam is away, you would have to girl-friend me."

Even over the telephone Eddy could feel the sudden avarice in Ginger's voice, the covetous glitter of her bright eyes, the guile in her flying thoughts. New York—Chicago—around the world—

"Why, Eddy—of course! I'd love to. Marjory will adore it—me, too. You know I always enjoy you, Eddy, you've got so much sense."

"We'll breeze in about eight, then."

Ginger flew up the stairs. "Margie, Margie," she called. "Quick—put on the dress."

Marjory's calm was maddening. She was manicuring her pink nails. She looked up evenly, looked down, continued to polish.

"The dress—the dress! He is from New York, and Eddy Jackson is bringing him to—to look at you. Around the world, my dear, two years of it—and that takes money! He's used to people dressing up for dinner every single night, I dare say he'll wear an evening gown himself—I mean dress suit. I'll put on Helen's Alice-blue organdie. It just fits me."

Marjory considered. The mere joy of dressing was a point in favor.

"Well, I don't know. I dare say it would be all right. Lots of folks do dress for dinner."

"Oh, darling, how good of you. I'll do all the work. We'll be having after-dinner coffee by the floor lamp."

"But we haven't the right cups—"

"We're going to borrow the gold set out of Helen's hope chest. The set the Gleaners gave her for Christmas."

"If we break one of those gold cups—"

"We won't. And if that dumb-bell of an Eddy Jackson gives us away—I'll—I'll— Hurry, darling, and put on the dress. I'll fix things downstairs."

Ginger sped away to don her sister's organdie before she carefully removed the frail golden dishes from among the wedding treasures in her sister's chest, and carried them gingerly down the stairs.

When, some sixty minutes later Eddy Jackson appeared in the open doorway with his customary blithe, "Hello, everybody," a ravishing vision presented itself. Marjory lovely laughing, sat among the cushions in the wide couch by the floor lamp, with a delicate cup poised between her white fingers. At her side with the shining array of the golden coffee set on a small table close at her hand, was Ginger in blue organdie.

"Come in," she called brightly. "We are having our coffee slowly, so you can join us."

"Coffee? Oh, indeed, I see." Eddy's voice was enigmatical, but, rallying with a visible effort, he proceeded to introduce his friend, Alexander Murdock, a genuinely romantic figure, although neither garbed in conventional dress suit nor shining coat of mail. He was very tall, with a great ease of manner and complete self-possession, with sleek dark hair, and dark bright eyes, and a thin brown face. Ginger could have danced with joy.

She poured the coffee with fingers that trembled just a little, casting discreet proprietary glances at Marjory to make sure that she remained vividly alert and interested, and frowning terribly at Eddy Jackson on the side. Eddy studied the delicate lines of his small cup with a significant fascination, balanced the small saucer precariously on his large hand, and emptied the cup in two large draughts, requesting more, and again more.

Alexander Murdock, on the other hand, as became a genuinely romantic figure, handled his with an ease, a finish, born of long and steady custom. Ginger flashed triumph at her sister. "You see!" her expression proclaimed, calling by telephone, got Ginger on the wire. "Just as I told you! Am I so dumb?"

"Marjory and I have not been abroad—yet, Mr. Murdock," she said, in a tone which implied that their departure was a mere matter of days. "It must be very fascinating."

"Father went on a tour of the Holy land," volunteered Marjory, "before we were born."

"For myself," continued Ginger, pausing for a light touch of her lips to the rim of the golden cup, for she abhorred black coffee, "I should not care so much to do the Holy land. I want to go to Paris and see Montmartre, and the boulevards, and the Folies, they don't have things like that in the Holy land. How long are you to be in Red Thrush, Mr. Murdock?"

"Oh, some weeks, I fancy." He said "fancy." In the Middle West, "I think" and "I dare say" are quite common, while "I guess" and "I reckon" are not altogether unknown. "I fancy" is an affectation in any but a romantic figure.

"Do let me fill your cup," she cooed.

"You see," continued the low, slow voice, "I took on a job today, and shall go to work tomorrow."

Ginger leaned forward. She did not breathe. Oh, if he could but be president of the bank where the Tubby individual aspired to licking stamps.

"What—what profession—"

"The D and R. You know, the little Orange and Black chain grocery store on the corner of Main and Broadway."

Ancient Property Laws Protected the Weaker

The oldest Greek statute now extant, governing the disposition of "real" property, comes from the island of Crete. This is the law of the city of Gortyna, dating from perhaps B. C. 400. This inscription, the largest existing fragment of any Greek law, came to light less than fifty years ago; for the stones on which it was chiseled had been buried for 2,000 years or more and its discovery made a sensation in the learned world. It was about thirty feet long in its original form; the broken pieces are now scattered in several museums.

These laws show that more than 2,000 years ago women in this Cretean city could own property. Moreover, the law provided that a husband could not sell or mortgage his wife's property, nor could a son dispose of his mother's property. If a mother dies, says this ancient statute on property, and leaves children, the father has power over her property, but he cannot sell it or mortgage it unless the children consent, when they come of age. Moreover, if the father marries another woman after the first wife's death, the children of the first wife shall have power over their mother's property. Penalties are provided for the violation of any of these provisions.

Patriotism may be mere habit.

SLEEVES TAKE ON IMPORTANCE; NEW HATS OF SATIN AND TWEED

Showing Novel Fur Treatment.

SLEEVES, aided and abetted by all types of fur, have become the plaything of fashion. Whether it be the coat, the blouse, the ensemble, or the one-piece frock, each and all testify to the outstanding importance of fanciful sleeves in the mode.

The costume in the picture is one among many instances where sleeves say "it" most eloquently. This modish ensemble is of brown kasha cloth trimmed with brown astrakhan. The front of the one-piece dress is vested with a clever insert of matching satin. The hat is one of those novelty berets which milliners, if called upon, will make of the cloth of the suit. The hemline descends to fourteen inches above the floor, a very proper and a very conservative move for it to make considering the exaggerated lengths to which dressier hemlines are going. Pumps are worn with this ultra chic suit, because fashion has sent forth the word that pumps are very smart for street wear.

And now back to the original theme—sleeves and their novel fur trims. Concerning them one is almost tempted to say that there is a thrill with every sleeve. Certain it is that when it comes to sleeves, genius overlooks no opportunity to exploit the unique and the sometimes very fantastic.

Among sleeve vagaries one finds on the new coats such arresting effects as bands of fur winding in spiral fashion up to and beyond the elbow. There are also sleeves, the lower portion of which develops into a wide bell, this same being made of fabric-like fur. Then there is the cloth sleeve which bells over an under puff of fur which is snugly banded at the wrist, the outlet cuffs of fur which [illegible] treme are featured in the [illegible] ompaganda which is now going is furred, the other being quite furless.

Just to keep up their reputation for eccentricity sometimes only one sleeve

The unique in sleeve effects is expressed in that certain types of little muffs are so designed that they may either be carried or slipped over the arm so as to serve as a cuff on the one sleeve, the other remaining cuffless.

Very often two furs are employed in this working out of the unusual sleeves. This is especially true of fine furs which are sewed together with as much ease as if they were fabric. Seal is used with ermine to carry out the modish black-and-white touch on cuffs trimming the black cloth or velvet coat. Again fashionable color contrast takes place when beige caracul combines with brown in delightful sleeve elaborations.

The newest thing being that of white fur touches on black, the designer exploits the idea by complementing sleeves with pert bows of ermine tied around the wrists of the cloth or velvet coat.

Satin and Tweed Vie for Favor.

And once again Dame Fashion is doing the unexpected. This time, to maintain her reputation of being capricious, she introduces the satin hat in advance of its scheduled time. Usually the millinery world expects satin to make its appearance with the ringing of the New Year bells, or later. This season, however, satin is making a premature appearance, albeit a most welcome one.

Among the Paris present-moment successes is the black felt hat with a brim of black satin turned off the face and widening at the side. Such a model, done in matching color would top the ensemble or frock most charmingly. A good suggestion this—take a piece of the satin of your newest frock to your milliner, who will match it up with felt and turn out a stunning ensemble chapeau.

Another charming French mode uses a ruffle of black satin gathered into a tight-fitting cap, the latter made of links of satin folds so interworked as to achieve a fanciful open-work effect.

The model centered in the group pictured below shows how handsome the new satins are. This one carries out the long draped side intricacies which are so characteristic a style trend. Also there is the favored foldback cuff which reveals the brow—and a glittering ornament such as are smartly in vogue.

Satin and felt are not, however, carrying all the honors, for tweed—gay colorful, fanciful tweed—comes as a prize-winning competitor. A tweed sports set, like the one in the picture or similar, is finding its way into every well-equipped hat wardrobe. These millinery tweeds, most of them, are of such extremely loose weave they look almost like basket cloth. These gay tweed accessory sets have a way of brightening up the most somber cloth coat, suit or ensemble to a fascinating degree. One of their charms is that they are to be had in colors which accent the general color scheme of the costume. That is, the predominate color may be the very popular forest green, or a brown mixture with orange, or one of the smart wine shades with multicolored border and so on and so on.

Milliners, when working felts, are resorting to the use of pin tucks, with the result that many clever effects are accomplished, such as the youthful tucked-bow trim on the molded-to-the-head model shown fast in the group.

Sixteen per cent of the girl minors arrested in New York City come from Pennsylvania, and yield to temptations presented by the dance halls and night clubs. Fort Wayne places are given credit also with a large majority of cases where young people get in trouble. Only Sunday evening a young man attempted to pull off something with Miss Mary Schroeder by refusing to stop at her home, after dancing with her at Lincolndale, driving out the Maysville road, she jumped from the car and was injured. Her girl friend, Miss Catherine Reid had been taken home by the couple. This took place about 2 o'clock in the morning.

STATE FIRE MARSHAL GIVES HOLIDAY ADVICE

Alfed Hogston, State Fire Marshal, has issued the following warnings for the holiday season.

"This is a time of great fire danger. There are a few rules that should be observed in order to insure safety.

"Avoid all decorations that are inflammable. This includes those used for Christmas trees, banquet halls, school rooms and other places where the public congregates, as well as for the home.

"Instead of cotton batting, use mineral wool, which is non-inflammable; use the non-inflammable variety of artificial snow. If cotton is used in Santa Claus' costume, or for costumes for Christmas plays, fire-proof it. Fireproofing may be made from two pounds sulphate of ammonia, four pounds of chloride of ammonia and three gallons of water. Apply this with a spray.

"For colored lights, get the electric wiring systems that are ready for use, and especially prepared for this purpose. Then see that it is in perfect condition. Never use lighted candles on Christmas trees. Guard all open flames.

In using home motion picture machines, be sure that the film is of the slow-burning type, commonly called "non-inflammable."

"Smokers should throw away cigar or cigarette before entering a store crowded with shoppers. One careless smoker may be the cause of a holocaust.

"In case inflammable decorations are used despite warnings, never attach them to electric cords, fixtures or bulbs. The big automobile fire in St. Louis about three years ago was caused by paper ornaments attached to electric fixtures.

"Also, the approach of severe weather makes this a propitious time to remind every citizen of the dangers of overheating the furnaces; that kerosene is a dangerous substance with which to start fires; and that any and all dry cleaning in the home is likely to prove an expensive economy.

Merry Christmas, and Paid in Full

How Silas Vaughan Contributed to Yuletide Cheer of the Needy.

By FRANK HERBERT SWEET

IT WAS an eloquent plea for the public building, an urge for its beauty, its value to the town, the educational gift to the eyes of youth. The speaker was hypnotic. He had been engaged for that.

Purse strings were loosened. Money poured freely—twenty, fifty, a hundred, five hundred. And it was Christmas.

They went to Silas Vaughan, the grocer leader, a wealthy man of the town. People looked surreptitiously to see what munificent sum he would give.

At first a hand went into his pocket like the others, then came out and the arms were folded. There was an audible gasp from watchful eyes.

More pleas came, more solicitors went round, man to man.

But Silas sat, there, arms folded, rigid, unmoved.

"Times are too hard," he was heard to say in answer to an importunate beggar. "It is a bad year for such a building."

It is all right to follow your natural bent unless it makes you crooked.

The burning question of the hour is "Who will get up and start the fire.

Concrete roads are open all year

There are a number of reasons why the mileage of concrete roads is steadily increasing, year by year.

Concrete highway pavement is not affected by weather. Rain only makes it stronger. Wind cannot blow it away. It can be built to carry any kind of traffic indefinitely, practically without repairs. Concrete roads are as good at one time of the year as another.

Our booklet R-3 tells many interesting facts about concrete roads. Ask us for your copy.

She Knows How Its Made

St. Joe, Ind., Dec. 10, 1929

St. Joe News:

The building pictured on your advertising page is that of the Seely Bakery, located on East High Street, Hicksville, Ohio.

They are the makers of a high grade of baked goods such as, bread, cookies, doughnuts, rolls, cakes, and pies. All of their baked goods are very good especially their rolls and doughnuts. They are not to be rivalled anyplace, anywhere.

Upon entering their place of business you get the idea that it is a good place to trade, for the walls are all white and very clean. The show cases are always glistening. The whole place is light and airy, and makes one feel safe in buying from the keepers of such a "spic and span" business place. No ugly germs could possibly live in such a clean, airy place as this.

Another big feature in trading at the place is the service. I really believe their motto is "service with a smile." They always seem glad to do anything to please their customers and are very quick and prompt in doing so.

Remember that the products of this bakery is sold in St. Joe at the Zonker Store and at Leighty's Grocery and also at Spenceville and at tthe leading stores in surrounding towns.

So in closing I would like to say, if you have not tried their goods, do so now. You will not be sorry, I'm sure.

Very truly yours,

Thelma Curie.

Choni Monastery

Rare Books From Choni in the Library of Congress.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE monastery and village of Choni near the Tibetan border of China, which was recently the scene of a massacre by Moslem soldiers, was an outstanding type of the Lama communities that dot western China and Tibet.

The site of Choni is in the southwestern part of Kansu Province. Though it was the capital of the domain of the prince of Choni, it was merely a village of 400 families, approximately 2,000 inhabitants. The natives of this region are of Tibetan origin; in fact, there are few real Chinese in the neighborhood. The village was by far the best situated spot in Kansu Province, and the prince's territory was the choicest bit of land. Nowhere else in Kansu are there such forests, and the scenery is unsurpassed.

The village probably changed but little during the six centuries of its existence. The Tao river, which flows a third of a mile below the south gate, furnished the water for the town and the lamasery. Women carried the water in wooden buckets to the town, and the poorer monks conveyed it the additional 500 feet to the lamasery.

Little of this water was used for cleansing purposes. The monks, therefore, reeked of rancid butter and grease, and their skin was black from the accumulated filth of years. Even lama officials do not bathe, although their faces appear washed. Their priestly garments of red Lhasa cloth are unwashable; and since few of them have more than one garment, the clothing is saturated with odors so strong that it is difficult to expel the scent from a room after even a short visit by a small group of lamas.

Monastery Is Extensive.

Choni monastery or what remains of it is surrounded by a wall of loess (a peculiar deposit of loam) pierced by a large stone gate looking south. Upon the gate is the inscription: Chi Ssu Chan Ting Ssu (Bestowed by Imperial Command Temple of Abstract Tranquillity). A memorial stone of 1736 records that the tablet for the monastery was written by Emperor King Hsi himself in 1710 as a favor to Chih Lien, a Choni priest, who paid him a visit. After his return to Choni, Chih Lien is said to have contributed 3,000 taels of silver—a great sum at that time—toward the building of temples and chanting halls in the monastery. Within the walls are 172 buildings, not including 10 large and small chanting halls.

During the reign of Yung Lo the monastery housed 3,800 monks, but recently only 700 have resided there. Of the 10 chanting halls in Choni two are fairly large. The one most frequently used faces a square in which the lama dances are performed and the butter festival is celebrated. This hall is flanked by three other buildings.

The largest chanting hall, a structure probably 200 years old, is immediately back of the first. It can accommodate about 400 monks. The roof is supported by 80 large pillars of wood lacquered red. The main idol in this hall is Wutaishan, or Chamb-yang, the God of Learning (the Chinese Wen Shen, God of Literature).

On festive days this hall was beautifully decorated with brocades. From the ceiling were suspended long ceremonial umbrellas, and the pillars were sheathed in magnificent hand-woven carpets, the gift of the Mongol king of the Ala Shan. The hall was opened only on special occasions, such as the Feast of Lights, when the monks assembled at night to chant the classics.

Complete Set of Tibetan Classics.

A building to the left of the main chanting hall contained a large octagonal prayer cylinder of wood, with doors. Within it was kept a complete set of the Kandjur and Tandjur, the chief Tibetan classics, the former comprising 108 volumes, the latter—the commentary—209 volumes. To the cylinder were attached slender bars with carved figures, by means of which the wheel could be set in motion. With one revolution the devotee said the contents of the 317 volumes—indeed a quick way of saying prayers.

Priceless possessions of Choni lamasery were printing blocks of both the Kandjur and the Tandjur. A number of other lamaseries, such as Derge and Radja, have blocks of the Kandjur, but rarely of the Tandjur. In fact, Choni is said to have been the only monastery outside Lhasa possessing the Tandjur blocks, and the claim is made that the books printed here are without mistakes, the best edition known.

The printing blocks of both classics were more than 500 years old. It took sixteen years to carve the blocks of the Tandjur alone. The Choni Prince suggested movable type, but the lamas refused to entertain the idea. It took 45 monks three months to print the Kandjur and nearly six months to print the Tandjur. This does not include the time consumed in preparing the paper for the printers.

The paper used is bought at Kungchang, in eastern Kansu, 11 days distant from Choni. It is very thin, and the monks pasted eight sheets together to make one for the book. When 317 volumes are printed, one can surmise the time and labor spent.

The Library of Congress in Washington, D. C., obtained a complete set of the two classics from the Choni lamasery. These were packed in 92 boxes and sent by caravan seven days to Lanchow; thence by parcel post to Shanghai. Unfortunately, they arrived at Sianfu just before the gates of that city closed. There they remained through the whole siege of the town. They did reach Shanghai, however, after being more than a year on the way.

Ceremonial Dances.

Great ceremonies, conducted regularly each year in Choni lamasery, were few. There was a dance on the 13t of the first moon; the butter festival was celebrated on the 15th, and another dance was performed on the 16th. The Sunning of the Buddha took place in the spring, on the 30th day of the sixth moon fell the Old Dance, Chamngyon-wa, probably the most interesting of all the ceremonies.

There is a dance on the 24th of the 10th moon, followed on the 25th by the Feast of Lights, which commemorates the ascension of Tsongkapa, with yet another dance on the 26th day. Every third year, on the 16th of the first moon, the Choni lamas celebrate the installation of a new presiding priest by a peculiar festival known as Le Chon Chaker.

The time between ceremonies was occupied by the monks in chanting on certain days, but otherwise mainly in loafing. In case of illness of wealthy believers, the lamas were asked to chant the classics, believed to have a salubrious effect. The charge for opening the largest chanting hall was 300 taels of silver ($200). To expedite the reading of these voluminous works, 500 assembled lamas divided the pages and each read portion of the text—a rather disconnected method, but apparently it matters little if the beginning, middle, and end are read at the same time. It was thus possible to read the 108 volumes of the Kandjur in a day.

Congregation "Fed Up" on Ten Virgins' Sermons

It is still customary in rural districts in Scotland for the minister to preach a series of sermons around one Scripture text. The parable of the Ten Virgins had been selected by an old minister for a series of ten sermons, in which he took one virgin at a time.

Many of the church folks were heartily tired of the subject at the end of a week or two, but it was left to the beadle to tell the minister the truth.

Asked by the good man as he was disrobing him in the vestry one evening how he was enjoying "my analysis of the characters of the virgins," the beadle replied brusquely: "The hale congregation's fair scunnert wi' them, sir. They maun be a lot o' tough auld maids by this time!"—London Tit-Bits.

Tommy's Trouble

The father was very disappointed with his boy's progress at school, and the end of the term had brought a rather bad report from the headmaster.

"Look here, Tommy, you'll have to buck up!" said the father. "There must be an alteration!"

"Well, Dad," said the boy, "can't there be an alteration in the school?"

"What do you mean?" asked the father.

"Why, it's like this," explained Tommy. "I had an awful time of it last term—aren't there any schools which advertise 'easy terms'?"

THEY NEEDED A STEPMOTHER

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

IT WAS one of those afternoons when a small town girl with a vacation has nothing to do. Frances Knight, lounging in the porch hammock trying to read a slow-moving story, welcomed the sight of her friend, Bertha Glen.

Bertha looked hot, and tired and very cross. She sank into the hammock beside Frances and wiped powder and perspiration indiscriminately from her face.

"Ted's awful," she sighed. "I can't do a living thing with him. Our housekeeper and Dad both leave him to me. I'm afraid of Ted when he's mad. He was horribly mad just now. He told me to go where it's much hotter than it is here this afternoon. What that boy needs is an animal trainer."

"This trying to get along without a mother is a mess," Frances said. "We've got everything in our house to make us happy except a mother."

Bertha gazed into space. This was one of the times she felt more motherless than at other times. Her bout with her boisterous brother had disheartened and disheveled her.

"Look! There goes Miss Susan driving her new car!" exclaimed Frances. "She's wearing the fifth new hat she's had this season."

"She's a nice looking woman for her age," Bertha said. "She was a girl when our mothers were. Funny she never married."

"She didn't have to. She's got oodles of coin."

"Nevertheless she ought to marry. She's depriving some good man of her companionship. That's what Dad says."

"Mine, too!" Frances bounced on the cushions. "Bertha! I've got an idea!"

"Keep it. I don't need it. I've got one myself," retorted Bertha.

Bertha went home rather hurriedly. Frances was glad. Snatching her scissors, she dashed into the garden and began cutting nasturtiums.

"Here! You get outen there! I want them to go to seed for my pickles!" shouted the housekeeper. Mrs. Bird, thrusting her dust-capped head out of the window to see "what that girl was up to."

Frances paid no heed. After all, she was the real mistress of the house. When she had cut a nice bunch of nasturtiums she scooted down the street toward Miss Susan Burke's.

Miss Susan had shut her smart roadster in the garage and sat down on her broad veranda with some sewing.

"For me?" She seemed a little surprised at this unusual attention from her young neighbor. "How nice! Won't you have a seat?"

Frances felt a sense of elation. But she bit her lip with vexation when a few minutes later Bertha appeared. Bertha bore a large book in a gorgeous jacket. Bertha's father belonged to a book club and this book had just been handed in by the postman. Miss Susan looked a trifle embarrassed, but she accepted the volume.

Frances perceived that Bertha and she had the very same idea. It was most unfortunate. Frances made up her mind that Miss Susan was just the kind of mother she wanted. Dad was fairly well off, but they had to be a mite careful of expenditure. Miss Susan was rich. If only she could be persuaded to marry Dad, Frances argued mentally, she'd probably let them move into her house. What a wonderful home for a young girl! Think of the parties one could have there! Dad was good looking and agreeable, but Frances had a feeling that he'd need her help if he was going to get Miss Susan. Of course, Bertha's father was well off and good looking, too, but he had a drawback. Not Bertha, Ted. Ted was a horror.

Every day Frances plied Miss Susan with favors. Frequently she encountered Bertha bent on like missions. Relations were strained between the former chums. Bertha took succulent young vegetables when Frances took flowers, she took books when Frances took fruit. She praised her dad to the skies. Ted was going to be just like him—in time.

One afternoon Frances sought Miss Susan with an assurance she had not before known. That morning she had gone for a ride with Miss Susan in the eight-cylinder roadster. She felt a delightful new possessive sense in the car, the wonderful house, and Miss Susan herself.

On Miss Susan's veranda sat a small, brown, ugly young girl, who was toiling over some breadths of coarse blue-checked gingham. Frances' nose went up. Bertha's likewise. They sat down with their backs to the "obstacle." Judy Hoy wasn't in their crowd. She lived in "rooms" and her father came home at night in overalls, looking hot and soiled. Besides, Judy had twin sisters, Jane and Mary, who played in the street simply because there wasn't any other place for them to play. Judy was younger than either Frances or Bertha, but she and her father "managed," with the help of a woman, who came in once a week, to dig out the thickest of the dirt.

"I'm teaching Judy to make dresses for the twins," Miss Susan said. "That looks very well, Judy. I'll just run in and stitch it for you."

"You've got nerve, asking Miss Susan to teach you to sew," Frances said scornfully.

Judy lifted big brown eyes. She crossed her thin arms and legs in an attitude of defense.

"I didn't ask her. She offered," she returned.

The tea wagon was heavily laden that afternoon. Judy ate as if she'd never seen food before. Frances thought contemptuously. But Miss Susan was beautifully courteous. She even sent a bag of cakes to the twins.

"Cheek," Frances grumbled to Bertha as they walked away together. Their antagonism toward Judy made them forget their own mutual jealousy.

Judy continued to be seen at Miss Susan's. She began to dress better and look happier. The twins, clean, were really cute. Ordinarily Frances couldn't have kept her hands off these delectable tiny morsels of healthy humanity. But because they were Judy's sisters she passed them by.

The time came when Frances felt she must speak to her father. She laid the case before him. They needed a mother. She'd picked Miss Susan; father would have to do the rest. He listened and laughed heartily.

"Susan wouldn't have me. I asked her before I met your mother."

"Then she'll marry Mr. Glen!" grieved Frances.

"Not on your life. He, like myself, was one of her old suitors. Listen, Fran!" Mr. Knight pulled his daughter down on his knee. "Can you keep a secret? Susan is going to marry Dick Hoy—"

"Not Judy's father! Oh! Oh!"

"He's a better man than Glen and I put together," Mr. Knight said earnestly. "I hope, my dear, when you get ready to mate you'll pick as fine a husband as Susan has."

Carved Rock Temple Is Marvel of Sculpture

On the rock floor of a great, open pit out stark into the top of a hillside in south central India in a 27-foot plinth walk, a colossal frieze of oversize stone elephants. Shoulder to shoulder they stand, appearing to bear on their stone shoulders the weight of the rock temple which rises above them. Five hundred and forty-six measured feet they run, slightly more than a tenth of a mile. They have been called by those with standards of comparison the greatest achievement in rock sculpture in the world.

They are perhaps the most striking single feature in an extraordinary architectural achievement of ancient India—the great rock temple of Kailasa at Ellora village in the territory of the Nizam of Hyderabad, today the newest wonder of the ancient world.

About the time of Charlemagne, around 800 A. D., King Krishna I came down somewhere from the North into southern India and thrust out the previous rulers of the Deccan. As a definite thank offering to his god, he conceived and started one of the most magnificent temples, stupendous in plan and brilliant in execution, that the whole long history of religious enthusiasm can produce. Down to the last, least detail it was sculptured out of the living rock.

There is not a square foot which is not covered with sculpture or bas reliefs, not one bare wall, not one undecorated ceiling. They are all closely covered, either with huge over-size reliefs or with minute lace-like sculpture telling in Indian fashion all the detail of the endless escapades of the multifarious gods of the whole Pantheon. It is known as the Kailasa, after the celestial palace of the great god Siva, offering a physical counterpart for his honor and delectation.

The average tourist first comes upon the Kailasa with all the suddenness of an approach to a precipice. It is as unexpected and as unmarked as the opening of the Grand canyon in Arizona. One moment you see nothing but hillside, and the next the great pit is before you; and you're gazing down in the clear Indian air at a vast pattern of sculptured architecture that is too bewildering at first to be grasped as reality.—Exchange.

Boston.—Firemen did more than their share of rescue work in an East Boston apartment house fire. First, they carried the pajama-clad Francis Bell down an extension ladder from the third floor. Next came Bell's St. Bernard dog and his two cats. Then the chill air penetrated Bell's pajamas. He returned to his apartment for more clothing and fire men rescued him again.

SHEEP DOG SAVES FLOCK IN BLAZE

Is Hero of Forest Fire in Washington.

Stevenson, Wash.—This is the story of Laddie, a nervous little shepherd dog.

During the recent forest fire which destroyed the town of Greenleaf, Wash., located 15 miles west of here on the Columbia river, and which threatened destruction to Stevenson, Laddie became the hero of the day.

Fires were raging along the slopes of Hamilton mountain and along Woodward creek. Between the two walls of flames a flock of sheep was grazing peacefully. C. H. Craig, Harry Patrick and Mrs. Craig were tending the flock with their two dogs, Laddie and Cap.

The sheep became panic stricken as the flames raced on toward them. Efforts to get them out of the place were made by the herders. After hours of tireless efforts in which a bell goat, Billie, was drafted in an attempt to lead the flock away, the herders gave up the task and left the sheep to the fate of the demon. But Laddie stood by.

Attempts were made by the herders to reach their sheep and Laddie again, but the flames had jumped the road, cutting them off.

The next day the fire had subsided temporarily and passage to the grazing ground was made. Upon their arrival they found no sheep, not even a piece of fleece.

They searched the adjacent vicinity and soon the tinkling of a bell—the one worn by the goat—was heard. Then the flock came into view.

And there was Laddie, a nervous wreck, racing round and round the flock, keeping them together. Not a sheep was missing nor was a fleece scorched. All were brought to safety through the dog's efforts.

Maid Who Cut Baby's Throat Sent to Prison

New York.—Pauline Hutchins, a nineteen-year-old negress, was sentenced to serve from four to eight years in Auburn prison for slashing the throat of three-year-old Florence Dorfman.

The Hutchins girl was hired last spring by Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dorfman to look after their daughter. On the night of April 25 the parents went out, leaving the child in Pauline's care. When Mrs. Dorfman telephoned the house later in the evening the maid told her that the child was ill. Hurrying home, Mrs. Dorfman found the baby bleeding from a wound in the throat. Pauline was arrested and admitted that she had cut the child's throat with a hunting knife, but advanced no reason for her act. She had been at one time in an institute for the feeble-minded.

In sentencing the girl Judge Stockell warned parents not to hire irresponsible girls to care for children. "If parents showed the same care for their children that they do for their jewelry there would be so such crimes as this," he said.

Sponaugle sustained a fractured right shoulder and possible fracture of the skull. He was employed by the Cumberland Contracting company on national highway work near Flint Stone. He was knocked down, but the explosives remained intact. The clergyman driver was held blameless as he was traveling at moderate speed and Sponaugle stepped in front of the machine, witnesses said.

GREEN FEED BIG WINTER DEMAND

Increases Egg Production and Is Profitable.

Green feed added to the laying hen's ration in winter has increased egg production and has proven profitable wherever used.

"When the green feed pasture is exhausted with the coming of frost and cold weather, it is then necessary for the poultryman to provide such feed," recommends C. F. Parrish, poultry extension specialist at the North Carolina State college. "There is a wide variety of feeds that may be used to avoid monotony. Rape, alfalfa, oats, clovers, wheat, rye, barley, mangels and other feeds may be used. Sprouted oats are also used effectively by some growers. The oats are fed when the sprout is about three inches long and make an excellent succulent to supplement the scratch grain and mash."

Mr. Parrish says that it is not difficult to build a home-made oat sprouter. All that is needed is a number of trays with holes punched in the bottom to allow excess water to escape. The seed oats are spread thinly over the trays to prevent the formation of mold growths. Sprouted oats secured in this manner are fed at the rate of from one to two ounces per day per hen. A good producing hen will consume from 25 to 30 pounds of this feed in a winter.

Hanging cabbage about 18 inches from the floor will afford the laying hen needed exercise and will give her the succulent green feed needed. Beets may be used the same way.

When it is impossible to supply green feed, cod-liver oil may be mixed with the mash or grain ration to supply the same food elements. In mixing this oil with the feed, Mr. Parrish suggests that a small amount of the feed be taken and the cod-liver oil worked in thoroughly and this used as a stock mixture with the remaining food. One pint of the oil to each 100 pounds of feed is enough to use.

Lack of Water Causes Early Molt by Layers

Water supplies an important and indispensable part of the ration. Hens can go longer without feed than without water and still live.

The hen's body is made up of over one-half water and the eggs which she lays are approximately two-thirds water.

Heavily producing hens which are deprived of water often go into a molt, and that means a marked cutting down in egg production.

Since the fowls in the laying pens drink often, taking small quantities at a time, it is essential that proper provision be made so they may satisfy their thirst at all times.

Practice Culling All Seasons on Any Flock

"Culling should be practiced at all seasons of the year and on all stock when its use is advisable," says the Maryland experiment station. Any bird observed at any time which is sick or unthrifty should be removed from the flock at once. Delay in removing such birds often results in the spread of serious diseases throughout the flock. If such birds are in a serious condition they should be immediately disposed of by burying or burning.

Poultry Notes

The Bronze and White Holland breeds are popular.

The logical solution for raising poultry on any farm is a rotation of range area.

The essentials of good winter quarters for poultry are that the place should be clean, dry, well-lighted and free from drafts.

Heating drinking water for the hens with coal or wood is much cheaper than letting them heat it with food.

A shutter ventilator, or baffle, may be used in place of one sash of a window to give better ventilation during the winter when the poultry house is closed.

The question of whether or not hens should be confined to the house during the winter is debated by poultrymen and diverse opinions are found among them.

Arranging roosts that they can be raised will give greater access to the droppings boards for cleaning.

• • •

A scratch-mash ration has been found better than an all-mash ration for hens, and even for chicks after they are six or eight weeks old.

• • •

Even when one is practicing a system of sanitation in regard to the ranges and yard, he should not overlook the fact that clean brooder houses and laying houses are vitally essential.

Losses From Hog Cholera Lowest

Raising Animals Under McLean County System Is Emphasized.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Hog cholera seems to be slightly less prevalent this year than last, and last year losses from the disease were the lowest since the United States Department of agriculture has been keeping records, Dr. U. G. Houck, associate chief of the bureau of animal industry announced in a summary of information assembled from thirty-one states.

In four of these states, however—Indiana, Michigan, Nebraska and Ohio—hog cholera is more prevalent than last year. Approximately the same amount of cholera as last year was reported for Colorado, Kentucky, North Carolina, Texas, Illinois, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Wisconsin.

Less Cholera Reported.

In Alabama, California, Georgia, Kansas, Maryland, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Arkansas, Iowa, Florida, Idaho, Louisiana, Missouri, South Carolina, Utah, and Oregon observers report less cholera this year than last. With the exception of three states the decreases are slight, but Oklahoma reports a reduction of 50 per cent, Louisiana 40 per cent, and Idaho 30 per cent.

"The hog cholera situation, in general," said Doctor Houck, "seems to be somewhat better than last year. According to our information there has been considerable increase this year over last year in the amount of immunization against hog cholera in fifteen of the thirty-one states. There was no appreciable difference in nine states and seven states report less immunization than last year."

Doctor Houck referred to a report from Idaho stating that most of the hog cholera of recent months occurred on farms where there had been purchases at public grounds of unimmunized animals. A middle-western veterinarian explained occasional "breaks" of the serum usually occurred when "too little attention is given to the condition of the herd immediately prior to immunization," the consequence of administering virus when the animals were not in fit physical condition to receive it. In such cases losses are likely to be severe.

Harm Done by Vendors.

Doctor Houck also quoted an observer of the swine industry in Nebraska as saying that "vendors of swine remedies have become increasingly prevalent during the last few years in Nebraska. In many cases they have caused owners of sick herds to delay in securing competent veterinary assistance until too late to save their hogs. In other cases the remedies fed to prevent sickness have actually caused sickness." This observer also emphasizes the desirability of raising hogs under the McLean County system of sanitation as sponsored by the United States Department of Agriculture, comments on the desirability of feeding balanced rations, and emphasizes the advisability of immediately employing a competent veterinarian when disease appears in a herd.

Tractors Are Gaining on Many Truck Farms

In regions around large centers of population where truck gardening prevails and in other places where small road crops are grown, the garden tractor is gaining a strong foothold.

Poultry, fruit or truck farms use this mechanical power very advantageously in seeding, cultivating and harvesting, as well as in other draw-bar and belt power tasks.

The garden tractor fills a demand which results from the impracticability of maintaining horses in thickly settled truck or fruit-producing areas, in such areas land is expensive and the cost of home-grown horse feed is too high.

These garden tractors are small and compact and can be operated advantageously in gardens, orchards or other close quarters since they may be turned sharply and since the tools that operate are close to the source of power, generally between the driver and the engine.

Legume Crops Are Not Satisfactory for Silage

Legume crops do not make good fertilizer as a rule. They are so high in nitrogen and low in sugars and starches that they do not keep well in a silo. At the University of Missouri some years ago Professor Eckels was able to make very good silage out of alfalfa hay that he allowed to wilt before putting in the silo. Most experiments, however, have not been so successful. It is necessary to save some sugar and starch fermentation to develop a good keeping quality.

Most Efficient Method of Preserving a Post

The most efficient farm method of preserving fence posts is by what is called the hot and cold bath process. The treatment consists of heating the post in the preservative in an open tank containing cold creosote for several hours more. The process varies greatly with the kind of wood treated and details can be secured from the state extension forester, college of agriculture, University of Idaho, Moscow.

Know Plant Habits, Gardeners Advised

Traits Must Be Known for Best Results in Crops.

The home gardener must be well acquainted with the characteristics of the plants he grows if he is to secure the best results for his efforts, advises the vegetable department of the college of agriculture at New Brunswick. The trait of our common vegetable plants which cannot be overlooked in any way is their sensitiveness to climatic conditions. Some vegetables require hot weather for their best development and are killed by a very light frost. Others do not develop properly during hot weather but will endure freezes. Each must be planted at a season of the year which will enable it to make its best development.

Of the cool season crops some reach edible maturity quickly, and are almost always grown without transplanting. In this group we find peas; the short-season root crops like radish, kohl-rabi, and turnip; the greens, such as spinach, mustard and kale; and the salad crops like leaf lettuce, garden cress and corn salad. These should be planted as soon as the danger of killing frosts is over.

Other cool season crops have a longer growing season than these, and must be started in a green-house, hot-bed or cold frame sometime before they could be sown outdoors if they are to mature before hot weather. Cabbage, cauliflower and head lettuce are in this class. The time to transplant these crops from the greenhouse to the field is as soon as the danger of killing frosts is past. Successive planting of some can be made up to the first of May, but after this date it is better to plant some of the warm season crops.

Fix Garden Tools Now, Save Time Next Spring

By properly taking care of the garden tools in the fall, hours of making ready in spring can be saved, says the November American Home. Rust has a knack of doing slow but effective damage and is the thing to be guarded against most carefully.

All metal work, and wood, too, can be rubbed with an oil-soaked rag. The oil used should be clean but not too light, for it must give a perfect covering through the winter. All bearings, too, can be kept shiny, such as the share of the garden plow or the hoe blade, coat the surface liberally with hard oil. This work is a dirty job and should be done in old clothes.

Should you find a tool badly rusted, a brick bat will be found an excellent thing to remove the rust. A fine grade of sand paper will also cut through nicely. This can be finished with emery cloth, although a buffing wheel turned at high speed with some emery powder on it will be the best to put on a highly polished surface that will "scour" when first used.

Alfalfa Will Furnish High-Grade Roughage

Among all the standard feed crops, alfalfa generally ranks at or near the top in dollar value per acre. A good crop of alfalfa hay yields from two to seven times as much digestible protein per acre as any of the farm crops commonly grown for live stock feed.

An alfalfa field on the farm will do more than furnish every class of live stock with the highest grade of roughage possible at a reasonable cost. With alfalfa hay available, other high yielding legumes can be used as pasture, or they can be plowed under as soil builders.

Alfalfa seeded in the fall requires a good seedbed, well pulverized and firm. The soil pulverizer is recognized as a good tool for crushing clods and for firming the soil before seeding.

Agricultural Squibs

Sheep are particular and will refuse left-overs.

Plenty of direct sunlight is an important factor in producing good gains in fall pigs.

Make repairs on your farm machinery now so that you won't have to waste valuable time later on.

• • •

A seed grower can build up his business and perhaps make splendid profits in the production of pure seed without exhibiting.

It does not pay to scatter straw of any kind on the field. It can best be used by making bedding for live stock and put back with manure.

The only way to handle green clover is to ensile it. Otherwise if it is made into hay it must be air-cured enough to insure housing it without much heating.

The use of the fanning mill for seed oats ordinarily pays well. The removal of chaff, light, shrunken grains, weed seeds, and dirt insures a more uniform rate of seeding, better germination, and a better yield.

If your home garden is composed of a heavy, stiff soil that has a tendency to become hard and form a crust after rains, it can be improved by turning under manure or any other vegetable matter. Coal ashes also are good but they add no fertility.

France Has Air Police

Air police patrol has been established over France to control the movement of the large number of planes that pass over the country daily. Pilots violating international air regulations are subject to heavy fines. Police airplanes warn erring pilots by firing smoke bombs, and all aircraft being signaled in this manner are required to follow the police ship to the ground and land alongside it.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

Hunting Accidents

While the Department has no means of ascertaining how many accidents, both fatal and non-fatal that annually occur through carelessness on the part of hunters, yet it seems comparatively small indeed, compared to accidents that occur from other causes especially through careless driving. Indiana hunting licenses carry no warning relative to the danger in careless handling of rifles and shotguns in the field or out of it, but would be well if every hunter would keep in mind the following:

Don't carry a loaded gun on the street, in cars, or in an automobile; nor leave it in the house where children can get at it.

Don't get excited or hasty in using a shotgun; be sure you know what you are shooting at before pulling the trigger. Carelessness in handling a gun may mean sure death to someone. STOP, LOOK AND LISTEN. Safety First is a mighty good slogan.

Don't point a gun at any person in fun even if unloaded. In most cases it was the unloaded gun that went off and killed someone.

Don't put your gun over or through a fence with triggers up. Better break your gun when climbing a fence, or better still, unload it.

Don't rest your gun against a tree or fence, nor put the barrel on the ground so mud or dirt will get into it.

Always carry your gun with the barrel pointed down, and in the opposite direction from your companion.

Don't forget that your gun needs cleaning.

Don't abuse your dog. Mankind has no older or better friend.

Don't be careless with matches, cigarettes or lighted cigars in the woods. Many a fire has been started by careless hunters.

Results on Ring-neck Pheasant Eggs

One hundred and fifteen sportsmen's clubs were supplied with ring-neck pheasant eggs during the past spring. All were asked for a report on results. A blank was furnished for the purpose in September and 105 organizations have reported and there are ten have failed to do so, although especially asked to make a report. On account of the delay it has been impossible to make a complete report on results from the 16,450 eggs distributed. The annual report of the Division compiled for the fiscal year ending September 30th, due to the above mentioned delay is not complete. It reads as follows:

Number of applicants supplied (Clubs), 104.

Number of eggs furnished them, 14,248.

Number of eggs hatched, 8,757.

Number of persons that hatched the eggs, 755.

Number of pheasants reared and released, 4,998.

Average age of pheasants released, 9 weeks.

Per cent of eggs hatched, 61 per cent.

Per cent of birds reared from eggs furnished, 34 per cent.

There is no open season on pheasants. It is unlawful to hunt or kill them at any time in this State.

COMMUNITY MEETING WAS CALLED OFF

"On the last date scheduled for a community meeting, it was impossible to hold one because there were not enough people present. This is rather a deplorable situation for our town of New Haven for there are many important considerations to come up before the Association." — Allen County Times, New Haven, Indiana.

The above statement is almost unbelieveable for a town like New Haven, growing and prosperous. The facts are, all small towns need the community spirit and then they need folks who are willing to co-operate unselfishly, because all strides toward betterment of a town or community means a betterment of the individuals condition in more ways than one.

Many problems could be handled as a community affair and be made a success. Public spirited folks ought to be full of co-operation, and just now in our own community the matter of a paved road needs the boosting of everyone, because a few cannot do it alone.

Lay aside that personal feeling and work for the greatest good of the community.

C. W. Johnson Writes to Relatives

Planning on Trip Abroad Soon, Taking His Family. A Former St. Joe Boy

The following letter was received by Ern Johnson and given us for publication. We are pleased to hear from Mr. Johnson.

Los Angeles, California.

"You will no doubt be surprised to receive a letter from me at Los Angeles but here we are enjoying bright warm sunshine while according to the papers the middle west is having its experience with snow.

"I have been granted a year leave of absence from the University and Edith, Frederick and I are enjoying a real vacation. We left Seattle September 16 and drove to Eastern Oregon where we spent two or three weeks on a cattle ranch, then we drove to San Francisco and spent a week about the bay cities. We landed in Los Angeles October 18 and have been enjoying this city of Angels (? ? ?) ever since. We have covered most of this section with the auto and naturally have enjoyed new scenes and surroundings. It has not rained here since early last spring and the Los Angeles river has not a drop of water in it. It is sure navigable on foot from source to mouth. Everything is dry except where there is water for irrigation.

"On January 1st we are to sail on an English steamship line from Los Angeles for a trip to Japan, China, Philippines, Java, Straits Settlements, Ceylon, Egypt, Palestine and home via New York and the Panama to Los Angeles where we will pick up our car and drive to Seattle about the middle of June.

We are looking forward with much pleasure to our proposed trip. Our ships are new freight boats and each carry only 8 passengers. We make about 21 stops at foreign ports and will stay over two weeks in Manila and two weeks at Port Said for a visit to Jerusalem and Cairo. Another ship of the line comes along every 14 days to pick us up. Wish you could come along. Fare $680 plus shore expenses.

Will send you a card from "Somewhere East of Suez." Hope you are well. With regards to all,

WOODBURN DEFEATS ST. JOE

The Woodburn high school defeated the St. Joe high school in a slow game of basketball to the tune of 37 to 24 Saturday evening. Both of the teams played a sluggish game. The play was interrupted 49 times on account of personal fouls. Six men from St. Joe and four of Woodburn's men were sent to the shower before the final gun.

In a preliminary the Woodburn girls defeated the St. Joe girls in a close game. The final score stood 21 to 18.

PRE-CHRISTMAS PROGRAM AT P. T. A.

The Parent Teachers Association met on Tuesday evening of this week.

The meeting was opened by a prelude; airs in keeping with the approaching Yuletide season, with Miss Martha Miser at the piano.

Mrs. C. R. Price followed next with a description of the events which followed and confirmed the prophecy relating to the Christ child. The picture she drew was a clear and a vivid portrayal of this, the world's greatest event. C. A. Woodcox gave a short talk on the subject of "Supply and demand" as it is related to the question of music.

He gave credit to some of the older persons near this vicinity for their untiring efforts in instilling into the lives of her citizens a genuine love of music and pointed out the numbers, who in the neighborhood of Coburn's Corners, made a name for themselves in the musical and educational field. By their attention and zeal in this direction the demand was being filled, at least in part, more than is being done here at the present time. Music is interpretative and should be so understood. This was ably illustrated in the two numbers which followed, in community singing; Silent Night and Old Kentucky Home.

Miss Thelma Curie gave an introduction to two plays which were given under her supervision; the first by a number of little children was a clever little sketch in which the young people did themselves proud. The costuming being elegant and fitting the parts and characters assumed. The other number was a dramatic number. "Ashes of roses," which, in some of its aspects reminds one of Faust, and again the refrain found in the poem Maud Muller; the refrain being the lines, "Of all sad words of tongue or pen the saddest are these, it might have been." This was a good number and displayed talent of no mean order.

Earl William Kinsey's reading "Capital punishment' was given in his usual good and fearless manner.

Herman L. Brown then introduced the speaker of the evening, Prof. McKinney. Mr. Brown is well known to many of our readers, and made a snappy introduction which was seasoned with good wit.

Prof. McKinney in his talk stressed the value of honesty, savings, selective education, etc. On the subject of honesty he remarked that "Honesty in a few things does not mean honesty in all things, this was ably illustrated by the professor, that all should understand.

Quality values, was a thing he next stressed. Our activities show our quality.

"Set of mind," the danger that lies in that stubbornness of mind that is not open to conviction, but is ruled by prejudice, was also dwelt upon.

Modern methods of teaching. It is the plan of today's educators to seek out apt pupils, and focus our attention upon those most adaptable, toward certain pursuits, rather than the haphazard method of pursuing the same course toward all, without regard to adaptability to their special requirements.

The secretary's report, reading of the minutes, and adjournment followed.

LOCAL FARMER DIES IN KANSAS

John F. Zeigler, who lives two miles north and one mile west of St. Joe, died at Goodland, Kansas, Saturday, where he had been since August 23rd taking treatments for tuberculosis. The funeal is announced by E. R. Kinsey for Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the home with burial at the Eddy cemetery north of Butler. Their former pastor of Edgerton, Ohio, will officiate.

Mr. Zeigler and family came from near Edgerton to Concord township three years ago.

A CHIRSTMAS SALAD

Serve the old candle salad for Christmas. It may be old as the hills but it's always new to the young folks and always pleasing to the old. In many homes it is as much a classic as the Christmas tree or the Yule log.

Of course it may be changed a bit each year so that it will always be new though old. This year we suggest the following form for this popular of populars:

Use the usual lettuce leaf as a base. Place a lage, thin slice of pineapple upon it. Then place a thick slice of orange on the pineapple. Then place half a banana upright on the orange and a cherry on top of the banana. Sprinkle a little syrup made by uniting the juice of an orange, the juice of half a lemon, and three teaspoons of sugar, over the fruit, five minutes before you take the salad from the refrigerator. Just before serving, drop a bit of whipped cream on top of the banana so it will drip down.

Of course, the orange is the candle base, the banana the candle, the cherry, the flame, and the whipped cream the dripping wax—that's what makes this old candle salad so everlastingly popular at Christmas time.

RURAL FIRE DESTROYS LARGE BARN

The J. M. Dermott, large L shape barn, and contents were destroyed by fire, Monday morning about 5:30, due to the explosion of a lantern.

Olen was doing the chores and had gone to the hay mow loft, setting the lantern on a sill, it flickered and exploded, spreading fire over the entire loft in a few seconds, and he experienced difficulty in getting out before being burned.

Word was broadcast by phone and the local fire department responded, but there was nothing to do.

All the stock, save two pigs were driven from the barn. Much hay, fodder, corn and all machinery were destroyed.

Mr. Dermott was unable to give amount of insurance on barn and contents.

ROUTE NUMBER TWO DISCONTINUES JANUARY 1

Another serious infringement upon the territory served by the St. Joe Postoffice will take effect January 1st., when Route Number Two will be discontinued and Carrier John Crothers will be given twenty miles more territory making him forty-six miles, where at present he has a twenty-six mile route. Spencerville will be given a portion of Number One, from the Coburn's Corners Church south and east, and Auburn will be given two pieces in the north and west part of Number Two, and of course on the good road section.

This will indeed render the patrons of The News, north, a very unsatisfactory service, and besides will eventually reduce the classification of the local post office, which is to be deplored.

TRIPS ON RUG, INJURES HER BACK

Monday evening, Mrs. John Wineland tripped on a rug as she was entering the dining room, from the kitchen, she fell injuring her back severely and striking her head on the mop-board, on the opposite side of the room from which she entered.

She was put to bed immediately, and during the evening she complained and suffered much with her back. Her forehead was bruised also.

THE CHILD IN A CHRISTIAN WORLD

(Christmas Lesson)

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 18:1-6; Mark 10:13-16; Luke 2:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto Me for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of the First Christmas.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of the First Christmas.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Finding and Following Right Leaders.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Obligations to Childhood.

I. The Greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven (Matt. 18:1-6).

Jesus answered concretely the disciples' question as to who is greatest in the kingdom of heaven, by placing a child in their midst and declaring:

1. The condition of entrance into the kingdom (v. 3).

In order to enter the kingdom one must become childlike. He thus showed to these ambitious disciples that a change of heart was necessary in order to even enter the kingdom, let alone having an honorable position therein. Birth from above is essential, even to see the kingdom (John 3:3, 5).

2. Those who possess childlike humility are the greatest (v. 4). The child is dependent, lowly and modest. Such characteristics are only possible to those who have been regenerated

II. Little Children Brought to Jesus— (Mk. 10:13-16).

1. The mothers' desire that Jesus might touch their children (v. 13).

Doubtless they had witnessed the healing power of His touch and coveted it for their children. All Christian parents want their children to come into contact with Jesus Christ.

2. The disciples' rebuke (v. 13).

They thought the children were too insignificant to be allowed to interfere with Jesus' work, therefore they rebuked the mothers for bringing them to Him.

3. Jesus' reply (v.14).

He declared that the kingdom belongs to the children, therefore the children have a right in the presence of the king.

4. Jesus blesses the little children (v. 16).

He took them up in His arms and blessed them. Christianity is peculiarly favorable toward children. Only where Christ is known is the child duly recognized.

III. The Child Jesus (Luke 2:1-20).

1. His birth (vv. 1-7).

It took place at Bethlehem according to prediction (Micah 5:2). The Lord moved upon the emperor to enforce the decree of taxation just in time to bring Mary to Bethlehem. His surroundings were of the most humble sort. The eternal God condescended to be thus incorporated with humanity, to be born in a manger, becoming the poorest of the poor that none might be hindered in coming unto him.

2. Jesus' birth announced (vv. 8-14).

(1) By whom. An angel of the Lord was the first to give the gospel message.

(2). To whom. His birth was announced to the shepherds who were keeping watch over their flocks by night.

(3). The nature of the message. It was good tidings of great joy. It was good tidings because the darkness of heathendom which had so long covered the earth was beginning to vanish; the casting out of Satan, the prince of the world, was about to take place. Liberty was soon to be proclaimed to those who were in bondage. The way of salvation was to be open to all. So glorious was this message that a multitude of the heavenly host accompanied it with their song of praise.

3. The shepherds investigating (vv. 15, 16).

They did not stop to argue or raise questions, though these things were no doubt passing strange to them. They went immediately to Bethlehem where they made investigation and found everything just as represented. They had the privilege of first gazing upon the world's Savior, the Lord of glory.

4. The shepherds witnessing (vv. 17-20).

They found things as announced. When they beheld the Lord of glory they could not remain silent, therefore they went back praising God and making known what their eyes had beheld. Those who really hear the gospel cannot be silent—they must tell it out to others.

Earth a Rebuke to Atheism

God never wrought miracles to convince atheism, because His ordinary works convince it. It is true, that a little philosophy inclineth man's mind to atheism; but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion.—Francis Bacon.

Good Breeding Shows

There are few defects in our nature so glaring as not to be veiled from observation by politeness and good breeding.—Stanislaus.

CONVENIENCES IN MODERN FARM KITCHEN

Well Arranged Kitchen on a New Jersey Farm.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The conveniences in this farm kitchen are unusual. Running hot and cold water is available in the very modern tap in the white porcelain sink, which, it may be noticed, is placed sufficiently high for a medium-sized woman. There is a left-hand drain board, provided with a drain basket; a sanitary garbage pail, a white metal wastebasket, and a ladder stool. Among the utensils on top of the electric range is a coffee percolator.

In the daytime good light from the window reaches the sink, while at night an overhead electric light furnishes the necessary illumination. The washtubs in the recess have the benefit of the window for light and air, and are near enough to the sink to serve as a table for dishes or other articles when not in use. The wall behind the electric range is tiled for safety and cleanliness. Another light fixture is well placed over the range. The enamel topped table will not be hurt when hot dishes are set on it, and like the linoleum-covered floor it is easy to keep clean. The kitchen cabinet, which is the food preparation center, is well situated near the sink where vegetables and fruits are washed and peeled, utensils filled with water and washed after using.

This illustration was taken in New Jersey by the United States Department of Agriculture. The kitchen was improved by the owner to demonstrate suggestions for home improvement included in the county home demonstration program. It affords a good example of what can be done with careful planning of arrangement and wise selection of equipment.

WASHABLE WOOLEN SUIT FOR YOUTHS

Flannels Are Suitable for Winter if Cared For

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In some climates it seems best to put the children into wool garments during the coldest months. Suits for the small boy from three to six years old, however, must be washable, and there must be several of them so that approximately the same weight is worn every day. Flannels and other woolens may be used if guaranteed washable, and if care is used in laundering them. It is particularly necessary to select patterns or models for wool suits that result in very simple, easily constructed and easily pressed garments, without unnecessary thicknesses of bulky material.

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has made a study of the clothing of the small boy, and shows in the accompanying illustration several good points that can be applied to both wool and cotton clothing. The fastenings at the belt line are so very simple a child can manage them without help. Instead of having the front overlap the back, there are separate buttons for the front and the back drops. A one-piece trouser pattern has been used to eliminate side seams, and the side openings are bound to avoid heavy lapping plackets, which would add bulk in the wool material and make pressing more difficult. These openings end in an embroidered tailor's arrowhead, a strong, simple, and easily-made finish used on tailored clothing.

Hold Lingerie Straps

If your lingerie straps cause you embarrassment by frequently dropping off your shoulder while wearing short-sleeved dresses, try the following: Sew a short piece of tape to the shoulder seam of your dress. On the free end of the tape sew one section of a dome fastener and sew the other half to the shoulder seam. In this way all the lingerie straps can be securely held in place by the tape. Twill tape will be found to be satisfactory and white or black can be used, according to the color and the sheerness of the dress.

APPLE BUTTER IS EASY TO PREPARE

Either Fresh Cider or Commercial Sterilized Used.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Apple butter has not lost its old-time popularity, but it does not seem to be made in such generous quantities or in so many homes as formerly. It is an excellent spread for school or supper sandwiches, as well as a good preserve to use at any time. You can make apple butter out of the sound portions of windfall, wormy, and bruised apples, saving the perfect fruit for other uses.

While almost any apples will make good apple butter, those which have a distinctly rich, tart flavor and good cooking quality are most satisfactory. Such old standard varieties as Northern Spy, Rhode Island Greening, Tompkins King, and Smokehouse, as well as Jonathan, Grimes Golden, Stayman Winesap, and other standard sorts are excellent for the purpose, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Overripe apples are not desirable but if they must be used a little vinegar, determined by taste, may be added to give some snap to the butter.

Apple Butter With Cider.

Either fresh cider or commercial sterilized cider may be used. The usual proportions of peeled and sliced apples to cider is gallon for gallon, but from one-half to three-quarters of a gallon of cider to a gallon of sliced apples will also give a rich product if the apples are good cookers. This mixture is cooked until the cider and apples do not separate and the butter when cold is as thick as good apple sauce. Strict attention must be given to stirring throughout the cooking, lest the butter scorch. Determine the thickness at frequent intervals by cooking small portions.

Sugar may be used or not, depending upon the individual taste. If sugar is used, add it after the cooking of cider and apples is about two-thirds done. A pound of either white or brown sugar per gallon of apple butter is the usual proportion. Apple butter is spiced according to taste. When the cooking is finished, about half a teaspoonful each of ground cinnamon, cloves, and allspice per gallon are stirred into the butter. From two to four teaspoonfuls of vanilla extract improves the flavor.

Food for Child

Daily food requirements of a school child are listed as follows:

One quart of milk in cooked food or as a beverage. The vegetables besides potatoes, including, if possible, a leafy vegetable. One or two fruits, with a raw fruit or vegetable included. Whole grain cereals and breads as frequently as white breads and refined cereals. Two servings of protein foods, such as meat, chicken, fish, eggs, cheese, dried beans and peas. Butter used freely. A quart and a half of liquid. Enough cereals, sweets and fats to provide energy.

Apples With Sausage

Baked apples with sausage fillings are prepared by coring and peeling large apples and filling the cavity from which the core has been taken with sausage meat. Place in a baking pan and pour in one cupful of water mixed with two tablespoonfuls of sugar and a few drops of lemon juice. Cover the pan and bake until the apples are tender. Baste two or three times while cooking and uncover for the last 10 minutes to brown.

GINGER ELLA

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev Mr Tolliver of Red Thrush Iowa, his motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has affected Mr Tolliver's eyes to the point of threatened blindness. Ginger has tried in many ways to add to the family's slender income, but she is not discouraged. Marjory wins the beauty prize, $50.00. She gives the money to her father as part of the expense necessary for the treatment of his eyes by Chicago specialists. Mr Tolliver leaves for Chicago with Miriam. Ginger meets Alexander Murdock.

Ginger sat motionless. Her slim fingers froze about the handle of the little gold cup. Presently she set it down with a determination that spoke volumes to the accustomed ears of Marjory and Eddy Jackson.

"Let's go for a drive now," she said coldly. "Eddy, you've got to take Marjory in front with you. I want Mr. Murdock to tell me all about the —the groceries. I think they are so fascinating."

"But I was prepared for you," objected Eddy. "I planned to give you a driving lesson."

It had long been Ginger's great desire to learn to drive, but now, with a sigh, she relinquished that beautiful dream to save her lovely Marjory from the machinations of this base pretender. Around the world—as a stoker, perhaps. Or working his way from port to port by the sale of vegetables.

Marjory slid into the front seat with Eddy Jackson. Ginger triumphantly drew Alexander Murdock in by her side, and immediately set herself to snubbing him. When occasionally, in sheer youth and good spirits, she forgot her annoyance and yielded to the pleasure of the hour, she consoled herself with the thought that at least she had saved Marjory for the future, and they parted at the parsonage two hours later merrily enough.

Three days passed before they had news from Chicago. It was not very encouraging. There was no improvement in Mr. Tolliver's condition. His eyes were still clouded in the misty fog. The doctors were pessimistic. By all means he should remain at hand for daily observation and treatment, for an operation if it came to that. But in the meantime absolute rest was imperative. He must have entire freedom from nervous strain, entire lack of worry and responsibility. Fresh air, good food, mild exercise, these were the tonics that by feeding the body would strengthen his sight. Particularly they warned that a shock of any nature whatsoever might precipitate total and permanent blindness.

In writing this sad news to her sisters, Miriam begged them to face it bravely, and to greet their father with their usual light good cheer.

"Be very cheerful," she begged, "oh, very. He doesn't say anything, but he looks so sad."

The girls at home went into immediate consultation. Ginger was first to give expression to her thoughts. Ginger was always first.

"There's just one thing about it," she said stoutly. "He's in for a good long siege of it, and we must have more money. You've got to let me go to work."

"What can you do, dear?" queried Helen mildly. It was Helen's mildness that so maddened Ginger. How could one expect to pull gloriously out of a crisis without fire and flame and flash? Helen was the sort to ask what one could do, when obviously one must do something!

"I don't care what," cried Ginger, passionately. "Anything. I'll scrub, or take in washing, or go on the stage, or anything."

Helen considered gravely. Helen was the sort to consider gravely in such a moment.

"The twins must go to normal just as we have planned," she decided at last. "We have the future to consider, as well as the present. I will simply postpone my marriage for a year, and apply for a school. Miss Jenkins will come and stay here with you, Ginger."

Ginger flung herself upon her sister's neck. "Don't do that," she begged. "Oh, don't. It isn't fair, Helen, for you to do all the giving up."

Marjory, for her part, was in favor of abandoning the normal course, which required two years to finish, in favor of a stenographic one, which could be crowded into six months if necessary. But of that they knew their father would disapprove. Stenography—private offices—male employers—lovely girlhood—impossible! Mr. Tolliver had clung to his gentle old-fashioned ideas in spite of the changing times.

Ginger gazed at Marjory despairingly. "Oh, Margie, I should think you could do something. The world just overflowing with millionaires—praying every night for pretty wives—and you just wearing out here in Red Thrush."

Marjory carefully inspected a pink forefinger, questioning the shape of a nail. "Well, I'm willing," she assented, generously. "Trot one out."

Later in the afternoon as Eddy Jackson was passing in his small car, Ginger signaled him to stop and ran out to the curb.

"Something terrible is going on in this house," she said gloomily. "Father is no better, and he is pretty discouraged. And Helen is going to postpone her wedding, and it will just make him sick."

Eddy turned the key in the car, stilling the engine. "That requires silent meditation," he said slowly. "What do you think about it?"

"I think it is terrible. I think it will break his heart."

They talked a while, and then he walked with her slowly up the flagstone path.

"Helen?" he called into the open door, and when she came out, he motioned her to join them in the vine shaded corner by the hammock. "I want to mix in other people's business, and put my fingers in other peoples' pie, and paddle other people's canoes and everything," he warned her.

"Ginger Tells Me That You Think of Postponing Your Wedding, Helen."

"Do you? That is not quite like you, Eddy."

"I am changing. Ginger tells me that you think of postponing your wedding, Helen. We talked it over, and she and I think—"

Ginger sat up in the hammock and looked very important. This was showing some deference to her opinions. She tried to mirror in her small piquant face unutterable depths of wisdom.

"She and I agree that it would be the worst thing that could happen."

"Eddy, do you not see how impossible it is for me to leave home when father needs me? Horace will understand. He will be glad to do his share in helping out."

"I am not thinking of Horace. I am thinking of your father. The doctors say he must have complete mental rest. Do you think he can be happy and serenely quiet, when he knows that you are sacrificing your dearest aims and plans on his account? Will not every touch of your hand and sound of your voice be a reproach to him?"

"Oh, Eddy, I couldn't bear to go away and be happy by myself, with father and the girls—" Quick tears flooded her quiet eyes.

"Yes, I am sure, Helen, you would be happier to stay at home, and work, and sacrifice yourself. But you father's happiness is the thing that counts right now. Look at it this way, Helen. I think—and Ginger agrees with me—"

"Indeed I do," said Ginger stoutly.

"We think you should go ahead as if this little setback amounts to nothing. Make light of it. Go on with your wedding, Helen, don't you see, that if you teach school you will be away, out of town, tied up with your work? But if you marry, you are right here at hand, ready to help. Your time will be your own. You can help Ginger, help your father, and he will not realize what you are doing for him. If necessary, you and Horace can come and stay in the parsonage part of the time. But don't add to your father's burden the knowledge that he is stealing a year of his daughter's happiness. I dare say he is sick at heart, this very moment, dreading to come home and have you tell him sweetly, that your happiness has been burned on the altar of daughterly duty."

Helen studied him seriously. "You are a wise, wise boy," she said gently. "And I think you are right. I could help more, that is true, if I were here in Red Thrush. And I know it would grieve him bitterly to have us change our plans. I could come every day and help them."

"And they could call on me in a pinch—"

"But Ginger is a such a child. So much responsibility—"

"Responsibility never hurt anybody. You had it when you were young, and it did you no harm. And Ginger is not a child. She is growing up."

Ginger stood up with a bored nauteur. "Ellen is grown up now, if you ask me. And if you will excuse me, I shall go upstairs. I have some very important work to do."

On Friday afternoon Mr. Tolliver and Miriam returned to a parsonage that smelled sweetly of wild roses, to three girls whose tight glad voices gave no hint of the pain with which they had watched his approach, head lowered, shoulders sagging dispiritedly, his arm limp beneath Miriam's hand. And under the charm of their laughter, their caresses, their welcoming delight, his shoulders straightened presently, the tired lines in his face gave way to those of pleasure, and soon his laughter joined theirs.

"I can't take off the glasses just yet, you see," he said huskily. "Still in the fog, as you might say."

"I rather thought it would take longer," said Helen sympathetically. "It would be foolish to rush things."

"But it's really too bad, father," put in Ginger gaily, "because I just wish you could see the carryings-on in this old house. Do you know what Marjory has on hand now? A grocery clerk, father. And not regular groceries, either. Canned ones. The Orange and Black. Maybe he will give us a discount."

Light laughter, light talk, which hid the sadness beneath, but did not hide the tenderness, the pervading sympathy, the great gladness that they were five together, even in their sorrow.

CHAPTER IV

In the living room Ginger found her three sisters. Helen was mending a frayed cuff for her father as prosaically as though in two weeks she would not be a bride trembling at the altar of her marriage. Miriam was straightening up the desk with an air of great distaste. Marjory was delicately powdering her nose, watching the operation in the mirror of a small metal case.

"Marjory, where did you get that vanity?" Ginger demanded.

Marjory closed it hastily and put it in her pocket. But Ginger was insistent.

"Marjory let me see that vanity. That's brand-new. Where did you get it?"

Marjory, thus driven, produced the article and confessed to an extravagance. She had bought it. It had cost her twenty-five cents. She had bought it from Alice Ideman. And at last, thoroughly committed, she explained in detail.

"It's really a very cute idea, Helen," she said volubly, hoping by many words to distract attention from the money phase of the transaction. "You see, the compact costs a quarter. Alice had to sell four of them, and each one of the four who bought, had to promise to sell four more. Then when Alice sends her dollar to the company, for the four she sold, they send her a solid silver one. Just lovely."

"Did you promise to sell four?"

"Yes. I had to. And when I sell them, I send my dollar to the company, and they send me a sterling silver one. Isn't it a cute idea?"

"It is like the old chain letter idea—"

"Exactly. Where you had to copy the prayer—"

"Or break the chain—"

"And it goes on and on—"

"All over the world."

"Why, they'll sell thousands and thousands of them."

Seventeenth of March Once "Noah's Ark Day"

Long before the Irish taught us that March 17 was St. Patrick's day, this date was celebrated in England for a very curious reason. In the Middle ages it was regarded as the anniversary of the day upon which Noah entered the ark. Noah's Ark day was specially made the occasion for the performance of the mystery play that dramatized with considerable freedom the Biblical record of the flood. In this Noah's wife was always the principal comic character, being depicted as the typical shrew.

The quarrels between Noah and his helpmate created great amusement for the spectators. When the ark is ready the lady stoutly refuses to go in unless she may take some of her friends along. The patriarch, however, will not stand much nonsense, and when the time for embarkation comes he dispatches his three sons to bring their mother aboard. They find her with her gossips in a tavern, and after much rough by-play and broad comedy they seize her and drag her to the ark. Arrived there, she breaks out as a worse termagant than ever; shrieking with rage, she sets about beating her husband, much to the diversion of the spectators of merry England.—Manchester Guardian.

In a Nutshell

TUNING IN ON CLOTH SUIT; FUR CAN BE GROOMED AT HOME

A Charming Outfit.

WHEN fashion tunes in on the suit as it is so enthusiastically tuning this season, it follows as the night the day that it must necessarily tune in on the blouse, for the two inseparable companions always play a co-star role.

A design may be ever so conservative in developing the suit itself, but when it comes the blouse imagination embarks on a thrilling adventure of color, fabric and styling, bringing into the picture the winsomeness of dainty femininity—which is especially true of this season's models.

There's nothing so carries the feminine touch as soft-tied bows, and these are being played up for all they are worth. The model illustrated multiplies its charm by two in that it adds to the soft-bow treatment a graceful jabot effect. This intriguing blouse complements one of the new suits of tweed (mixture of wool and rayon). The flared lines of the coat are very interesting and ultra. The beige fox collar blends to the eggshell tint of the satin blouse.

In mentioning the favored materials for the blouse, satin comes first, with flat crepe de chine, metals, chiffon, lace and sheer crepe all coming in for their share of glory. While both sleeveless and long-sleeved types are in fashion the latter claim major importance for general wear with the velvet, crepe or worsted jacket suits which everybody who makes any pretense to follow the mode, is wearing this season.

According to the present ruling of fashion milady is expected to assemble a wardrobe of blouses along with her specialized wardrobe of shoes, hats and other costume units.

Speaking of colors for the blouse, the pale pastel tints are most in vogue, such as eggshell, string, beige, flesh, chartreuse, capucine and bright orange. The white blouse with the black suit or ensemble smartly carries out the popular black-and-white theme.

Ingenius fabric workings are resorted to in order to achieve the coveted molded hipline. These "dressmaker touches" include shirrings, fitted bands, tucks and intricate seamwork.

Along with myriads of bows and jabots, wide collars with pointed frills tend to elaborate the newest blouse types. One is expected to wear the pointed collar of the blouse over the jacket when the latter is collarless as it often is with unfurred models.

Fur That Can Be Groomed at Home.

Imagine science achieving anything like this—rendering fur "combable" and "ironable," and in a certain sense, washable—for a damp cloth is used in the process. But it has! An ingenious furrier has devised a method of ironing certain fur—baby sealskin as fashionists are pleased to call it simply and efficaciously. This scientific discovery is winning for this fur the attention of women for whom the upkeep cost of fur garments has always been a matter of concern.

The equipment necessary to give baby sealskin a beauty-parlor grooming so that it will look like new, in case it has been rain or snow-spotted, is ordinary household water, a comb, a cloth and an electric or sad iron.

The method of procedure is to first comb the fur as the young woman to the left in the picture below is doing, straightening it out perfectly in case it is matted or unkempt from hard usage or ravage of the elements. The fur is then ironed, the iron kept at a moderate and even temperature.

The handsomely fashioned cloth coat in the illustration is trimmed with the popular baby sealskin. The latest away-from-the-face collar is styled of the fur as well as the wide flare cuffs. The fur which in this instance is dark brown blends beautifully with the African brown of the cloth it trims, which calls to mind another notable feature of the now-so-popular baby sealskin, and that is this pelt makes a most harmonious trimming, for it is dyed to simulate sable, skunk and many other of the more expensive furs.

Coat With Combable and Ironable Fur.

Another item which gives the coat in the picture chic and charm is that of fabric manipulation as expressed in the scalloped side panels of this coat. Fable treatments are accented throughout cloth coats, this season. A favorite handling is pin-tucking, still another is designful insets of the cloth. And yet another is using the cloth in both the up and down of the nap, the highlights playing in an interesting way so that the appearance is given of a luster weave used with a dull surfaced cloth in often an elaborately designful way.

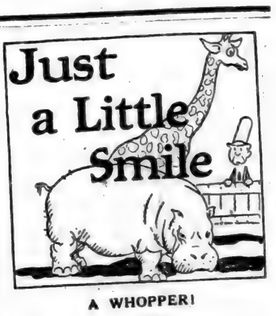
Just a Little Smile



A WHOPPER!

The young farmers were boasting about the size of the vegetables they had grown. Finally, one of them turned to Uncle Seth.

"What was the biggest thing you raised this year, Uncle Seth?"

"A squash."

"Well, how big was it?"

"We never mensured it," drawled Uncle Seth, "but we used the seeds for snowshoes."—Boston Transcript.

Clever Stratagem

"That was a great scheme old Kewte worked."

"Didn't hear of it."

"Gave it out that the first of his eleven daughters to be married should have his entire fortune."

"What was the result?"

"Eleven elopements in one night. They can't decide which girl got married first, so Kewte gets rid of his daughters and keeps his fortune."

Concrete Roads Stand Up Under Punishment

No other pavement withstands the attacks of the elements and the pounding of traffic like portland cement concrete.

Rain, wind, heat and cold do not affect it. The rigid, even surface makes driving easy and safe all the year. Concrete highway pavement can be built to carry the heaviest traffic indefinitely, practically without repairs.

In many states a steadily increasing mileage of concrete road is being built. These states have learned through experience that no other road performs like a portland cement concrete road.

Our booklet tells other interesting things about concrete roads. Write this office for your copy.

Christmas
SURPRISE DISHES

(By Betty Barclay)

There is a greater sameness about the Christmas dinner than there is about any of the other dinners of the year. Of course, the bulkiness of the family pocketbook decides the number of side dishes, the size of the turkey, the richness of the dessert and such things, but no matter where the dinner appears, it is very much like the millions of other Christmas dinners that bring joy to myriads of hungry ones.

There must be fowl—turkey, goose, duck or chicken. There must be cranberry jelly, celery, potatoes, rich stuffing, pumpkin pie and mince. Without these things, Christmas is not Christmas, and when poverty stalks, benevolence slips around with a basket containing the essentials for most of these dishes.

No matter how much mother complains about the stern necessity which forces her to cook and bake and boil, day after day and week after week, through the remainder of the year, she smiles and sings as she stews, boils, bakes, roasts, cooks, fries and simmers on this day of days. The preparation of a Christmas dinner is a work of love. The family are all home. George is back from college, Mary from the hospital, Agnes and her husband from the city. Nothing is too good for them, and no work too strenuous.

It seems sometimes that Christmas dinners are just a little too similar. Much as we enjoy them, we know beforehand about what is to appear on the table. For that reason, it is a wise mother who sees that one or two surprise dishes are included—little dishes that breathe the air of Christmas and that are brought to the table to bring gasps of astonishment from the elders and cries of delight from the kiddies.

Such dishes should be prepared very largely from vegetables, fruits, milk or some of the other alkaline foods, for much as we enjoy our Christmas dinner we are forced to admit that it is usually an acid-producer. If the surprise dish or dishes are alkaline, they will go a long way towad balancing the acidity of the fowl, bread, pie-crust and cakes that appear upon the table.

Celery, lettuce, oranges, apples, pineapple . . . these and similar foods should be kept in mind when preparing the surprise dish. They are all alkaline in their reaction. The orange, which so many think of as acid, is decidedly alkaline in its ultimate reaction.

Here are three suggestions for Christmas surprise dishes. Choose one or two of them, add them to your Christmas dinner, and see how they are appreciated by those before whom they are placed:

Chistmas Fruit Salad

Cover salad plate with crisp leaves of lettuce. Add one slice of pineapple (fresh or canned) and on top place a thick slice of orange. Sprinkle a little grated cocoanut over the fruit to give the appearance of snow or frost. Top the orange slice with a mound of flavored, whipped cream, stiff enough to stand up under the weight of a cherry, raspberry or other colorful fruit or berry which is used as a topper. Just before serving, sprinkle the fruit and lettuce base with a little syrup made by mixing three teaspoons of sugar with the juice of one orange and half a lemon. Where something particularly Christmasy is desired, small candy Santa Clauses may be placed on the salad plates—possibly connected with tiny candy reindeer on the opposite side, with small ribbons or colored strings.

Santa's Toy Bag

Scoop the pulp from half a large orange and use the rind for Santa's bag. Place this rind on a salad plate covered with lettuce leaves or any other green. Then fill the bag with bits of orange pulp, a few raisins, several white grapes, small bits of marshmallow, cubes of apple and pineapple, a mint or two, or anything of like nature that you have on hand. Figs, dates, canned berries, popcorn, cranberry jelly, currants and bits of grapefruit pulp are other goodies which may be used—but, of course, not too many varieties should appear in the same bag. Before serving, sprinkle with syrup made by adding three teaspoons of sugar to the juice from one orange and half a lemon, allowing some of the syrup to trickle over the lettuce leaves. Then sprinkle a little grated orange rind over the leaves to give an added piquancy. Here again, Santa or his reindeer may be used to advantage, if such ornaments are available. In each of the toy bags placed before the child, some small gift may be hidden, such as a dime wrapped carefully in oiled paper, or some little piece of jewelry or toy.

Christmas Tree Hors D'Oeuvre

On a small plate lay a very narrow strip of banana. From this, like the branches of a tree, place several other smaller strips to each side. Cover the main strip (the tree trunk) with tiny chocolate candies, or a dark sauce. At the tip of each of the branches, place a small thin section of orange pulp (the leaves or blossoms.) A crumpled mint may be used for snow at the base of the tree, or the bottom of the banana strip may be inserted in a cherry. This should be served in small portions as it is an hors d'oeuvre or "first bite." Larger quantities may be used for a salad to be served lated on, and in this case it is well to cover the whole with a layer of transparent gelatin, or to build the tree on one layer of gelatin and cover with another. Some may prefer to build a large tree in a large platter, decorate the sides with mounds of whipped cream topped with colored candies, and bring the whole to the table to be served to the guests by the hostess.

THE BIRDS HAVE A CHRISTMAS TOO

Most 'once upon a time' stories are only fairy tales, but this year one of them is really coming true. It is a pleasant story, this one, about a boy who thought of a way to give a Christmas festival to the birds.

It was the day after Christmas in a small town in the middle-west, and a twelve year old boy was standing in front of the gayly decorated Christmas tree in his home. There were many pretty trinkets and colored ornaments on the tree and candy and sweets. The thing that arrested his attention though was a glass bird gayly perched on the topmost brach. There was a sugar cane hanging on the limb below, and it seemed to the boy that the bird was trying to reach down and peck it.

The boy was thinking that in a few days the pretty tree would have to be discarded and he was wondering what he could do with it. One doesn't like to just toss a Christmas tree aside, and in these modern days only a few people have a fireplace in which a Christmas tree can end its career in a blaze of glory.

Suddenly a thought came to him. The Christmas season was the time for doing Good Turns to others. Why not remember the birds too? He could plant the Christmas tree and have a festival for the birds.

A few days later, with much ceremony, the boys of the neighborhood planted the rootless Christmas tree. It had been cleared of ornaments and tinsel, but upon each branch was fastened a choice morsel for the birds. A piece of dried bread, a small basket of dried corn, a small perch suspended over a box of rice and bird seed, and scattered under the tree handfuls of dainties for the birds to eat.

Throughout the winter months while the ground was covered with snow and the birds had difficulty in getting food, a whole flock of feathered folks enjoyed the daily replenished festival around the Christmas tree.

The boy who first thought of the Christmas festival for birds is unknown, but this year, in many parts of the country, Boy Scouts are taking up the pleasant task of planting their Christmas trees after Christmas and of providing a banquet for the birds. Why not try it in your neighborhood?

The height of ignorance is buying two neckties just alike.

HOGG DEMANDS LEASING OF MUSCLE SHOALS

Will Fix Nitrates For Fertilizer

(Special to St. Joe News)

Washington, D. C., Dec. 16th.—In an address to the House of Representatives today Congressman Hogg of Indiana pointed out that in the report of the Military Affairs Committee on February 16, 1929, it was stated: "The value of power wasted in 1928 at Muscle Shoals amounted to $3,341,251.00. This power transformed into nitrates will save the American farmer in twenty-three States a large part in cost of his fertilizer."

Mr. Hogg declared the plant costing more than $150,000,000 had been idle for ten years and that by the Act of Congress authorizing the building of the plant the President was authorized to least it for the production of nitrates and for use in fertilizer.

Mr. Hogg stated that the leasing of the plant was made more imperative due to the fact that during all of this time most of the nitrates in fertilizer were being imported from foreign countries.

What jumps out of reach quicker than a promising future?

Butler merchants will play the local Independent basket ball team here Saturday night, with a good 7:30 preliminary.

Dolly's Christmas Engagement

by Martha Banning Thomas

"AFTER all," murmured Dolly to her rickety pine dresser, "Christmas in the city isn't so awful!" She had just clambered up four flights of stairs, and marched rather solemnly the length of four dark halls. All the doors were closed in the halls; behind them she had heard people laughing and having a good time. In her arms she had carried a few bundles, mostly things for supper. She knew no one here to whom she could give a present if she wanted to. She knew no one who would, by the remotest chance, give her a present. Well, she had wanted to leave the country village where she had been born and brought up. It was too dull, much too dull for Dolly. Her parents had begged her to stay. The old man with whiskers who kept the country store had shaken his head over her. Her Uncle Jonah, a hard-headed, tight-fisted, rich old farmer had declared she shouldn't have a penny, not a cent of his money if she "up and kited out to the city." And she had retorted impertinently that she hoped Uncle Jonah would have a grave large enough to hold all his old money bags, so he could take them right on to which-ever place he was going when he died. Uncle Jonah somehow had not relished this remark. He told her never to set foot in his house again, and Dolly flew out in a fury.

Now she dropped her bundles on her very narrow bed, and dragged off her hat. Her bright hair tumbled about her ears, her blue eyes looked tired, her mouth sagged a bit at the corners. She threw her coat on a chair, and sighed. She had intended to begin at once to cook her supper on a tiny electric plate, then clear up the things and go out to hunt up some fun. Some of the girls at the store said they were going to the "movies" and then on to a cheap dance. They had invited her to come along. Dan Dugan had invited her to go out to supper with him, but she did not tell them that. They would have thought her so dumb not to have accepted. Dolly had liked Dan because he looked a little like Roger. But he really wasn't in the least like him. She discovered this at their second meeting. Dan worked at a soda fountain and had a lot of smart cracks which sounded funny the first time you heard them. But she had grown tired of his humor very soon. He was generous enough but something in his too familiar manner made her want to slap his face. So she had declined his invitation, saying she was going somewhere else. Danny was mad, of course, and said a number of unpleasant things about dames who worked a guy until something better came along.

Dolly didn't care. Here in her small room, with the rickety dresser and uncomfortable chair, she began thinking of Christmas at home. She assured herself that she was perfectly satisfied where she was, but it did no harm to remember some of the fun she had had in the square old house in the village.

She forgot her supper; she forgot that she was going to the "movies." She sat on the edge of her bed and clasped her hands around her knees. Her blue eyes were blind to the cracked window shade and the dusty looking globe of the electric light. She saw instead the big lamp on the middle of the living room table at home. The lamp had a cheerful yellow shade. Books and magazines were scattered about. Her mother was wrapping up the last packages. Her father, in house slippers, was smoking a pipe and reading the local paper. Her younger sister was sewing on a pin cushion destined for Dolly's stocking. Her brother was pacing restlessly up and down the room urging Dolly to "get a hustle on" and come out skating.

There were long garlands of ground-pine hung about the pictures. There were bunches of holly pinned to the curtains. There was mistletoe. There was a general smell of good things which had been put away in the pantry. There was, in short, a warm security of home.

Then Roger had burst into the door, bringing a cold blast of wintry air. "Come on out, Dolly," he shouted, "the skating's grand. Moon's up and everything."

"Do go, dear," her mother had said. "It's a shame to stay in a night like this. I'll have doughnuts and hot coffee for you when you come home." So she had gone with Roger. Millions and millions of stars in a deep blue sky. Frost in the air and sharp shadows cast by the bare trees on white houses.

Roger had laughed and joked all the way to the pond. They had skated around together, skimming over the smooth surface as easily as swallows. Gradually they had stopped talking. It had all been glorious and somehow very sweet. Then suddenly, shyly, Roger had stumbled over a few words, asking Dolly to marry him. She had loved him for it, but she said "no." She said she first must try her own life in the city. She must be independent. She could not bear the thought of settling down in the dull village.

"But we won't stay here always," Roger had begged.

"No," Dolly replied. And they went home without saying another word.

"Well," sighed Dolly aloud, "I must get my supper."

While she was busy heating water for coffee, cutting and buttering bread and washing lettuce in her sink she heard a man's footstep pass the door. Why she listened at his passing she could not guess, but when a clear whistle broke the chill silence of the hall she dropped the lettuce, and without knowing what she was doing, she flung open the door.

Dolly pursed her lips and whistled a feeble likeness to the cheery tune now descending the stairs. The whole expression of her face had changed. Her eyes sparkled, her face was flushed, her very hair seemed to curl more prettily about her ears.

The footsteps halted; the tune stopped. Dolly kept on with her end of it. A man was coming up the stairs. A tall man with broad shoulders and red hair. He wheeled about at the newel post and stared at Dolly. At this point she stopped whistling and grinned a wide, happy youthful grin. "I'd know that tune, Roger, if I heard it in China!" she called out. The young man made great haste in approaching. He had nothing to say whatever. He merely sent his hat sailing somewhere into the shadows and took Dolly in his arms. He hugged her until she gasped for breath.

After a while she persuaded him to find his hat and come into her room. "To think," said Roger, "that I have combed this darn city fore and aft to find you. You know you moved a month ago and never sent home your address. To think I chose this house, this very house, and have been coming in and out of it for three days, and never knew you were here. I'd about given up hope."

Dolly twinkled at him out of her blue eyes. Roger looked about at the rickety dresser, the narrow bed, the one uncomfortable chair. He said nothing but his voice was very tender when he finally took her hand and said softly: "We can catch the nine o'clock train for home, if you hurry. I came to get you, Dolly. I could not bear to think of you alone in this dreary hole. Your mother and father are waiting for us. They've hung up your stocking by the fireplace. And the pond is frozen solid. Grand skating!"

Dolly found her suit case and flung in her clothes. She jammed on her hat and caught up her coat. "Come, Roger, let's go!" she said.

They went down stairs. At the foot a man was waiting. At the sight of Dolly and her companion, his jaw fell. "Merry Christmas, Danny Dugan!" sang out Dolly, and clung more tightly to her escort's arm.

Christmas night Roger and Dolly were slowing skimming around the pond. There was a moon. There was just enough frost in the air to give the landscape a silvery white look. As they skated in rhythm and their breaths mingled in a sort of frosty cloud, Roger whispered, "Will you marry me, Dolly?" "Yes," she said. "Let's see how fast we can skate around the pond and then go home to —" she laughed happily—"coffee and doughnuts!"

ATWATER KENT RADIO

SCREEN-GRID (BATTERY... OR HOUSE CURRENT) ELECTRO-DYNAMIC

A radio—fine! but an Atwater Kent—that's great!

EVEN YOUNG FOLKS know the difference. Just watch their eyes glow when they discover their new radio is an Atwater Kent!

Why is it that this one name in a radio means so much, particularly to those who live on farms? Perhaps it's because Atwater Kent Radio asks for no time out for trouble. Perhaps it's because Atwater Kent never offers any improvement in radio until it has first been thoroughly tried and tested.

You'll enjoy a real sense of satisfaction in owning the greatest radio Atwater Kent has ever built—the new Screen-Grid, Electro-Dynamic, operated either by batteries or from the high line. The two types contain the same proved improvements, giant power, needle-point selectivity, purer tone, and a choice of cabinets or table model. Why not, this Christmas, join your home to the largest radio family in the world,* who get the great programs of the air with Atwater Kent Radio?

IN CABINETS—The best American cabinet makers—famous for sound design and sincere workmanship—are cooperating to meet the demand for Atwater Kent Screen-Grid Radio in fine cabinets like these.

Also in compact table models—For batteries, $62. For house-current operation, from $68 to $80. Electro-Dynamic table speaker, $37. Prices slightly higher west of the Rockies, and in Canada.

On the Air—Atwater Kent Radio Hour, Sunday Evenings, 9:15 (Eastern Time), WEAF network of N. B. C. Atwater Kent Mid-Week Program, Thursday Evenings, 10:00 (Eastern Time), WJZ network of N. B. C.

*Nearly 5,000,000 Atwater Kent Sets sold to date.

Silver Bandages Healing

Bandages made of silver, instead of cotton, apparently have the power of healing surgical wounds, according to Dr. P. Maritsch, of Vienna university Austria, Popular Science Monthly reports. The silver, applied in the form of a thin leaf, he reports, seems to have a marked antiseptic value.

TURKEY RAISING SHOULD DEVELOP

Survey Reveals Industry One of Most Profitable.

That "turkey production in the West should become one of the major farm enterprises if economic conditions remain as good as they have been during the past three years" is the belief of F. B. Headley, chief of the department of farm development of the University of Nevada agricultural experiment station.

Basis for his conclusion, Headley says, is a cost of production study carried on by his department during the last three years on five farms in Churchill county. Other profitable enterprises on the farms surveyed, according to the experiment station man, were alfalfa production, dairying and the raising of chickens, but turkeys brought in greater return for capital and labor expended.

Cost of producing the average turkey, which weighed 13 pounds dressed, on the basis of more than 5,000 birds covered by the study, was $3.52, or approximately 27 cents a pound.

"The bulk of the cost in producing turkeys is for feed," Headley says. "On most farms pasture constitutes an essential part of the ration and it is probable that the low cost of production is due in large part to the excellent alfalfa and grain stubble pasture that has been available."

Other conclusions concerning turkey production drawn by Headley from the survey are that the interest on investment is low, that "large flocks require less time per bird than the smaller flocks, and that over 75 per cent of all costs is for labor and feed."

Popularity of Frozen Eggs Fast Increasing

While at one time practically all eggs kept in Pennsylvania cold storage warehouses were "in shell," several million pounds of eggs "out of shell" have been reported in storage each year during the past few years, according to the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture. On June 30, 1928, the cold storage report for the state showed 4,657,000 pounds of eggs out of shell in storage, just ten times more than were in storage on the corresponding date in 1914.

The increasing popularity of the frozen eggs is explained by the bureau of markets as follows: "In the spring when eggs are plentiful, surplus eggs are purchased by breaking establishments which break and place the eggs in containers to be frozen as whole eggs, egg yolks, or egg whites for the use of the baking industry. After being frozen solid, the eggs are kept at a temperature ranging from zero to five degrees below. These are then made available to bakers at any time during the year. Many bakers report that these eggs give the most satisfactory results when kept in a frozen condition for about three months."

Well-Ventilated House Needful During Winter

A warm poultry house that will help to keep egg production high during the winter months must be well ventilated, says Prof. E. R. Gross, agricultural engineer at the New Jersey experiment station, New Brunswick.

To maintain a warm, well-ventilated henhouse three things are needed, advises Professor Gross: Tight walls, doors, and windows; ventilating flues, which may be constructed of wood at a low cost, and limited overhead space. To make the building tight, close all the cracks, cover the outside walls with roll roofing, or ceil the inside walls. Reduce the air space by ceiling overhead or by constructing a straw loft.

Ventilation and warmth go together. If the house is tightly built and has all doors and windows closed, the birds will give off heat enough to raise the inside temperature considerably above that on the outside. But when the house is tightly closed, moisture will begin to accumulate and the air become stale. Ventilation is needed, therefore, to carry away the moisture and to bring in fresh air.

Disappointment Sure

Compounding the ration of the laying hen, particular attention should be paid to the inclusion of the necessary vitamins. Yellow corn and green feeds provide much of vitamin A. Vitamin B is carried in wheat, corn, green feeds, alfalfa meal, alfalfa leaf flour and others. Vitamin D, or its equivalent, is supplied by making use of direct sunshine or by resorting to cod liver oil, the latter being an outstanding source of this most essential substance.

Keep Ground Clean

Clean and fresh ground may be made available by moving the house or houses to new ground each year, or by having a regular rotation of sown crops.

Sanitary ground is particularly necessary in the handling of all chicks and growing stock.

All poultry runs should be disced and planted with oats, rye, wheat or similar crops. Discing or plowing once a year is not sufficient for best results.

High Quality in Meats Demanded

Small, Lightweight Cuts of Only Moderate Fatness Are Wanted.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

American people are demanding high quality in meats more than ever before, but there is still a misconception on the part of many meat buyers as to what constitutes the best quality. Explaining this situation, O. G. Hankins of the United States Department of Agriculture, points out that the importance of the fat content of meat is not generally understood.

Market Demands.

"Many people believe that meat which tends to be lean is of higher quality than that which is quite fat," declares Mr. Hankins. "They regard the fat as unpalatable and fail to recognize the relation between a somewhat liberal proportion of fat and tenderness in the cooked meat. Generally speaking, there is an increased demand for rather small, lightweight, retail cuts of only moderate fatness.

"Aside from fatness or leanness several characteristics of meat are of particular interest to the consumer. The foremost of these is tenderness. The natural tenderness of meat appears to be caused by one or more factors, such as breeding, feeding, age, or management of the animal, yet tough meat can be made tender and toothsome by proper handling and cooking. The best indication of natural tenderness known at present is 'marbling,' or the distribution of particles of fat through the lean."

Meat Consumption.

Figures compiled by the Department of Agriculture show that in 1928 the per capita consumption of meat and lard in the United States was 153 pounds. Of this total, 7 pounds was pork, 51 pounds beef, 7 pounds veal, 6 pounds lamb and mutton, and 15 pounds lard.

To assist live-stock producers and packers in supplying the kind of meat desired by the public the department and 25 state agricultural experiment stations are working jointly on a national meat research project. It is expected that this research ultimately will help greatly to supply more of the kind of meat that the public wants.

When Planning Gardens Use Every Foot of Land

Use every foot of your land in planning for a garden. Idle patches only produce weeds. When one crop is harvested, another should be planted to fill the vacancy. Warm season crops, such as tomatoes and beans, and late seeded crops, such as turnips, may follow early cool season crops, such as lettuce, spinach, radishes and peppergrass.

Plan to give the long growing season crops the most favorable space. Short season crops, such as lettuce, spinach and radishes, may be planted between the long season crop rows.

A rotation of the various crops over the land checks disease and insects, and utilizes all the plant food available year after year. Shallow rooted crops, like onions, should follow deep rooted crops, such as cabbage.

Potatoes, corn, and vine crops require too much space in small gardens, but, if grown, the space between the rows can be used early in the season for quick maturing crops.

Scarified Clover Seed Produces Best Results

While occasionally one hears of good results obtained by sowing unscarified sweet clover seed, such practice is risky business. If weather conditions happen to be right, unscarified seed can be sown in February or March and thawing in snow or damp ground will soften the hard hull of the seed until a fair stand may be obtained. On the average, however, a 60 per cent stand is about the best that can be expected by such a practice. Properly scarified seed will give a 90 per cent stand under the same conditions, as a rule. This is implying, of course, that the ground is properly limed or of such natural composition as to favor the growth of the sweet clover.

Fertilizer to Produce Largest Profit on Farm

High-analysis fertilizer, shown by tests made by experiment stations to produce the most profit for farmers, has practically no odor. Many new fertilizer materials, such as nitrogen that is fixed from the air, resemble sugar or salt and have no odor. Farmers who rely on their noses for determining quality got the habit when fertilizers were made largely from waste products. Much of the complete fertilizer now on the market contains mostly straight chemical materials that have practically no odor.

Credit Machinery for Increased Production

"Machine methods of production have not ruined our agriculture," declares L. J. Fletcher, formerly professor of farm engineering in California university. "We should rather credit farm machinery with reducing the expenditure of manual labor on our farms, with shortening the working day and increasing the production per worker. Progress consists of continuously solving the problems of today which arise out the the solution of the problems of yesterday."

Ventilation Is Most Important With Seed

Freezing Is One of Winter Troubles of Spuds.

Freezing is most feared by potato growers when considering storage problems. As a result greater losses probably come from high temperatures than low, according to A. L. Wilson of the New York State College of Agriculture.

The difference between good and bad storage is only a matter of a few degrees above 40 degrees Fahrenheit; 34 to 40 degrees would be ideal; below 34 degrees means freezing, and above 40 degrees conditions are favorable for sprouting. Shrinkage increases rapidly as sprouts appear.

If the air is too dry, water loss from the potatoes will cause shrinkage, and if it is too moist, moisture will collect on the walls and ceiling, and on the tubers. The presence of drops of moisture on the ceiling or on the pile is a danger signal, for rot will begin unless ventilators are provided that may be open with safety on a relatively cold day.

Ventilation is more important with seed stock than market potatoes. It is essential to seed and preferable for market stock to come out of storage with vitality intact and a good appearance. Darkened areas on the tubers and a low vitality can be charged to lack of oxygen in the storage.

Stale and moist air must be removed and home-made devices will serve. False floors and walls will let air circulate around the pile. Slatted chutes may be run through the piles, or empty crates or barrels may be used.

Fertilizer Necessary for Best Garden Crops

It is not too early to begin thinking about and planning the farm or home vegetable garden, according to A. M. Binkley, assistant professor of horticulture at the Colorado Agricultural college.

Vegetable gardens should be well planned now, he says. New seed catalogues are being distributed to farmers and gardeners. The wise man will have his plans completed early and the quantities of seed determined so he can place his order soon.

By ordering early from reliable local seed dealers and reputable seed houses, one can avoid the delays caused by the rush of business later in the season, and the possible substitutions for desired varieties.

In planning the farm or home vegetable garden, one must first decide how much of each kind of vegetable to plant. This can only be estimated on the space available for the garden and the needs and tastes of the family.

In making selections of vegetable seeds from catalogues it is best to order standard varieties, Mr. Binkley declares.

Plan Vegetable Garden for Profitable Results

A garden started with a sod plowed under may worry along with commercial fertilizers for a few years but unless the humus, the decaying plant material in the soil, is renewed a gradual decrease in productiveness will occur. Where stable manure is not obtainable, leaves, lawn clippings, and other plant refuse may be piled up until partially decayed and then applied to the soil, or reasonable amounts may be spread directly upon it and spaded in. One good way to increase the humus content is to plant rye after the crops are removed. This may be done gradually as some crop is removed and some small space left vacant in the fall. The rye should be turned under the next spring before it makes too much growth.

Agricultural Hints

The farm tractor cannot be operated economically unless it is kept at its optimum load.

Potassium is a plant food that is very abundant in some fields and others are lacking in this element.

• • •

To do a job well and to feel that you are a necessary part of the world's progress—that is success or at least a large share of it.

Farm manure has a considerable amount of potassium and some of the good effects of manure may be due to the amount of the element present.

It has been found that wet soil does not freeze as easily as dry soil, and it has also been proven that the roots of plants are much less frost resistant than are the tops.

• • •

On wooded hillsides remove the trees gradually if there is danger of erosion. If the trees are all removed at once, gullies will be formed before the grass has time to get started.

• • •

Treating seed wheat assures smut free crop. Copper carbonate kills the smut spores on the seed. If the spores are not killed they may sprout and grow, producing the fungus that causes stinking smut.

• • •

Improve the tilth of garden soil by applying at least 20 tons of well-rotted animal manure per acre or by plowing under a green manuring crop. Lime and drainage, where needed, also aid in soil preparation.

"No other Flour could make such light fluffy Biscuits," says Mrs. Schneider

"That's How I Knew It Was 'Kitchen-tested' Flour"

"My husband brought home a 'sack of flour' and put it in the bin. I did not see him do it and I did not ask him what kind it was. But when I made biscuits with this flour—which I consider the supreme test—they came out light and fluffy every time. Then I found the blue slip and I knew I was using Gold Medal Flour. It had met the test and come through with flying colors. No other flour can satisfy me now. I could tell Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' flour in the dark."

Thousands of Women Have Banished "Guess Work" From Their Baking. They now know they can get perfect results every time—that time is saved and worry eliminated.

THEY use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that two sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Smooth Tree Dangerous When Lightning Rages

Smooth-barked trees served as fatal roosts for thousands of birds near St. Charles, Mo., when they were charged with electricity during a storm last August, Dr. William G. Wilson, ornithologist, will tell the United States Department of Agriculture in a report which he is preparing. More than 5,000 dead birds were reported to have been found on a farm a short distance from St. Charles, and more than 1,100 on another farm, following the storm. "I have never heard of a case of this kind before," Doctor Wilson said, "and it may not happen again in a thousand years, but I believe that it is worth reporting to federal experts. In my opinion only birds roosting on smooth-barked trees were killed when unusual atmospheric conditions charged the trees with electricity. I believe that this kind of tree is a conductor of electricity during a storm because water cannot be absorbed, making the tree attractive to the electrical charge. The charge was not strong enough to kill any but the smallest birds, however, since no large ones were found to have been victims."

Little Mary had mysteriously picked up an amazing vocabulary of swear words and slang. Mother had pleaded, scolded and reasoned. The ultimatum was leaving home. "Why, Mary, daddy and mother just can't have a little girl here who says such naughty words. We'll have to turn you out if you swear again."

But again it came. Her hat and coat were handed her. Resolutely she walked out and sat on the curb with her thoughts. Along came a neighbor.

"Good morning, Mary. Is your father at home?"

"How in the h—l do I know. I don't live there any more!" she said.—Indianapolis News.

Obituary

LIFE OF THE LATE DANIEL C. McCANN

Daniel Clymore McCann, son of George and Sarah McCann (deceased) was born in Ross County, Ohio, May 3, 1857 and departed from this life December 14, 1929, aged 72 years, 7 months and 11 days. He was one of a family of seven children there being three daughters and four sons all of whom preceded him in death except one brother.

In 1880 he was converted at the Center Church near his home in Fayette County Ohio and was the first to establish the family altar in the home of his parents. He was affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal denomination until after coming to this Community he joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Fairview. For many years he was a Sunday School teacher and held various offices in the church. Of late years, owing to failing health he has not been permitted to enjoy those activities but has had his worship in the home and has kept the faith and lived close to his Master.

In 1883, he was united in marriage to Miss Clara Elizabeth Henkle of Sabina, Fayette County, Ohio. To this union were born three children all of whom survive.

Six years ago, he had the misfortune to lose him arm after a long siege of suffering due to blood poisoning. Since that time he has been in rather frail health but was cheerful and patient and did not complain. During recent months, heart trouble developed and he was unable to overcome the affliction and failed rapidly during the last two weeks.

Mr. McCann had served the community as Marshall of this village and as Township Assessor, leaving at present an unexpired term of office. In these duties he was conscientious and loyal and in his passing one more good citizen—a faithful friend and neighbor has gone from among us. He was the first in his home to break the family circle save a grandchild, Gaylon Lumont McCann who died a few years ago—and it can be truly said that he was a dutiful husand, a good father, and a devoted grandfather.

Surviving besides the widow are the three children, Mrs. Grace Bishop of south of Auburn, George McCann of east of Auburn, and Wilbur McCann of Butler; sixteen grandchildren and the one brother John McCann of Harris, Ia., also hosts of relatives and friends many of whom live too far away to be present at these last sad rites.

The funeral was held from the home Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock with Rev. Otis Jones. of Elkhart, a former St. Joe pastor, officiating, assisted by the Rev. B. W. Mayfield of the M. P. Church. Burial was made at Spencerville with Roscoe Walter, funeral director.

HELD ELECTION

The Woman's Organization of the Methodist Protestant Church met Tuesday evening of this week at the home of Mrs. Mayola Kinsey. The devotional was led by Mrs. Delora Curie, reading from the second chapter of Luke, followed by a Christmas Story by Mrs. Minnie Pepple. A harmonica solo was rendered by Mrs. Kinsey after which Earl William Kinsey sang Silent Night accompanied by Mrs. Kinsey playnig the harmonica, wihch all enjoyed. A Christmas contest was conducted and followed by the business which consisted of yearly reports and the election of officers, resulting as follows:

President, Lora Leighty.
Vice President, Mayola Kinsey.
Secretary, Neva Hursh.
Treasurer, Loretta Hull.
Chorister, Delora Curie.

TWELFTH NIGHT

CHRISTMAS ends in England on the fifth of January, old Christmas Day, or Twelfth Night, with a great party for the little folks, which is the occasion for the cutting of the special "Twelfth Night cake," thus winding up the season; and if you have not tasted at least twelve samples of Christmas pudding during the twelve days between new and old Christmas —well, you are out of luck.

Christmas Meditation by Patience Eden

"THIS," said the quiet voice of the young minister to his waiting audience, "might be called 'A Christmas Meditation.' We shall try to give you merely a reverent impression of the spirit of the season. A bit of carol singing . . . some lighted candles . . . a reading from the Bible and one tableau."

There was a soft rustle of expectation throughout the church. The lights snapped off. All was dark and still.

Like the slow uprising of a fur wind came the sweet, subdued voices of a hidden choir. The beautiful notes floated over the heads of the people like a benediction.

Noiselessly candle after candle sprang into flame at the windows, each taper lighted by the hand of a small boy. Then the screens about the stage under the pulpit were removed. And there was the dear and treasured scene so loved and so cherished at this season.

The manger . . . Mary bending over it . . . Joseph standing near by. A soft glow from the rude cradle suffused the faces about it. Mary all in spotless white . . . Joseph bearded and dressed in blue, with a scarlet mantle over his shoulders, a striped headdress and a broad sash about his waist.

The music slid softly into "While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night." From the front of the church came a tall figure with a crook. A shepherd from the hills, who knelt in front of the manger and then stood near. Then another and another, rough men with kindly, awkward manners. Two little fellows followed, their eyes round with awe.

Again the music changed. "We Three Kings of the Orient Are." A thrill passed through the church. The strange notes of this music ushered in an impressive figure who advanced toward the manger with royal dignity.

Many men act as if asking them to pay a bill they owe were an insult.

Women Share New Hazards With Men

Three Brave Women Join with Men in Dangerous Ventures

WOMEN have gone a long way from home in recent years and have proved their fitness to cope with the dangers and hardships of the outside in a way that would do credit to any man.

Consider, for example, the hardihood of petite Fraulein Clairenore Stinnes, daughter of the late Hugo Stinnes, noted German industrialist and capitalist. This twenty-eight year old heiress to a huge fortune, pampered pet of society, desired adventure. She had attained some fame as a racing automobile driver in Europe. So accompanied by C. A. Soderstrom, Swedish sportsman, she set out for a motor trip around the world. Two years of travel through twenty-seven countries and over 35,000 miles of good roads, bad roads and no roads at all brought her the soul-filling experiences she desired in more than good measure.

Snow bound in Siberia with the temperature at times eighty degrees below zero, she helped shovel her car out of many a snow drift. She faced bandits in Russia and China without flinching and used her woman's wit to escape their clutches. The terrific heat of the Arabian desert did not daunt her. She stoically faced starvation and thirst in the Andes for more than a week. Throughout the arduous trip her stamina, spirit and good humor never deserted her.

Miss Stinnes modestly gave credit to the sturdy car which she drove. "No ordinary car could have stood the rough travelling that we endured," said the heiress. "Just the extremes of heat and cold would have wrecked the average car. But this all-steel bodied car of ours could expand and contract in the heat of Africa, the cold of Siberia and with the drought of the Sahara and the moisture of India, without causing any damage and in addition stand the terrific banging it received over cruel, rocky roads.

Mrs. Prentiss Gray, of Larchmont, New York, is showing her mettle in the wilds of darkest Africa. Accompanied by her husband, Mrs. Gray, who is a frail, middle-aged little woman, is braving the perils of the jungle seeking rare animals for the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. Mrs. Gray is, herself, driving the all-steel photographic car from which wild animals will be snapped, secure in her all-steel automotive fortress with non-shatterable glass windows. There are seven months and several thousand miles of this kind of travel mostly over roadless country. Mrs. Gray has been with her husband on other expeditions and knows how to handle herself and her steel car, which is the only type suitable for trips through jungles or rough roads.

Miss Marian Barbara Carstairs is a young English sportswoman who has shown her nerve and other qualities generally supposed to be masculine property. A high disciple of motor boat speed racing, she has several times pitted her boats and skill against Gar Wood, world's champion of this highly exciting sport. During a race on the Detroit River in 1928, Miss Carstairs, driving her craft across the wake of the world's two fastest boats, driven by Commodore Wood and his brother George, found herself in the water stunned and injured when her boat leaped into the air and came down on the surface upside down. Both the intrepid girl and her mechanic, Joe Harris, were supported by their life preserver jackets while a coast guard boat rushed to their rescue. Despite her plight Miss Carstairs refused to be picked up until Harris, who was more seriously injured, had been rescued.

A Christmas Carol
By James Russell Lowell

"WHAT means this glory round our feet,"
The Magi mused, "more bright than morn!"
And voices chanted clear and sweet,
"Today the Prince of Peace is born!"

"What means that star," the shepherds said,
"That brightens through the rocky glen?"
And angels, answering overhead,
Sang, "Peace on earth, good will to men!"

'Tis eighteen hundred years and more
Since those sweet oracles were dumb;
We wait for Him, like them of yore;
Alas, He seems so slow to come!

But it was said, in words of gold,
No time or sorrow o'er shall dim,
That little children might be bold
In perfect trust to come to Him.

All round about our feet shall shine
A light like that the wise men saw,
If we our loving wills incline
To that sweet Life which is the Law.

So shall we learn to understand
The simple faith of shepherds then,
And, clasping kindly hand in hand,
Sing, "Peace on earth, good will to men!"

But they who do their souls no wrong,
But keep at eve the faith of morn,
Shall daily hear the angel-song,
"Today, the Prince of Peace is born!"

As the day is dawning
Footsteps on the stair.

Jingle bells, jingle bells,
Christmas in the air,
Let us broadcast happiness
For every one to share!

MEETING UNDER AUSPICES OF FARM BUREAU

On Tuesday evening of this week a meeting was held in the Concord Township Gym, to perfect an organization under the management of the Farm Bureau Federation, whereby farmers might benefit themselves in the purchase of oils and lubricants.

County Agent Stimson was chairman of the meeting. To enliven the meeting, a musical program was given by Mr. and Mrs. Hollinger, and Ross Leatherman, the company hailing from Williams County and Troy Township. The music consisted of snappy modern numbers on harmonica, guitar, violin and piano, was highly appreciated.

County Agent Stimson then introduced the speaker, a Mr. Fricke, whose coming was somewhat belate owing to the fact that he had just finished the perfection of an organization of Allen County farmers on the same lines he has hopes of organizing here.

In the beginning of the address Mr. Fricke particularly emphasized the point that it is only with a view to bettering conditions of the farmers, and not with hostile motives toward other business associations is the motive which actuates this body.

The impression that prevails in the minds of some farmers, that harvester companies organized as an act of hostility toward farmers is false; they organized merely to further their own advancement which is perfectly legitimate. And this movement fostered as a business proposition, under the auspices of the Farm Bureau, is likewise a strictly legitimate proposition to further the interests of farmers. Mr. Fricke clinched his arguments by spicy anecdotes which well illustrated his points.

A number of questions were answered by the speaker on the subject, and a favorable impression seems to have been made which may mean the carrywing out of this project by DeKalb County farmers. Other meetings will follow at an eartly date.

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIII — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, DEC. 26, 1929 — NUMBER 5

GREATEST SNOW OF YEARS PAST

Indiana was still snowbound in all but the southern portions and floodbound in some of those sections the first of the week.

Highways in general throughout the northern half of the state were still clogged with snow. Traffic was either completely or partially blocked. Side roads had not been touched in many instances, as all available manpower worked on main routes.

Hundreds of autos with their passengers, continued to be snowbound, and many passengers were seriously inconvenienced by the delay. In some instances lack of funds added to the discomfort of those marooned.

An acute water famine which struck Indiana Harbor and East Chicago was believed temporarily taken care of by an emergency line. Needle ice had clogged the intake pipes far out into Lake Michigan, and storms on the Lake prevented employes from removing the obstruction.

Rural communities were still isolated, and many farm families were without certain of their staple foods, although no cases of actual suffering had been reported.

There seemed to be a bread famine in this locality due to the wagons being unable to make their trips and some had to be shipped in by express.

Hopes for early relief from the cold wave were blasted by U. S. weather bureau forecasts although continued cold wave may be expected until this week.

The report indicated, however, that aside from low temperatures, conditions would be favorable for a return to normal conditions. No further precipitation was anticipated, with fair weather in the offing for the week-end.

State highway crews are making good progress with 5,000 men scattered throughout the snowbound regions of the northern half of the state, but they had a tremendous job ahead of them.

Main roads were being opened one by one, with the prospect that most of these would be in reasonably good condition by the first of this week. It seemed probable, however, that side roads would continue to be blocked until next week.

In DeKalb County practically everything was at a stand still for days. The high wind made it useless to try to open the roads until Saturday.

Ora Baker was employed by the county commissioners in the southeast part of the county to open the main roads with his grader and tractor and together with the county snow plow the main roads are opened up fairly well today.

The snow of Sunday night added several inches to the already heavy blanket.

Only a few side roads are passable and not until Monday did the mail carriers make an attempt to serve their patrons fully.

WITH THE HOME BUREAU CLUB

The ladies of Spencer Township Home Bureau held their annual Christmas and Exchange at the home of Mrs. Zona Abel. At noon one of those delicious pot luck dinner was served in the dining room with holiday decorations being used freely on the tables and in the windows.

After dinner the program was opened by the president, Mrs. Claudia Hafner. The two Christmas carols, "Holy Night and Jingle Bells" were sung which was followed by the Lord's prayer. The roll call was a response from the bible.

Mrs. Dora Wilder read a very interesting story on "Christmas in Other Countries." Little Elinor Chaney sang a Christmas song after which the exchange of gifts was held.

OVER 200 IN INDIANA SICK WITH SMALLPOX

Indianapolis, Dec. 21.—Seriousness of smallpox throughout Indiana this winter was emphasized today in the weekly report of the state board of health. There were 216 cases in the state this week, compared to 44 cases a year ago and 170 cases last week.

Randolph County reported the largest number of cases with 29. Benton and Allen each reported as follows: Wayne, 18; Elkhart, 17; Adams, 13; Clark, 10; Clinton, 1; Delaware, 10; Gibson, 3; Grant, 4; Greene, 6; Hancock, 4; Henry, 10; Knox, 26; Kosciusko, 1; Madison, 15; Marion, 2; Wabash, 1; Marshal, 5; Monroe, 1; Pike, 1, and St. Joseph, 9.

Nine cases of spinal meningitis were reported, eight from Marion county and one from Vanderberg.

There were 149 cases of scarlet fever compared to 160 last week and 126 last year. Three cases of typhoid fever were reported, compared with two cases last week and six last year.

OBITUARY

Milton, youngest child of Joseph and Harriett Haifley, was born on a farm in DeKalb County June 29, 1909. When a mere child his parents moved to St. Joe, Indiana where he has resided during the twenty short years that has been his privilege to live. He attended the St. Joe public schools but quit at an early age for his widowed mother being in meagre circumstances he felt the need of seeking employment to support himself. He was an energetic lad and did well whatever his hands found to do.

Two years ago he was stricken with a heart malady and was very ill for many weeks but recovered sufficiently to resume his work. In February of this year he suffered a second attack from which he has been a constant sufferer until the Master called him home. He realized his sojourn here was near the end and expressed a readiness to go.

He was staying temporarily with a brother Charles at Auburn and it was in that home that his spirit took its flight Wednesday, December 18, 1929.

Milton was a member of the St. Joe Lutheran Church, uniting with the church in early life. Surviving besides his mother are three brothers, three sisters and many relatives and friends. His father and three brothers have preceded him in death.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon from the Lutheran Church with Rev. Aldrich of Butler, officiating, assisted by Rev. G. D. Stoll, local pastor. Burial was made in Riverside Cemetery by E. R. Kinsey.

IN MEMORIAM

SAILER—RAY W. In loving memory of our beloved husband and father who passed away one year ago today, December 23, 1928.

One year has passed, my heart still sore,
As time flies on I miss him more.
Days may come and days may go,
But each day my sorrow seems to grow.
The loss of one so good and true
Makes my burden hard to bear.
Silent and deep are the tears that I weep.
Surrounded by friends, I am lonesome.
In the midst of pleasure I am blue.
A smile on my face, but my heart aches,
Longing, Dear Ray, for you.

Loving Wife and Son—

FELLOWSHIP THROUGH WORSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Neh. 8:1-12; Micah 4:1, 2; Ps. 122:1-9; Heb. 10:22-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—As his custom was he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Worshiping God Together.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Worshiping God Together.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Taking a Real Part in Worship.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Common Worship and the Community Spirit.

I. The Place of the Bible in Worship (Neh. 8:1-12)

1. The reading of God's word (vv. 1-3).

(1) The eager assembly (v. 1). The people gathered themselves together and requested Ezra to bring the book of the law. God had touched their hearts, creating within them a yearning for His Word.

(2) It was a representative assembly (v. 2). It was made up of men, women and children. God's Word should be taught to all classes, men, women and children.

(3) An appreciative assembly (v. 3) So eager were they to know God's Word that they did not get tired, although the lesson lasted five or six hours. Their ears were attentive from morning until midday.

2. The attitude of the people toward God's Word (vv. 4-6).

(1) They reverenced it (vv. 4, 5) When Ezra opened the law all the people stood up out of respect for God's Word.

(2) They joined heartily in the prayer (v. 6). As Ezra led them in prayer, they united in saying, Amen, Amen, bowing their faces to the ground.

3. God's Word being interpreted (vv. 7, 8).

(1) Ezra stood up where the people could see him (v. 5).

(2) He read distinctly (v. 8). The manner in which many read the Scriptures greatly discredits them.

(3) He caused the people to understand the reading (v. 8). The supreme business of the minister is to make the Word of God plain to all, old and young.

4. Effect of the application of God's Word upon the life of the people (vv. 9-12).

(1) Conviction of sin (v. 9).

The divine method of convicting men of sin is the application of God's Word in the energy of the Holy Ghost.

(2) Weeping turned into joy (vv. 10-12). Forgiveness follows the recognition and confession of sin.

(3) Their blessings were shared with others (vv. 10-12).

II. Jerusalem the World's Central Place of Worship (Micah 4:1, 2).

1. Its place of supremacy (v. 1).

In the last days, Messiah's kingdom, with Jerusalem as its capital shall prevail over all kingdoms.

2. The peoples, Jews, shall flow unto it (v. 1). It will be a beautiful sight to see the Jews who have been scattered all over the world come to Jerusalem as a mighty flowing stream.

3. The Gentile nations shall go there to worship (v. 2).

4. The supreme purpose of their going will be to be taught of God, that they may walk in His ways (v. 2).

What a wonderful day when all peoples of the world shall worship together in God's holy temple!

III. The Song of the Worshipers (Ps. 122:1-9).

This psalm is one of the songs sung by the Jews as they made their pilgrimages to Jerusalem to worship at the great festivals. This song embodies the following great ideas:

1. The joy of the worshipers (vv. 1, 2).

The invitation to go up to the house of the Lord to worship stirred within them delightful emotions.

2. Love and admiration for God's house (vv. 3, 4).

We should go to the house of worship because we love the place. Like Jesus, we should regard it as our Father's house.

3. It was the seat of royalty (v. 5).

When Christ's kingdom shall be established in Jerusalem, worshipers will delight to journey there because of their love for Him.

4. Prayer for God's house; prayer for the peace of Jerusalem (vv. 6-9).

It is our duty as well as privilege to pray for Israel. God blesses those who are kindly disposed toward His chosen people (Gen. 12:1-3).

One Way to Help God

There is but one way in which man can ever help God—that is by letting God help him: and there is no way in which His name is more guiltily taken in vain than by calling the abandonment of our own work, the performance of His.—Ruskin.

The Book of God and Prayer

Give the Book of God its place in prayer. Prayer is not talking to God simply; it is listening first, then speaking.—S. D. Gordon

NEW METHOD OF HEATING HOMES

Test Has Been Made of Oil Burners and Fuel Oils.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There is widespread interest in the new method of heating homes by burning fuel oil, and many types of oil burners have been designed especially for this purpose. People like the relief from the uncertainty of the coal supply, from tending furnace, taking out ashes and other dirty work, and the possibility of regulating the heat automatically.

The United States Department of Agriculture has made some investigations of oil burners and fuel oils. These studies indicate that this method of heating is well suited to the requirements of many home owners on account of its convenience and ease of heat control. However, to obtain these advantages, the prospective purchaser must be willing to pay the cost of changing to the new system, and possibly an increased operating cost. Before deciding whether a change to oil burning is desirable, there should be a thorough understanding of different types of oil burners, and of installation and operation costs.

Fuel for oil burners is derived from crude oil after other products have been extracted, and is sold in various grades. The proper grade for use in any case is determined by the type of burner in which it is to be used. The vaporizing type of burner requires a light oil which costs more per unit of heat than the heavier grades, and in general these burners are not equipped with automatic control. The atomizing types have a motor and other mechanical devices for atomizing the oil and mixing it with air before delivery to the combustion chamber. They are generally equipped with full automatic control, are less exacting as to the type of fuel required, and are less given to smoking and sooting because of better combustion.

Safety is of paramount importance in any device to be used in the home, regardless of any advantages claimed, no home-owner would be justified in installing a burner that is not reasonably safe. The Underwriters' laboratories have tested and listed many of the burners now manufactured as complying with standards of minimum hazard. Burners that have been so tested bear a mark indicating the fact. However, the absence of such marking does not necessarily mean that a burner does not comply with the requirements of the Underwriters' laboratories. There are on the market a number of burners which have not been submitted for test or which are now on the waiting list.

Old-Fashioned Cookies Now Called Sand Tarts

An old-fashioned type of cookie, sprinkled with a mixture of sugar and cinnamon—the "sand" which gives it its name—is always welcome with fruit or ice cream for dessert, and may be kept on hand for tucking into the school lunches or serving with iced tea, punch, or hot coffee, when callers come. These cookies will stay crisp if kept in a tight tin container or closely covered stone jar such as our grandmothers used. The recipe is furnished by the bureau of home economics.

½ cup butter
¾ cup light brown sugar
1 egg
2 cups sifted flour
2 tsps. baking powder
¼ tsp. salt
1 tsp. cinnamon
2 tbs. granulated sugar
Halved almonds or pecans

Cream the butter, add the sugar gradually, then the well-beaten egg. Stir in the sifted dry ingredients. On a lightly-floured board make a roll of the dough about 3 inches in diameter. Wrap well in waxed paper and let stand overnight in a cool place. In the morning slice wafer thin with a sharp knife, and sprinkle with a mixture of cinnamon and granulated sugar.

Clover Leaf Rolls

Clover leaf rolls are very attractive and are easily made. The dough is prepared the same as for bread. After the first rising, small pieces of the dough are shaped into little balls. Three of these are fitted into greased muffin pans, allowed to rise till double in bulk, and baked in a hot oven. Dough left over from bread making may be used in this way.

ICE CREAM FROZEN WITHOUT STIRRING

Plain Mousse Made in a Ring Mold.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In a good many families the boy that used to turn the ice cream freezer for the sake of a chance at "licking the dasher" has grown up and gone away to college. Or for some other reason, mother does not seem to find it convenient to have desserts made in the ice cream freezer as often as she used to. Perhaps she does not know that very satisfactory ice creams may be frozen without stirring if they are made of suitable ingredients and packed sufficiently long in ice and salt or placed in the trays of the mechanical refrigerator.

A fairly rich mixture must be used in these desserts and the ingredients carefully combined. Properly prepared, these ice creams have a characteristic flaky, crystalline texture which is very much liked. Heavy or whipping cream is used both for mousses and in combination with egg whites in parfaits. If used alone, however, heavy cream is too rich to be palatable, and in cities it is expensive. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has therefore developed a number of recipes in which the rich cream is diluted by the addition of evaporated milk and thin cream, or by rich milk thickened with gelatin, eggs, or flour.

If the tray in the mechanical refrigerator is used for making the ice cream the result will be a neat flat cake of convenient shape for serving. A ring mold is attractive, or any desired mold may be used. If the mold is to be packed in ice and salt, the opening should be sealed by having a strip of cloth dipped in paraffin drawn tightly over it. Some other fat with a high melting point could also be used. After packing, the ice cream or mousse must stand for several hours, depending on the shape and size of the mold. Use about three parts of crushed ice to one of coarse ice cream salt.

Here is a recipe for a plain mousse, flavored with vanilla. Plain mousses may be varied by serving them as sundaes with fresh fruits or with sauces flavored with chocolate, caramel, maple, or honey. Less sugar may then be used in the mousse, and it will be easier to freeze. Sugar lowers the freezing point of an ice cream. Other variations are also suggested.

Foundation Recipe for Plain Mousse.

1 cup double cream
1 cup rich milk or thin cream
1 tbs. gelatin
6 tbs. sugar.
2 egg whites
¼ tsp. salt
½ tsp. vanilla.

Soak the gelatin until soft in a little of the milk or thin cream, heat the remainder, and pour over the gelatin. Add the sugar and stir until dissolved. Put the mixture aside to chill. Whip the double cream. When the first mixture has thickened slightly, beat it to incorporate air, add the vanilla, and fold in the whipped cream and the well-beaten egg whites. The egg whites reduce richness, increase volume, and improve texture. These proportions will make over four cups before freezing; or, if the egg whites are not used, about three cups.

Half a cup of strong coffee may be substituted for ½ cup of the thin cream, to give coffee flavor. Or, use ¼ pound of peppermint stick candy instead of sugar, for peppermint ice cream. One-fourth pound of peanut brittle finely ground and used instead of sugar makes an excellent variation, new to many people. Many other variations in flavor are possible after one has become familiar with the foundation recipe.

Ginger Ella

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, his motherless daughters Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has affected Mr. Tolliver's eyes to the point of threatened blindness. Ginger has tried in many ways to add to the family's slender income, but she is not discouraged. Marjory wins the beauty prize, $50.00. She gives the money to her father as part of the expense necessary for the treatment of his eyes by Chicago specialists. Mr. Tolliver leaves for Chicago with Miriam. Ginger meets Alexander Murdock. Mr. Tolliver returns, the doctors giving him little hope.

"And everybody who buys one, will sell four more—"

"And it all started from one. One single, solitary, little one."

The girls talked on and on. But Ginger drew herself away from them and enwrapped in impenetrable thought. She remembered the old chain letters. They had come with some frequency a few years ago, prayers for almost everything, for the sick for foreign missions, for prohibition, for fundamentalism, for the second coming of the Lord, for the release of anarchistic prisoners condemned to death—

"And everybody sends it on to so many more, and every one of them sends it to so many more, and they send it—"

Ginger got up suddenly and went out of the room. She walked dizzily. She went upstairs, got the short ladder from the linen closet, and balanced it against the wall under the trapdoor. She noticed that her hands trembled. But she climbed carefully—the ladder was old—pushed up the trapdoor, and pulled herself through the opening. From force of habit, for she was not then thinking of trapdoors, she locked it behind her, and made her way carefully over the beams to her sanctuary under the dormer window. There she sat down heavily, to think. She thought, and thought, and thought, until her bright eyes were so wide, so bright, so blue, that of a sudden they seemed to hurt her, and she shut them hard. Her two small hands were gripped so tightly, with fingers interlaced so closely, that suddenly she knew they were throbbing with pain, half paralyzed, so that she had to work them apart, slowly, a finger at a time. But she did not stop thinking.

"Chain letter—on and on—all over the world—thousands and thousands—and nobody dares to stop because nobody would dare to break the chain—for the blind—a home for the blind—on and on and on."

Suddenly Ginger burst into low nervous laughter, and laughed and cried and twisted her little hands, and rocked back and forth on the stool in an ecstasy.

"Oh, oh, how heavenly, how perfectly heavenly! I never could have thought of such a brilliant thing. Oh, as father says, I see the hand of the Lord in this!"

She pulled the stool to the low table which she used as a desk, and seated herself with a professional briskness indicative of the oneness of purpose which prompted her. Selecting three pencils from a large number in the drawer, she sharpened them briskly. Then she drew her pad of paper toward her, and opened it.

Then she studied intently, chewing her pencil. She wrote a nasty line, and quickly scratched it out. Again she wrote, again she frowningly discarded it. Several times she repeated this painful process, but at last, as so often happens, persistent effort brought inspiration, and she wrote fluently, without a pause for thought.

"Our parsonage home for the blind is sadly in need of funds to carry on its noble work. Will you not contribute Ten Cents to this very worthy cause? And complete the chain of good vibrations by sending copies of this letter to three of your friends in whom you have confidence? In this way, this valuable institution will enlarge its circle of friends and will be enabled to continue its care of the unfortunate and needy blind.

"We depend on you.

"Do not break the chain.

"E. Tolliver, treasurer,

"Red Thrush, Iowa."

Ginger was greatly pleased with the formal tone of this letter. She knew very well that if she received such an appeal, she would contribute gladly—if she had the money. She read it over and over, adding a word, omitting a word, substituting a word, until the final version seemed impossible of improvement.

The question to whom the letter should be sent was subjected to deep thought. Indeed, it was more than thought, so deep it was. Men, she knew, were more susceptible than women to personal appeal—particularly when the personal appeals came from not unattractive girls. But women were more superstitious and would be more reluctant to bring upon themselves the implied curse that would result from a breaking of the chain. Women, then.

As for location, she was not particular, except that it would be best to start at some distance from Red Thrush. Methodist interests are closely allied in neighboring towns, and she realized the importance of protecting the family name. Now Ginger herself was deeply enamored of the chain letter idea, to her it smacked absolutely of the hand of Providence. But one could never know just how fathers and older sisters would react to things, hence she realized it would be the part of discretion to avoid questions whose answers could not be evaded. Ginger's unfailing resource in an emergency was the daily press. She got the last issue of the Burlington Hawkeye, and studied its columns. Now, theoretically, a chain should start from a single link, but she was not willing to trust the foundation of her fortunes to one small dime which might not be forthcoming.

She decided upon three as a fair start. "Three links are better than one," she said thoughtfully. "And if it starts three chains, so much the better."

When ever she came to the name of a woman mentioned prominently, she put her finger on the place, closed her eyes, and tried to get a vibration about it. Finally the three letters were written, enclosed in envelopes, addressed, and Ginger took them at once to the corner mail box, and put them in.

"Ah," she breathed ecstatically, as she turned back toward the parsonage. Her heart was as light as the wings of a butterfly, it seemed to carry her home. Already the old house looked a new place to her, a rosy place, bright with flowers, fresh paint, new furniture. Thousands upon thousands. Helen herself had said it. Thousands upon thousands—

"Oh, I wish I had asked for quarters," she thought. "Such a very good cause, nobody could begrudge it."

* * * * * * * *

Had it not been for the pleasurable excitement attendant upon Helen's wedding, Ginger felt she could not possibly have endured the strain of the days that followed. Her confidence in the outcome of her chain letter home-for-the-blind was absolute. Winters might come, with their consequent coal and coat bills, daughters might go, with their petty love affairs, but Ginger Ella and the chain letter would go on for ever.

Plans for the wedding took precedence over everything else, for Helen, yielding to the argument that for her in this case the way of genuine sacrifice lay in gracious acquiescence to plans already made, proceeded calmly with her arrangements. She knew in her heart that she would have preferred a more apparent display of her unselfishness. She would have enjoyed a real martyrdom. She would have been proud to stand gloriously forth, to her father, her sisters, and Red Thrush, giving up her marriage for a year, for ten years, for ever, if need be. But she was honest enough to realize that the course of true denial followed another channel. Mental rest, the doctors had prescribed, and that could never be had in the sacrifice of his daughter's plans.

The wedding was to be held in the church, with the girls of Helen's Sunday school class, the Rutheana, serving a buffet luncheon in the Sunday school assembly room, the room that was used for church dinners, socials and the like. This luncheon was to take the place of a home reception. The details of the ceremony had been carefully practiced. Horace Langley, with Eddy Jackson as his best man, was to wait in the small room at the left side of the pulpit. The bridesmaids were to gather in the primary room, just inside the main entrance.

Helen decided that when all the invited guests sat silently waiting within the church, she, with her father, would walk quietly across the intervening space from parsonage to church—such a very little way—and while Ellen took him on around to the pulpit room on the right of the altar, she would join her attendants in the primary department.

For fully a week, although but ten days had elapsed since the forging of the first link that was to grow into an endless chain of silver dimes, Ginger had dogged the steps of the postman.

"Letter for me? There's not? That's funny."

But on the very day before the wedding, as though to fill her cup to utter overflowing, the postman delivered three letters addressed to E. Tolliver, all in strange handwriting.

"Well, that's funny," stammered Ginger, and held out a trembling hand, and with the guilty consciousness of the evildoer, sure the very postman must be suspicious of such a sudden burst of correspondence, she added, "Bunch of ads, I suppose." She was so excited that she fell off the ladder three times before she finally got herself—and the three letters—into the attic studio under the dormer window.

She was trembling nervously. Her chilly fingers tore uselessly at the stiff paper, she had it open at last, a dime rolled out upon the floor. She seized and kissed it.

"You're my nest egg," she whispered, "you're my lucky piece, you're what some dumb farmer would call pay dirt."

She opened the other letters, three dimes resulting. A sort of stillness came over her. She sat, huddled into a small hunch on the old stool and read the letters—pleasant letters, sympathetic. "It is a joy to help in such good work." "God bless the cause." "Pleasure to add my mite."

"The darlings," said Ginger. "The dear, sweet, generous, Christian souls." Ginger had a significant habit of judging one's Christianity, not by his thoughts but by his contributions. Three dimes to her represented three devout Christians. Very still she sat on the old stool, very quiet, enveloped in a sweet and grateful gladness. Her mind leaped swiftly on, to expensive curative treatments for her father, new rich furniture to replace their threadbare shabbiness, coal and steak and chickens—

She kissed the letters, one after the other, and crumpled them in her hand, to be burned.

"Little white angels," she called tenderly.

Then she cast about for a proper receptable for this incipient fortune. Three dimes, of themselves, did not require much treasuring, but the highly imaginative eyes of Ellen Tolliver looked already upon the thousands and thousands, in neat little stacks, that were to come. In another part of the attic she ferreted out an old doll's trunk, very dusty, very shabby, but stout, well made, with a strongly hinged top, and best of all, with the old lock still intact and the key dangling from a string. Within it, side by side, she laid the three dimes, and turned the key in the rusty old lock. Then she moved everything else off her desk, and directly in the middle of it she placed the trunk, royally alone. The key she thrust unconcernedly into the table drawer. She was not afraid of thieves.

Her sigh was a great and glad one. "At last fortune smiles upon the parsonage, and all the Tollivers in it," she whispered joyously. "Perhaps not much of a smile so far—just a little giggle, but a nice little giggle. The poor little church mice are going to surprise folks one of these days."

She wished greatly to tell her sisters of this sudden turn in the tide of the family fortune, but that little inner monitor, which Ginger most unscripturally called a hunch, warned her against this confidence, and she buried herself and her seething emotions as well as she could in plans for the following day.

Long before the high hour of noon on Helen's wedding day, she was daintily arrayed in her blue organdie, pirouetting up and down the hall from room to room, hurrying everybody, criticizing the general appearance of her sisters, offering endless peri suggestions, and always inciting them to greater haste.

FUR CRAFT REACHES HIGH ART; FROCKS FOR THE SCHOOLGIRL

Beautiful Baby Caracul Coat.

FASHION insists that the swan-song of the uniform fur coat is sung. In the newer models, one realizes to what a high degree of artistry fur craft is being developed. In them, the master touch of the artist furrier is discerned, who not only knows how to handle fur from the workmanship angle, but who is thoroughly style-conscious down to the slightest detail.

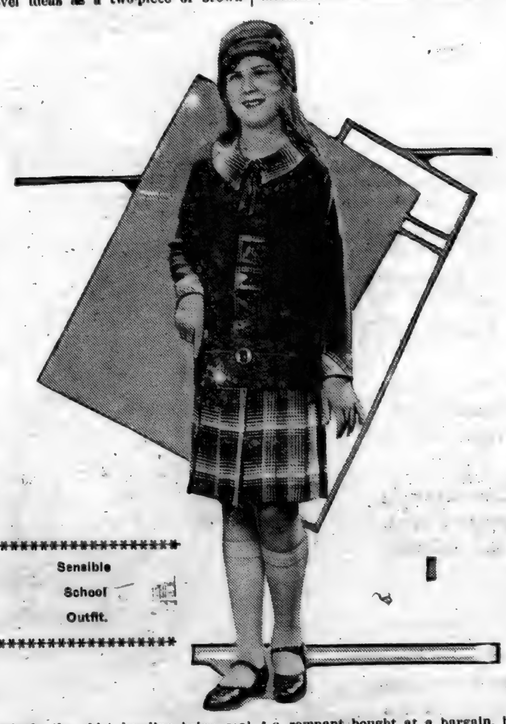
That modern styles extol a new fur craft, is a conviction which the very beautiful baby caracul coat in the picture, carries. This exquisitely fashioned model plays up flaring hemlines all the way from capelet to cuffs to skirt. A touch of marten is effectively introduced at the top of the flaring cuffs. The diagonal lap at the front fastening of the coat is an outstanding style detail.

Two leading characteristics of this season's fur coats are fitted lines and novel combinations of pelts. Fine furs such as black on tinted caracul, broadtail and even those of sheared lamb and muskrat are partial to circular-cut skirts and other intricacies which animate the silhouette. Seal-dyed muskrat styled a la princess and trimmed with lighter furs such as eggshell ermine or fitch, squirrel or caracul present an intriguing theme.

Something new this season is the shoulder-cape collar. Quite directoire it is in appearance and especially when complemented with a wee muff to match. Not only do these clever fur novelty sets trim cloth coats, but the latest fur combinations trim a coat of one pelt with a cape of another, such as a beige caracul coat with a cape-collar of summer ermine.

Another variation of the fur mode is the bow motif, which ties fur bows here and there on the coat. This decorative trimming appears not only at the neckline and at the wrists, but the latest wrinkle is to fasten the coat with a fur bow, or with fur tie-strings instead of a loop and button.

Fur luxury also is expressed in the two-piece suit of galyak, or broadtail, these types being that fabric-like they lend themselves to manipulation and insure wearableness. Interesting versions of the fur suit include such novel ideas as a two-piece of brown galyak, the skirt hemline being scalloped while the jacket is cut on box lines.



Sensible School Outfit.

For the Schoolgirl.

In fashionland only the first half of the rule applies that "children should be seen and not heard." Not only are youngsters very much in sight of the creators of styles, but they are also decidedly heard, for these days youngsters have views of their own and are encouraged to express them in regard to "what to wear."

To such an extent is the voice of the schoolgirl and others of junior age heard, that their requirements, their whims and caprices are catered to, with as much care and enthusiasm on the part of style specialists as is the desires of those of their elders.

An adult fashion trend reflected in childhood's realm is that of fabric combinations and color contrasts. An especially pleasing alliance is that of Jersey with like-colored satin. Silk or rayon crepe touched with velvet is also smart.

In the practical school dress pictured navy blue serge co-operates with very gay plaid flannel for effect. The manner in which the plaid skirt is attached to a contrasting blouse is characteristic of a styling which is very popular just now. The idea is so effectively carried out with linens and cottons as with worsteds, velvets and silks.

In advance showings such interworkings are stressed as a blue heavy linen skirt attached to a white handkerchief linen blouse, a blue sleeveless slipover of the same linen as the skirt completing the three-piece. Such cunning effects are achieved as a green pique frock with bands of orchid, yellow and blue pique at the neckline and wrists, with insets of these colors plaited into the skirt.

To the mother who makes little daughter's dresses, the idea of combining fabrics suggests a program of economy, for bargain counters always offer short-length remnants at trifling cost. Then, too, a leftover from the makings of a dress for some older member of the family, combined with a remnant bought at a bargain, have within them the possibilities of a modish frock for the girl in her early teens or younger.

An interesting development in the styling of clothes for the younger generation is the modern use of color. That is the traditional pinks, blues, navies, browns and reds are no longer adhered to, for tones and tints usually associated with adult fashions such as chartreuse green, capucine, and the dahlia shades, also many others, have found their way into the junior mode. The little jacket suit presents an excellent opportunity, in its separate blouse for color as well as fabric contrast. The satin blouse in eggshell or white is popular.

Rivers Diverted From Beds by Fields of Ice

It is a long way from present-day floods along the Mississippi river back to the great ice age, but happenings of the latter period have considerable bearing on the trials and tribulations of the valley dwellers.

Before the great fields of ice worked their way down from the north, at least two rivers, the upper Missouri and the Yellowstone, flowed northeast and emptied into Hudson bay. With the advent of the sheets of ice, however, these two rivers were forced to run to the south, and their combined waters cut the gorge now followed by the Missouri through the Dakotas.

At the same time the Red river became a huge pond called glacial Lake Agassiz, with an outlet to the Minnesota river valley. Part of the watershed of the Red river became a permanent source of water for a river flowing to the south and the original head of the Missouri river. This river is now known as the James river. With the melting of the great ice dam, the Red river resumed its normal flow to the north, but the others continued to the south.—Exchange.

Breaks Both Legs Turning Over in Bed

Winsted, Conn.—While turning over in bed at his home on the Norfolk road recently Frank B. Bowman broke a leg. He was brought to a hospital here for treatment. A few days later, while moving from one position to another in bed, he fractured the other leg. Both are now in plaster casts. Bowman has been an invalid for more than three years.

HYPNOTIC THIEF BEING HUNTED

Wanted by European Police for Many Crimes.

Montreal.—A "hypnotic robber," or possibly a pair of them, is causing concern to European police. The first instance which came to police notice occurred recently on an international express train between Paris and Warsaw. A well dressed, modest young lady got into a conversation with a fellow traveler. While the two were alone for a few moments the traveler fell unaccountably asleep. On waking he found his pocketbook and money gone. In another instance a Polish noblewoman became acquainted with a young man claiming to be a French count.

While the two were sitting in a garden the noblewoman also fell asleep suddenly and awoke to find herself robbed of jewels and money. She reported, however, a dim memory of hearing her companion's voice repeating, just as she was dropping into irresistible slumber, the familiar hypnotist's formula: "Sleep, look into my eyes; sleep!" Although this is the only instance of actual recollection of anything like hypnotism, other individuals in different places have reported falling asleep after meeting a strange young man or woman and waking later to find their valuables gone. It is suspected that some criminal with considerable knowledge of hypnotism and able to masquerade either as a man or woman has devised this method of preying upon travelers. Mental experts point out, however, that the best preventive of such robberies is publicity, for it is unlikely that any intended victim who has been forewarned and is on his guard ever can be hypnotized by a casual acquaintance, even were the stranger the most skilful hypnotist in the world.

80-Year-Old Indian Shows Race's Nerve

Los Angeles, Calif.—The traditional stoicism and hardihood of the Santacota Indians has been preserved to the very last living member of the tribe, and Esteban Folari, eighty, lies in a ward of the Santa Barbara hospital with his thigh encased in a plaster cast, but serenely happy that he was able to justify the best tradition of his race.

Esteban, last of the Santa Cotas, and last of the Santa Ynez mission Indians, lives in a hermit cabin back in the wilds of the Santa Ynez river. Four times a year, he emerges for supplies. Last week, he was riding one horse and leading another, heavily laden with supplies, up the river, when he dismounted to rest and in doing so, fell and fractured his thigh.

Unable to move, Esteban lay for three days on the rocks, suffering keenly from his injury and from exposure to an unusually hot sun by day and unusually cold weather at night. His horses wandered away. He had no water, nor food. He began to doubt his ability to hold out.

At last, came another traveler and Esteban was discovered. He was rushed to the hospital, a cast was set and the venerable Indian put to bed.

Husband Locks Wife Three Days in Icebox

Los Angeles, Calif.—If the wife gets obstreperous, put her in cold storage and let her cool off. This was the policy literally pursued by William Klug, according to the story told to Superior Judge Blake by Mrs. Rosa Klug.

According to the wife's plaint, Mr. Klug put her in a huge icebox, locked the door from the outside and left her for three days. Eventually her brother happened along and released her from the chilly prison.

The story came out when Klug filed suit for divorce. Determined that he should not gain the decree, Mrs. Klug filed a cross complaint. Apparently Judge Blake does not approve of the cold storage of wives, for he granted the chilled wife's petition.

Falls Three Stories and Gets Only Minor Bruises

Syracuse, N. Y.—George Dowling, thirty-seven, plunged head first 35 feet from the third story of the Rescue mission and lives to tell the story. It is believed he struck a ledge, turned and landed on his feet. He suffered only bruises on the left arm, shoulders and legs. All he remembers is going to bed and then waking up on the sidewalk.

AND THE LETTER FINALLY ARRIVED

A letter dated April 20, 1926, has just arrived addressed to Mrs. W. H. Randall, from Mrs. Sam Nelson of Horse Shoe Bend, Idaho.

After reading the text of the letter Mrs. Randall thought it did not sound like winter in the west, so she began to look for the dates and made this discovery.

The letter was in perfect condition and showed no signs of wear or handling and evidently had been mislaid in some office or dug up when bags were repaired, any way it has been a long time coming.

Mrs. Randall enjoyed the letter just the same.

THE RAILROAD SITUATION INTEREST

Statement of Mr. William H. Williams, Chairman of the Board and Executive Committee Wabash Railway Co.

Commenting upon the consolidation plan of the Interstate Commission Mr. Williams said:

"The creation of more than four railway systems in eastern territory is in the public interest.

"The transportation act provides for competitive routes, and for a more adequate transportation plan for the country.

"We have looked upon consolidation as something more than a mere allocation of existing trains to existing railroad corporations. In our opinion consolidation should be effective in such a manner as to create New Routes, New Gateways and a greater degree of Healthy Competition, the commission has taken a constructive view of the problem.

"The proposed Wabash system will extend from the Atlantic Seaboard to the Mississippi River and Terminal areas in the United States, including New York, Newark, Norfolk, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Des Moines, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Toledo, Milwaukee, Saint Louis, Kansas City, and Omaha, as it is strategically located. It connects the large industrial districts with the important coal fields, the Atlantic Seaboard and the several gateways to the west, it connects the lumber and steel and rubber products territory with the automobile manufacturing centers, it reaches the northwest through Chicago, and the car ferry routes across Lake Michigan and will serve the west and southwest through the Capitol gateways of St. Louis, Kansas City, Hannibal and Peoria. While the primary grain markets at Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha and Des Moines will serve a one day line route to the Atlantic Seaboard, and North Caroline, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama will have a one day line to New York, Pittsburgh, Clevelnd, Detroit and other important markets for southern products.

"It gives New England an additional route to the west as compared with the called for four party plan. It makes possible a substantial improvement in transportation service by offering a new competitive route from Toledo, Cleveland and Pittsburgh to New York an interior route for Norfolk and western coal to New England by New York and Philadelphia. It paves its way for new single line route from the east to Milwaukee. It provides for the first time a one day line route from Norfolk and western territory to the Great Lakes. It gives Baltimore a third trunk line. It offers the possibility of through passenger service from New York to Kansas City.

Christmas

By PATTEN BEARD
in The Christian Science Monitor

SOME people think that Christmas Day
Is a time to be getting whatever they may;
To hang up a stocking
Or trim up a tree
To receive all the gifts that are coming, you see.

Some others think that Christmas Day
Is the time to be generous as well as gay;
And the candle they light
With their loving gleam
Will throw wide its glow with a golden beam.

But when you are planning for Christmas Day
I hope you will choose the most happy way:
For thinking of others
Is really best fun—
So, I'd strike out the selfish old Number One.

A formula to prevent automobile windshields from collecting sleet and ice in bad eather was given in a bulletin of the Hoosier Motor club at Indianapolis Saturday. "A mixture of two ounces of glycerine, one ounce of water and one-eighth of an ounce of salt, shaken well and applied with cheese cloth, will prevent sleet and ice from sticking to the windshield and thus endangering driving," the statement said.

CHRISTMAS ZEST

CHRISTMAS zest warms the heart and makes the heart glow. Do not let any outside cynicism rob you of this glow.

Do not curl your lip and say you know the elevater man or the grocer's boy or the many others to whom you give a little Christmas joy is just looking for the present and is being polite for that reason.

Enjoy their pleasure in receiving. Enjoy, yourself, in giving. And doesn't every one enjoy presents? When you say:

"He's looking for a Christmas present," you lose half your own joy.

When you say:

"What an opportunity to add a little present to another person's Christmas," you have your own full measure of joy.

Christmas zest must not be bereft of any of its spirit.—Mary Graham Bonner.

THAT BLESSED TIME

By MYRTELLA SOUTHERLAND
in Detroit Free Press

AH, CHRISTMAS is that very blessed time,
In all the hurry and the rush of things,
When thoughts return, as though on soaring wings
Of warbling birds, to olden friends in rhyme,
In Christmas letters written in our prime,
Light-hearted youth, and age that sits and clings
To memory—or gifts through which there sings
Love's message sweet to mark the day sublime.

So I, too, welcome all the dear return
Of interest that comes my happy way
When Christmas bells and wreaths proclaim the mirth
And joy of Yuletide's hour, when grate-fires burn
To add their warmth unto the holiday,
And fling good wishes o'er the friendly earth.

AT CHRISTMAS TIME

By HARMON FORD
in The Gideon.

GIVE Christ His place at Christmas time
In Bible story, song and rhyme,
Sound forth the Christ child's praise.
Tell of His birth, the eastern star
That brought the wise men from afar
To worship at His feet.

How shepherds saw a dazzling sight,
And heard the heavenly choir at night
Sing glorifying lays.
Oh, wondrous night, oh, wondrous birth,
When God's Son, Jesus, came to earth
Death's power to defeat!

If you would know and really show
The Christmas spirit to all men,
To worship at His cradle go.
Give Christ His place, His name confess,
And from His wealth that you possess
Shall streams of blessing flow.

The Christmas Coat

By Minna Irving in Town Topics

THE earth on Christmas Eve exclaimed
To winter, with a pout,
"My old brown coat is shabby now,
In fact it's all worn out,
It's ragged here and raveled there
And torn the other way.
I ought to have a brand new one
To wear on Christmas Day."

Old winter blustered for awhile
And loudly banged the door,
And then gave in as he has done
So many times before.
And lo! when Christmas morning dawned
All gold and blue and bright,
Earth wore a truly regal coat

County Agent Stinson has been notified that there will be a one day poultry school in Auburn on Tuesday, January 7th. These poultry schools are held in counties where there is a good deal of poultry interest by the regular Poultry Specialist from the University. The school will start at 10:00 o'clock. There will be four lectures and demonstrations during the day. This is a very valuable school for folks interested in poultry feeding, housing, brooding, rearing chix, diseases and breeding for high egg production.

In our recent sale, 8 head of cows, including 2 two-year old heifers, sold for an average price of $178.35. A rather satisfactory price for grade cattle, but not too high, for they have been bred and selected for production and should return a handsome reward to their owners for the investment made.

Over 500 Miles of Concrete Highways in a Single County!

Wayne county, Michigan, (Detroit) has over 500 miles of concrete highways, with pavements from eighteen to eighty feet wide.

Nineteen years ago, this county built its first stretch of concrete road. Year after year, the Board of County Road Commissioners has continued building concrete highways, to complete a road system planned in 1906.

Many of the older pavements have been widened. Some have been torn up to make way for wider pavements at a different grade—but no concrete pavement has worn out!

No wonder Wayne County keeps on building concrete roads!

The New Year and Evolution

By W. D. Pennypacker

IT WAS more than a quarter century ago that John, a young man then, saw the present century ushered in. As a man of mature years now, he looks back to that epochal midnight with interest.

It seems strange that that New Year's eve appeared different from any other in his life. And yet, the reason is not far to seek. There could be no other such midnight in all his life.

No other century would be ringing for him with such clamorous din of bells and whistles.

• • • • • • •

As he draws his chair close to the cheerful wood fire, the smoke from which has given the room an aroma as of resinous incense, he cannot but become reminiscent. Before him are mental pictures imprinted upon his mind twenty-nine years ago—pictures which the coming and going of many winters and the joys of as many summers can never efface.

• • • • • • •

For more than a decade prior to 1900, John, his parents, and groups of younger and older folk in a small town met for a social evening and remained to welcome in the New Year. It was in those old-fashioned times when young folks and their elders frequently spent social evenings together.

As John peers into the ruddy embers he wonders if such things could be possible now. He knows that parents and children are rarely if ever seen together now at social functions and that they are seldom seen at theaters or in church in the same groups.

"But we did it, anyway," he murmurs in a tone of somewhat suppressed wonder that it could ever have been possible!

And this is as he recalls it:

• • • • • • •

The evening was cool and crisp; the sky bright and cloudless, the ground covered with snow, heavily crusted.

Consciously, he was not aware that this was different from any other night. Yet subconsciously he realized something was unusual. He might see many more New Year's eves—as, indeed, he has been privileged to do—but he would never again see the passing of an old century, with its great epochal struggles and momentous achievements, and the arrival of a new one with a clean slate upon which humanity must transcribe its record of accomplishment—what would the next one be?

White, and unmarked, the page of an unwritten book—the year—spread before him. He was to be one of the world's billions of people to have part in transcribing a new record.

The thought was impressive.

• • • • • • •

A broad grin sweeps his face, unnoticed by others in the room. The dim light and the crackling warmth of the fireside made all drowsy. Late hours and wild festivities are no part of the present life of one who had reached adult life when the bells clanged and whistles tooted, and horns blew, as 1900 was ushered in.

Children, and in some cases grandchildren are out in the wild jaxiness of the night. Every one is doing it, he thinks, but himself. A world pleasure-mad is seeing a new year's arrival amidst a gaiety and thoughtless frivol that is astounding. It is all in the way we are brought up, he admits, to himself, and is broad-minded enough to recognize that with the turning of the wheel of time a gradual but none the less effective evolution has taken place. He is conscious that the young man and young woman of today—those of the flapper age he calls it—are as different in their thoughts and mental reactions as are our present highly bred domestic animals and their prehistoric ancestors of the Stone age.

As he takes another long pull on his friendly pipe there is a glow, followed by a dense cloud of smoke. The curling rings ascending in the half light of a lessening fire give the appearance of, and, in reality, cause the full effect of dreaminess. His mind flies backward and he is again in the happy events and great accomplishments of the past.

How long John sleeps in the quiet room, while younger members of his family are out to welcome a New Year, we could not say. In the oppressive silence, the tick of the mantel clock can be heard distinctly. It's regularity would not suggest that a year is dying, nor would it suggest the joy of the coming of a New Year and the possibility of 1930 being one of earth's happiest New Years.

Save for the clock, all is silent.

Then there is the outbreak of whistles, the din of tin horns and bells. For a moment, protracted into ten minutes or more the darkness of the night is rent with distracting noises.

John rouses with a start. His pipe has fallen to the floor, and the fire is out. He is still alone.

As he had dozed away John had, in fancy, been back in the old days. He had returned to his young manhood and the big reception every one gave to the coming in of the new century. It is only another New Year now. Mileposts seem much closer than they did then. He has seen many of them—so many, in fact, that they mean little except to suggest in its widest sense, a common brotherhood of all mankind.

• • • • • • •

When Alice and Jack returned home in the wee hours the color was just coming into the eastern sky. They wished Dad a happy New Year—and they meant it sincerely—though, both were conscious that he belonged to a different epoch.

The breaking day, with an auspicious opening, was a happy one for the entire Ross family, and all were conscious that it marked more than a New Year—they sensed that it marked the beginning of another cycle in the evolution of the race.

After New Year's

After New Year's the country can settle back to a long run of hard work, with no disturbing influence until the appearance of the vacation literature.

Entitled to Cover Charge

The farmer, having provided the viands for a dinner on New Year's eve, insists on inquiring why he cannot claim a share in the cover charge.

Paul Bunton's New Year

By James Lewis Hays

"OH, IF you could only crack a whole row of nuts at once!"

"That's too much efficiency, Bub," said Uncle Charlie opening another pecan. "I ought to tell you about Paul Bunyon's New Year's resolve."

Bob and Jim and Bub shouted. Anything about the giant wood cutter!

"Well, it was on New Year's day, like this, the winter of the blue snow. He resolved he wouldn't waste a speck of time or a single motion in the year to come. And off he hiked, a mile at a step, to fetch his big blue ox and get busy."

"Was that the time he plowed the Grand Canyon?"

"No, Jim, he had to log off North Dakota that year. He harnessed the ox to his big tree shaver and made a new blade for it by breaking off the top of Iron mountain and hammering it out with his fist. Away they went, mowing trees.

"Paul noticed whenever the blue ox rested it stood swinging its tail. So he strapped a great ax to the ox's tail and stopped him, after that, by a tall tree.

"Back and forth went the tail, and whack, whack the great trees fell with a mighty swish. And they went on cutting trees and not wasting a motion.

"But the trees the ox cut down with his tail fanned him until he began to sneeze. Paul didn't think it would hurt the blue ox, but he didn't want such violent sneezes to waste. So one of his axmen carved a gigantic wooden windmill and set it in front of the ox every time they stopped.

"'Kerchoo! Kerchoo!' the blue ox would sneeze and 'whiz!' would go the windmill. Every time it whizzed it would make Paul Bunyon's sawmill cut a hundred logs."

"How could it?" Bob asked.

"Oh, easy! Paul fastened it to the sawmill by radio."

"Sure!" scorned Jim.

"But," continued Uncle Charlie, reaching for another handful of nuts,

"the sneeze got worse and the blue ox had to be put to bed. Paul lost a week's work fetching hot water bottles and porous plasters an acre square, before the ox was well. So he made his New Year's resolve over.

"He whittled a tall pine into a penholder, put in a fresh point, and wrote in letters ten feet high, in a book bigger than this house:

"'I resolve to leave well enough alone and not try to do everything at once.'"

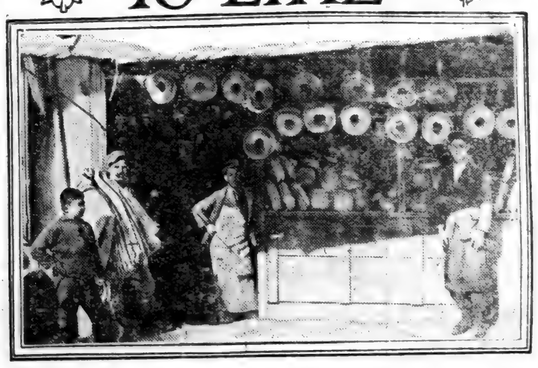
WHAT CRETE IS LIKE



A Bread Shop in Candia, Crete.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

SAIL from Piraeus, port of Athens, skirt the islands of Melos and Antimelos, of the Cyclades group, and after 15 hours of sailing the mountainous profile of Crete comes into view.

The island has area of about 3,300 square miles, being 160 miles long and varying in width from 35 to 7½ miles. But what matter 160 miles in length? They could be traversed in a few hours at most by railroad—if there were railroads. It takes days and days to cover Crete by land from one end to the other.

The more accessible sections of Crete are now covered with a network of fairly important highways, but in remote districts the traveler must use the traditional means of transportation—donkey or mule, over trails or uneven paths. And if it is necessary to adapt oneself to the fatigue and the needs of one's animals, it is also essential to take into account the aversion which every Cretan feels at the prospect of traveling at night.

The whole island is dominated by the mountains which intersect it. They include the Lasithi range in the east, with Mount Dicte; the Psiloriti, with Mount Ida near the center of the island, and to the west the White mountains, locally, and rightly, named the "Desert of Stone." These peaks rise to more than 7,000 feet and are covered with snow in winter, but in summer and early autumn large herds of sheep graze on the slopes.

After the traveler leaves these herds, and the round stone huts where the solitary shepherds live, he may wander over many trails without meeting a living soul.

Then, from a mountain path, suddenly a great plain will come into view—like that of Lasithi, formerly occupied by a lake.

On a broad, elevated pass one sometimes sees a straight line of wind mills, occasionally as many as twenty or more, each placed in a specially advantageous position to catch all the wind which the large wings require. The peasants from the villages climb up to them with their donkeys laden with grain. On the other hand, along the steep mountain slopes water mills are built in the ravines. The mills run only in winter, for during summer there is no rain; hence no water.

Ancient Altars in Grottoes.

While Crete has an extremely heavy rainfall, it is limited to the wet season, which commences in October or November. The water accumulates and rushes down the mountains in violent torrents; it penetrates the soil and circulates through a vast network of limestone grottoes. It was in these grottoes, now a fairyland of stalactites and stalagmites, that the first inhabitants of the island established the worship of their gods. Today one finds among the rocks the altars and paraphernalia of ancient rites.

Some of these grottoes are veritable pits, into which one descends with the aid of ropes. One readily appreciates the impression they must have produced on the imagination of the men of other days, when one notes the respectful awe they still command. The natives in their folklore still people these caves with monstrous men and animals.

Villages dot the borders of the Cretan plains, and the inhabitants come to their doors and smilingly invite the passer-by to enter.

Occasionally one meets a peasant on his way to the village, carrying on his head a basket overflowing with grapes. He will stop, select the most beautiful cluster, and offer them to the stranger with touching simplicity.

In regions which are less protected from the elements, the locust tree grows, but it is bent and gnarled by its battle with the violent north wind. There are vineyards on the hillsides and vegetables grow in the river beds which are dry in summer, or on the thin layers of fertile soil which cover the stone of some of the seashore plains. Irrigation is practiced intelligently; large windmills raise the water, or norias grind away as the water is raised pail by pail from wells.

Canea and Candia.

Canea, surrounded by Venetian ramparts, is the capital of Crete; it is situated in the western part of the island.

Candia, farther to the east and also on the northern shore, is the only other city of commercial importance. During the Venetian occupation of the island this stronghold was known as Megalo Castro (Great Fortress); but many centuries before the Venetians held sway in Crete and before the Saracens left their impress, the inhabitants of the island had established a trading station at this point, to judge from the fragments of cut stone discovered in the sea near the shore.

Today Candia is nearing the 40,000 population mark. Its white suburbs extend far beyond the old fortifications. A few years ago an English engineer was commissioned to reorganize the port. The work is being pursued with due regard to the historic value of the old fortifications.

The southern coast of Crete has few safe anchorages and most of the trade is handled by sailing craft and motor boats. Large ships cannot approach the wharfs of the small harbors, but are obliged to remain some distance offshore. By means of a crane, merchandise is unloaded into a chique, which then approaches the beach as closely as possible. There naked men, standing in water up to their shoulders and with pads on their heads, seize the various objects and carry them ashore. As soon as the ground swell rises, work must stop.

Often at night, if the sea is rough, a ship will approach the shore, blow its whistle, and with the aid of a megaphone a conversation will follow between vessel and port official. If the load offered is unimportant, the ship pursues its course without stopping.

These villages by the sea are very isolated; in daylight they are hardly visible and at night not at all, as no light marks them. They are as if "thrown into the sea" by the mountain, which bars their access to the interior. They are at the mercy of heavy southern storms, which all but deprive them of any outside communication.

An account of Crete would not be complete if we did not describe the means of locomotion to travelers. There is but one railroad in Crete and it is three miles long. It was built in recent years for the transportation of stone from a nearby quarry to the harbor of Candia. The locomotives, christened Minos, Ariadne, and Theseus, in honor of mythological characters that have played prominent roles in the legendary history of the island, are justly admired by the entire population.

Many Motor Cars There.

Road construction has promoted the use of the automobile, but even where there are no roads a motor car is frequently seen. What with the mire of the mule paths, the stones, the brush, and the fields, one traveling by automobile never knows when or if he will reach his destination, although his car carries the inscription in large letters: "Express."

He who leaves Candia in the autumn for a trip across the island sees spread before him large expanses of yellow and silvery green, with a few lines of austere black; these are the vineyards mixed in with the olive trees, while a few cypresses stand solitary or in a line.

This vista continues even after he begins to climb in order to reach the desert interior of Crete, for the vineyards and their attendant olive trees grow to a great elevation. Though they space out the farther one gets from the plain, nevertheless they remain equally luxuriant. They creep into small hollows or cluster on the very steep slopes—sometimes they give the impression that they are going to slide off into space—while pretty vine arbors shade the streets of mountain villages.

Raisins play an important part in the economic life of Crete. In the large cities and at the ports one may see in the rather dark factories the different processes the raisins undergo. In Sitia, in eastern Crete, one may find upon the wharves immense golden areas of fruit drying in the sun before being packed in cases for shipment abroad. Fresh grapes are exported to Greece and to Egypt.

Crete takes an important place among olive-oil producing countries. The oil is extracted in primitive presses by the peasants and on a larger scale in factories. Much of the table oil is consumed in America.

The tobacco plantations of Crete have made great strides in recent years, as a direct result of one of the most significant events of the eastern Mediterranean—the exchange of nationals between Greece and Turkey following the Treaty of Lausanne. Its patriation brought to the island many experienced tobacco growers from Asia Minor.

POULTRY

BAMBOOZLE HENS BY USING LIGHTS

Lengthening Day Must Be Done Carefully to Pay.

Being notoriously simple-minded, the hen can readily be bamboozled by the use of electric lights, into working 14 hours a day during the winter. But the trick is a good one only when it works, and the careless or ignorant user of lights can do his flock more damage than the extra eggs will pay for. The theory of the thing is that having more light, the hen will eat more food, which will enable her to lay more eggs.

A series of cautions for the user of lights in the poultry house, is found on the Ohio State poultry calendar. They are as follows:

1. Grade and pen pullets according to age, condition, and laying qualities, so that each group may be properly handled.

2. Excessive fall production makes it hard to keep the flock in heavy production during the winter.

3. Don't use lights to produce more than a 14-hour day. Excessive use of lights means overproduction, followed by a slump.

4. To avoid a spring molt, discontinue lights slowly in the spring.

5. Use lights on breeders only after January 1 to 15, in order to help them back into production.

6. Don't crowd production over 60 per cent, otherwise the flock will become thin and molt.

7. Be regular in management and the use of lights.

8. Feed grain liberally when using lights.

9. Always have feed and water available when lights are on.

10. Do not turn lights off too early in the spring.

11. Do not stop feeding early and late in the day when lights are finally eliminated.

Early Hatched Pullets Best for Winter Eggs

Where eggs in winter are wanted the early hatched pullet is, without doubt, the one to depend upon. Yearling hens and those older ones are very rarely good producers during November and December.

They are uncertain even in January and February and really do not begin to lay well until March. Where the egg production falls below 15 per cent during the winter months, one is not making much profit.

The age at which most pullets begin laying is from six to seven months; some lay at four and one-half to five months, and others not until eight or nine months of age.

This means that if a 50 per cent egg yield is wanted in November, the pullets should be hatched during March or April; May hatched pullets will lay a little, but, as a rule, not 40 or more per cent daily.

Vigor and Vitality of Parent Stock Weighty

Successful hatching of eggs in incubators depends fully as much on the vigor and vitality of the parent stock and the care of the eggs before being put into the incubator as upon the incubator itself.

Successful hatches can be expected only when the birds in the pens from which the eggs come are enjoying an abundant health.

Poor hatches are probably caused more frequently by poor breeding stock than by poor incubators.

Poultry Facts

Hens pay for warming their drink.

• • •

The largest breed of chickens raised in the United States is said to be the Jersey black giant.

• • •

Build the straw loft straight across. There should be 12 to 18 inches of straw after it has settled.

• • •

Watch the old hens in your poultry flock. They are dangerous spreaders of poultry tuberculosis.

Heating the laying houses is becoming a more frequent practice. If heat is properly applied and used with discretion, it should prove beneficial.

• • •

Liquid, condensed or dried skim milk or buttermilk is valuable for winter feeding. Milk has a tonic effect, whets the appetite for other feeds and serves as a partial substitute for green feed.

• • •

A straw loft just high enough to keep you from using swear words will make a lot of difference in keeping the poultry house warm and dry.

• • •

Producers have had experience in the past where their hens did better when confined to the houses than when they were given range.

• • •

Over one-half of the total egg crop for the year is produced during the four months of March, April, May and June, according to United States Department of Agriculture statistics.

Soy Beans Now Important Crop

Thrives on Soils Too Acid for Sweet or Red Clover or Alfalfa.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In the last few years soy beans have become important as a hay and seed crop in the eastern half of the United States. As the acreage increased and new uses were found for the crop, the machinery for harvesting the seed has been developed to high efficiency. In the principal grain producing sections the grain binder, the self-rake reaper, and the combine are now used for harvesting the seed. In a publication just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, Farmers' Bulletin 1605-F, "Soy Bean Hay and Seed Production," the story of the rapid rise of the soy bean to its present place in American agriculture is traced, and suggestions are made as to the use of the crop.

Harvesting Crop.

Soy bean hay should be thoroughly cured before being stacked, housed, or baled, as there is danger of molding when it is stored or baled too green or too soon after a rain. Soy bean hay is but little more difficult to cure than hay from other legumes, and may be handled successfully by about the same methods. The crop is at its best for hay when the seeds are about half developed.

The crop will do well on many soils. It will grow well on soils too acid for red clover, sweet clover, or alfalfa. It is excellent as a summer catch crop following early crops, or for fields not in the regular rotation.

Cutting for Hay.

The publication discusses the time and methods of cutting for hay and gives the best methods of curing the hay; and as to the seed, it discusses time of harvesting, method of harvesting, threshing, and storage.

Tentative United States standards have been prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture for use in the marketing of soy bean and soy bean mixed hay, and standards have been prepared for grading the beans.

Soy beans which are to be stored as seed should be thoroughly dry when thrashed. After thrashing, the beans should be watched carefully to avoid heating and molding. Heating is especially likely to occur if the seed is bulked in large quantities in a bin or in a poorly ventilated room. Soy beans are seldom attacked by weevils or the other insects which attack most other beans and peas.

The bulletin may be obtained free from the office of information, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., as long as the supply available for free distribution lasts.

Important Pointers on Pruning Young Trees

The growth and fruiting habits of the cherry and plum lend themselves readily to the same general principles of pruning as are practiced in the case of apples and pears. On account of their smaller size and habit of growth, the open head system of training and pruning is usually found best. With these fruits, the most important point, is the establishment of the proper frame work or scaffold branches in the young trees. Pruning after the trees come into bearing should be light and consist mainly of thinning out thick clusters to admit the proper amount of sunlight needed for the development of well colored fruit.

Improvement Societies Found in Many States

Crop improvement associations now operating in thirty states and a number of Canadian provinces, serving as a connecting link between experiment stations and individual farmers, have done much to help farmers reap the benefits of experiment station work. For example, an improved variety of oats developed by the Kansas station, and known as Kanota, yielding from five to ten bushels per acre more than commonly grown varieties, is now the leading variety of oats grown in that state. Seed of this variety was first distributed by the station to a few farmers in 1921.

San Jose Scale

Practically all orchard fruits are attacked by the San Jose scale and many of the ornamental trees and shrubs are also attacked. As far as the fruit trees are concerned, the San Jose scale attacks the trunks, limbs, foliage and fruit. On the older parts of the tree, especially in case of a severe infestation, the appearance is that of an ashy gray color.

When the hand is rubbed briskly over the scales, a greasy appearance is a result of the mashing of the insects underneath the scales.

Corn Fertilizer

For corn on well drained black prairie loam soils use superphosphate in the hill or drill at rates of from 90 to 100 pounds per acre where hill dropped, or up to 200 pounds per acre where drilled. The higher colored upland soils need a mixed fertilizer such as the 4-16-4, since it starts the crop off a little more quickly in the spring when the soil is cold. This mixture should be applied at rates of from 75 to 100 pounds per acre where hill dropped.

Good Time to Blast Stumps of Old Trees

Wet Soil Is Ideal for Explosives to Brace On.

Now is a good time to blast stumps, according to B. B. Robb of the New York State College of Agriculture. Wet soil is ideal for the explosive to brace against to push out the stumps.

Handle the blasting caps with care, Professor Robb warns, for a blasting cap explodes with great force and anyone near it is almost sure to be hurt. Electric blasting caps are generally considered better than caps and fuse to detonate dynamite for blasting stumps and ditches because fewer misfires occur. Either is dangerous when carelessly handled as they are more sensitive than the dynamite itself. Above all do not leave blasting caps of any kind around where children can pick them up.

Professor Robb called attention to the appeal which the Institute of Makers of Explosives is making to protect children from blasting caps. This organization estimates that approximately 500 children are crippled in the United States each year from playing with blasting caps which they have picked up in the vicinity of mines, quarries, or in the field where agricultural blasting has been done. In March, April, and May the number of these accidents tends to increase and this increase continues through the summer months. It is supposed that this occurs because children play out of doors more in good weather and also because more blasting is done in these months.

Dwarf Fruit Trees Will Occupy Very Little Room

On an area 67 by 76 feet, George Hunt, McHenry county, Ill., has 70 fruit trees. These include apples, pears, plums and cherries, of which he has more than 50 varieties.

Most of the trees are of dwarf varieties, else they could not stand so near to one another, writes Frank M. Chase, in the Farm Journal. The apple trees are set six feet apart and the pear trees five. Even then, small fruits—currants, gooseberries, raspberries and strawberries—and many vegetables are grown between the rows of trees.

Besides producing fruit, some of the trees also serve an ornamental purpose. Across one end of the little orchard and garden is a cordon consisting of 24 of the apple, pear and plum trees. The trees in this cordon, which is about seven feet high, are five years old. The cordon is supported by wires strung on steel posts. The branches of four apple and two pear trees also have been arranged to form a low, two-armed cordon.

From one of the dwarf apple trees—a Waggoner not more than seven years old and standing no higher than a man—Mr. Hunt one season picked three pecks of fruit. Hunt also has had notable success with his small fruits, raising gooseberries three and one-half inches in circumference, and red raspberries, 14 of which laid side by side, have measured a foot.

Time to Open Silo

When silage is allowed to settle and form a crust or decomposed mat on the top, it makes little difference what time it be opened, for very little spoiling goes on after the cap is once formed. To open such silos the spoiled material on top should be consigned to the manure pile. It is advisable to put it somewhere away from the stock. Not that it is poison, but it is of little value as food and might cause digestional troubles.

Agricultural Notes

Plant white or yellow pine on thin, rough land.

• • •

Paint and be ahead of the elements. Remember, "Save the surface and you save all."

• • •

A good farm record book accurately kept will enable a farmer to know every angle of his business.

When new farm or garden problems present themselves, do not forget that the county agent will help you solve them.

A warmed toolhouse starts the good husbandman on next year's farm tasks by giving him a chance to put all implements in order.

Greenhouse men are starting the early cabbage plants. They can regulate their sowings better if you will give them your order now.

• • •

Erosion is doing more than the removal of farm crops to reduce the fertility of soils. Sloping lands should be terraced to help check soil erosion.

Asparagus heads the list of vegetables for earliness. This vegetable is growing rapidly in popularity, the average having increased four times what it was in 1923.

• • •

Orderly marketing results from orderly production. Orderly production is secured by studying market needs and production trends, and planning production in accordance with them.

• • •

Drainage does more than take water off the land; it gives ventilation, helps tillage, and lengthens the season. Drainage makes a transformation where it is needed.

Athletes of Old Times Never Out of Training

In comparing athletic feats of today with those of ancient times, it must be kept in view that the men of the old days did not spend their days in factories, or over desks, and take homeopathic doses of exercise in a Y. M. C. A. gym at nights. Their whole lives were spent in exercises which fitted them for sterner work on the field of battle. Exercises and warlike sports were their A B C, first to eighth grade, high school and college.

About fifty years ago, in a small town called Jedburgh, in the south of Scotland, there lived a man named Dan Wight. This man was a noted runner and was the first man to be called "The Flying Scotsman." At one time he was the champion sprinter of Great Britain. It is, however, his unofficial record which is of greatest interest. He is credited locally with having run 300 yards in 30 seconds.

The writer once saw him give another runner about two-thirds the length of the course, and if the race had been one stride longer Dan would have won. It is of interest to speculate on the speed Dan attained while he was cutting down his competitor's start.

CO-OPERATION

Individual effort to make the town a better place is good. It may accomplish much if properly directed. But if all the units of industry, business, religion, education, and society are harnessed together and set to work for the good of the community, the total result will be a revelation of the power of co-operation.

St. Joe and Spencerville is climbing up toward the ideal or sliding back into the rut according as it possesses or lacks community co-operation.

You as an individual have power to accomplish almost anything you set out to accomplish. What a man wills to do, that he can do. Just so, your town, as a town, can accomplish anything it sets out to accomplish. Organized efforts in St. Joe and Spencerville will bring about practically any condition we set out to develop.

To increase our business and general welfare, it is necessary first to reduce the amount of trade going to outside sources.

Legally, anyone can spend his money where he prefers, but nevertheless there IS an obligation to spend it at HOME, for we all want St. Joe and Spencerville to continue in existence, we all want them to prosper in such ways as will offer better service and greater opportunities to the citizens. Are YOU co-operating in the advancement of St. Joe's and Spencerville's prosperity?

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JANUARY 2, 1930 | NUMBER 1

County Goes on Record For Road

Commissioners Agree to Pay One-third of Cost of Placing "Black Top" on Hamilton-Fort Wayne Highway

The DeKalb county commissioners Monday took action to assure the designation of the road running from the Leo-Fort Wayne road to Hamilton as a part of the state highway system.

Members of the board and others interested have been negotiating with the state commission relative to this route and the commission countered with a proposition to take the road over providing the county would pay one-third of the cost of constructing it as a black top road "at such time as the commission may determine to make the improvement."

The agreement was signed by Nicholas Funk and Charles G. Potter, constituting a majority of the board. The third member, Edward S. Kelham, expressed himself as favorable to the state adding the road to its system, but said he had no notice that such a proposition would be made and wanted more time to give it consideration. He asked that action be deferred until next Saturday.

The road runs north through Spencerville, St. Joe and Butler to the Steuben county line at Hamilton, the distance being twenty miles. The state wants to continue the route to road 20, about eight miles beyond Hamilton, and it is understood a similar proposition is being made to Steuben county with reference to improving the highway. The cost of putting on the black top runs from $8,500 to $15,000 a mile, according to the type of construction and the grade.

The agreement signed by Mr. Funk and Mr. Potter does not state when the road would be taken over or when the improvement to it would be made, but it is understood the highway will be added to the state system the first of January.

HOLIDAY MAIL EXTREMELY HEAVY

Postaster A. M. Baker reports the Christmas work at the local post office, heavy this year, and more complicated than last year, on account of congested mail traffic due to snow blockades.

During the few days rush 283 bags of mail were received. Out of hundreds of packages, 75 were insured. Besides Money Orders, Registers and C. O. D. thousands of cards and greetings were handled.

The Post Office force expresses their heartiest appreciation to the public for the splendid co-operation shown them during the season's rush.

AIDS IN STARTING A COLD MOTOR

Indianapolis, Indiana, Dec. 31. —During the recent sub-zero blast which swept over the greater part of the country, many thousands of automobiles could not be started after being parked in the open. The Service department of the Hoosier State Auto Association offers the following aids to starting in frigid temperatures:

1. Ask the agency of your car or a reliable garage to place the lightest lubricants, compatible with safe lubrication, in the crank case and gear box.

2. Before stepping on the starter, see to it that the gear shift is in neutral and depress the clutch pedal. Open the hand feed throttle one-quarter of the way or more.

3. Step on the starter and use the choke sparingly.

4. If the starter cannot spin the motor set the spark at full retard and pull sharply upward with the crank. This quick motion will frequently start motors when the starter fails.

5. When it is expected that the car will remain parked in the open for a long period, it is wise, when shutting the motor off, to speed it slightly and then shut off the ignition and choke it at the same time. This procedure causes a gasoline vapor to be present in the cylinders when the motor is next started. This practice should be used infrequently, however, as the gasoline drawn into the cylinders tends to seep past the pistons into the crank case, where it dilutes the oil. The oil should be changed frequently if this trick is resorted to repeatedly.

6. The igmtion system and carburetor adjustment must be correct in order to enjoy easy starting.

A Hopeful New Year Ahead

Adults and Children End Holiday Seasons With Various Thoughts

Santa Claus has made his annual visit to St. Joe, filled the stockings of hundreds of youngsters and then scurried back to his legendary home at the North Pole. The kiddies whose hearts he made leap with joy and surprise on Christmas morning are picturing his return as a date so far away in the distant future that it is almost impossible for them to make accurate calculations.

To the parents of those youngsters it is just another mile post along the road of time, and as one after another of them is passed, the next succeeding one seems just a wee bit closer, until after so long a time, this annual event which means so much to the children comes around one after another almost without warning.

Those crisp brightly painted tin soldiers who peeped over the top of the stocking on Christmas morning last week have already begun to lose their newness with bits of paint knocked off here and there. Some of the games have been played over and over so many, many times that they have lost their charm and have been tucked away until the youngsters of the home take a new notion to play with them again.

Dolly has been lugged around in the neighborhood from one home to another and placed on display until her crisp new frock is beginning to look just a little bedraggled, and soon she will be patted to sleep in her crib until weeks from now her little mother thinks it time to devote a little more attention to her. The fruit and candy has all gone where it properly should, and Christmas to the kiddies now is just a memory, and not one of exultant anticipation.

The older folks of the family got a lot of pleasure planning the surprises for the youngsters. Each in turn was remembered by the others of the household. No one was forgotten, not even the cook, the yard boy or the chauffeur. Of course some of the gifts were of the expensive kind, jewelry, fur coats, automobiles and the like which went to different members of the families, but for the most part the usual record breaking sale of handkerchiefs, sox, neckties, neck scorfs, shirts and the like are reported by the merchants here about. This is evidence conclusive that the different members of the various households of St. Joe have been supplied for some months to come with the necessities in this direction.

Between friends there was the usual exchange of greeting missives of one kind or another, and of course, the business houses remembered their customers with a letter, a card or a calendar conveying the holiday spirit. These with hundreds of parcels with the instructions on the outside: "Not to be opened until Christmas," kept the postal clerks busy for some days prior to the great event.

All of this bustle and hustle for the weeks before Christmas, and then the last minute purchases for those who were unintentionally overlooked, selecting gifts for this one and that is all in commemoration of the birthday of one who Christianity wishes the world to know was the greatest gift to all mankind in the history of the world.

The great event has passed, home coming of distant relatives is at an end, and some have already returned, while others will leave shortly, and within a few days now St. Joe will drop back into normal once again and look forward with an eye for greater activities and achievements during the year of 1930.

The new year follows close upon the heels of Christmas, and in fact is part of the holiday season. Following the spirit of joy and pleasure many will look soberly to the future and in their minds will try and fathom what the in-coming year holds in store. For some it will be the advent perhaps of greater activities which will net handsome rewards. For others it will hold disappointments.

Whatever it holds for St. Joe it is just another link in the chain which connects the past with the future, and which goes to make up the life story of each one here. If it be a year of success, for some, let those who are so fortunate lend a helping hand to their less fortunate neighbors. Forget the selfish interest which narrows the individual and makes him a hindrance rather than a help to his community.

Build with your neighbors for a bigger and better St. Joe and while the reward may not take the form of accumulated wealth, in cash, it will be something of far greater value, and something which will bring from the lips of those who knew you words of praise and commendation and build for you a monument which will go down in the years to follow.

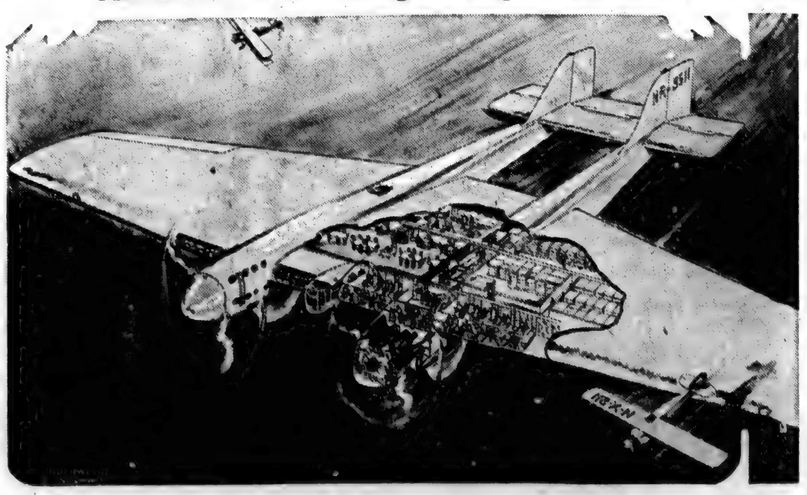
America to Have Largest Airplanes in World



A drawing of what will be one of a fleet of the four largest airplanes in the world, to be completed by the end of 1930 at a cost of $2,000,000 by the General Development company of Connecticut, under the guidance of Dr. William Whitney Christmas, inventor of the aileron balancing system used on all airplanes. The huge ships are "flying wings" with a wing spread of 262 feet, overall height of 31½ feet, length of 138 feet and gross weight of 72.5 tons. Each plane will have eight engines, each over 1,000 horse power in two units of four, and is designed to carry 100 passengers luxuriously—sleeping, eating and entertainment accomodations—and a crew of 17. The maximum capacity under Department of Commerce regulations will be 206 passengers.

THE CHILDHOOD OF JESUS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 1:1-2:23 (Print Matt. 2:10-23).

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt call His name Jesus for He shall save His people from their sins.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Care of Jesus When a Child.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Care of Jesus When a Child.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How the Child-King Was Received.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Childhood of the Saviour-King.

The central theme of Matthew is Jesus Christ the King, the fulfiller of the Messianic hope. In harmony with this pre-eminent theme, Matthew first deals with the all important question of His genealogy, for His right to occupy the throne of David must be established.

The royal covenant was made to David (II Sam. 7:8-16, cf. Acts 2:30-32). In harmony with this, the first verse of Matthew's record constitutes a key to the book.

I. The Birth of Jesus, the King (1:18-25).

1. The Saviour was to be the seed of a woman (Gen. 3:15), the son of a virgin (Is. 7:14). This was fulfilled in the birth of Jesus. The genealogy (Matt. 1:1-17) shows His legal right to the throne, but something more is required in order to be the Saviour from sin. He must be both human and divine (Is. 9:7). The Saviour was begotten by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, thus becoming Immanuel, which in its fullness means, "God with us, God for us, and God in us."

II. The Childhood of Jesus, the King (2:1-23).

1. Wise men from the East seeking Israel's King (vv. 1, 2).

The King's reception was most heartless. His own nation received Him not. His advent was heralded by a star which guided men of a foreign nation to seek and worship Him, pouring out their gifts to Him. These men were Persian or Arabian astrologers—students of the stars. Their attention was attracted by the appearance of an unusual star. Through the influence of the Jews who remained in Chaldea, or the direct influence of Daniel extending to this time, they had become acquainted with Israel's hope as to the Messiah.

2. Herod seeking to kill the King (vv. 3-8; 16-18).

The news brought by the wise men struck terror to Herod's heart. He was not alone in this, for all Jerusalem was troubled with him. The news ought to have brought joy, but a glimpse at the social customs in and about Jerusalem of that day enables us to understand why this news brought uneasiness to the people. They were living in the greatest luxury. Fine dress, sumptuous feasts, fine houses and other luxuries led to gross immoralities. This is why Herod and Jerusalem were troubled. A Saviour who would save them from their sins was not wanted. Their desire was to continue in them. Herod demanded of the priests and scribes information as to where Christ should be born. The fact that they were able to tell him so promptly shows that they had a technical knowledge of the Scriptures, but not a heart for the Saviour set forth therein. We face similar conditions today. This all occurred in Jerusalem, the city of the King, the place of all places where He should have been welcome. When the wise men returned to their country by another way, Herod slew all the male children two years of age and under in Bethlehem and its coasts.

3. The King found by the wise men (vv. 9-12).

The wise men having obtained the desired information, started immediately to find the King. As soon as they left the city, the star as it guided them in the East, appeared again to lead them on. Not that it had disappeared from the sky, but the dwellings of the city no doubt shut out the sight of it. Frequently, spiritual vision is obscured by the things of this world.

4. The King protected (vv. 13-23).

(1) Flight to Egypt (vv. 13-15).

To escape Herod's wicked aim, God directed Joseph to take Mary and the child Jesus and flee to Egypt. In obedience to the heavenly vision, he went and remained there till Herod's death.

(2) Return to Nazareth (vv. 19-23).

Upon the death of Herod, the angel of the Lord directed Joseph to take Jesus and His mother and go into the land of Israel. By divine direction, he returned to Galilee and dwelt at Nazareth.

CHILDREN LIKE THEIR OWN LITTLE TABLE

Small Table Especially for Youngsters.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A small table especially for their use is an essential part of the household furnishing where there are children. Such a table can be used both for the children's meals and as a place to play when they are indoors. To go with it there should be small sturdy chairs, comfortable for the knees when the children are seated at the table, of the right height to permit them to sit with their feet squarely on the floor, and of just the right shape in the seat and back to help them maintain a good posture. Sometimes a plain, strong table already in the house can be cut down to answer the purpose. If need be, a little paint or enamel will brighten it up and make it easier to keep clean. Little children at times spill their food. Since this must be accepted as cheerfully as possible during the period when they are learning to feed themselves, the table and floor should be washable.

When children eat apart from the adults there are fewer distractions. The fact that grownups sometimes have different foods from those served the children passes unnoticed. If there is a maid or some one else who can serve the children quietly and efficiently apart from the family, they may have their meals at the family meal hours, but most mothers find it more convenient and less distracting to the children to give them their meals about half an hour before the other members of the household. The important thing, says the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, is that the children's meals should come at regular time, with well-spaced intervals, and with due regard for the schedule for nap, bath, exercise, and bedtime.

Part of the mother's responsibility is to see that the food offered the children looks appetizing, is well cooked, and served at a suitable temperature. A burnt tongue from food that is too hot is an unfortunate accident, and foods that are cold when they should be eaten hot are equally unsatisfactory for making a meal a success. Whether the mother cooks the child's food personally, or has some one else do it, she should make certain that every dish on the menu is properly prepared and served. Lumpy cereal, scorched cocoa, or stringy vegetables, may be the starting point of a food dislike, even in a very young child. Food should never be used as a carrier of medicine, as when castor oil is given in orange juice. Orange juice is so necessary in the child's daily diet that the enjoyment of it should not be spoiled. Make the setting of each meal attractive, the food good to look at and to eat, and the child will have a good appetite and good digestion.

PROPER CARE OF UNCOOKED MEAT

Ready Medium for Development of Harmful Bacteria.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The proper care of uncooked meat in the home during the time between its delivery and its preparation for the table is most important. Uncooked meat is a ready medium for the development of bacteria that cause spoilage and are dangerous to health. As the temperature increases, the bacteria increase in greater proportion, and spoilage is hastened. Therefore, the colder the butter—a temperature of 47 degrees Fahrenheit or below is of real value. It is not always possible to detect spoilage in meat by its odor or taste, hence it is best to be on the safe side and store the meat in the coldest part of a good refrigerator.

Unwrap the meat as soon as it is delivered, says the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. Tests are now being carried on indicating that uncooked meat in a closed container has a more advanced rate of spoilage than meat on an uncovered dish. The top of the meat may be protected from possible dropping of food from the shelves above by having loose piece of oiled paper laid over it. Set the platter with the meat on it in the coldest part of the refrigerator, previously determined by means of a thermometer. The coldest spot is that reached first by cold air currents descending from the melting ice, or from the unit in the mechanical refrigerator. This varies with the design of the box and with the location of the cold air duct.

Stuffed Plum Salad

A salad that may be made with any large plums that are firm enough to admit of handling are good for this salad. Wash and wipe the fruit and cut in halves lengthwise. Remove the stones and fill the cavities with cream cheese which has been blended with french dressing. Arrange on lettuce leaves, allowing two halves for each serving. Insert three pecans or other nut meats in each plum half and serve with [illegible] salad dressing.

"ICE WELL" A GOOD AS REFRIGERATOR

Cooling System Made From Hole in Ground.

On hot sultry days next summer the farmer and his family will be chasing the butter around the dish with a spoon unless some sort of refrigeration system has been installed on the farm.

Where the usual cooling systems are too expensive or otherwise impracticable the "ice well" may solve the problem, especially on farms in the North. This unique cooling system is described briefly as a "hole in the ground in which a large solid cake of ice is formed by running in a small quantity of water daily during freezing weather." A small house over the pit serves as a milk house through the summer. Cans of milk and cream are lowered to the ice through a trapdoor in the floor.

Dairy officials of the United States Department of Agriculture constructed and tested an ice well at the department's dairy field experiment station at Mandan, N. Dak., last season and report highly satisfactory results for that region. Freezing was started in January. By the end of February there was a block of ice 8 feet square by 6½ feet deep. Meat, fruit, and vegetables, as well as milk and cream, kept perfectly. Cream was kept in a perfectly sweet condition for 14 days during July, the hottest part of the summer. The ice lasted until well into October.

The ice-well method has been used to some extent in Canada. The southern limit of its adaptability in the United States has not been determined as yet.

Whole Cooked Chicken in Cans Now on Market

A whole cooked chicken in a tin can is a new thing in the marketing of poultry products that has recently been brought to the attention of the public, says the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture. The birds are inspected for wholesomeness before cooking, by bureau representatives operating under a nation-wide inspection service for the quality and condition of dairy and poultry products. If the consumer prefers to do his own cooking, he may buy a bird that has been dressed, drawn, and hard-chilled at the poultry plant and marketed in individual containers under government inspection.

Attractive Outlook

Is the outlook from your kitchen windows pleasant? If not, can you improve it? Cleaning up the back yard will often help, and a hedge or a trellis of vines can sometimes be used to screen undesirable features. Also, trim walks of concrete or some other permanent material, and well-seeded lawn about the kitchen door keep much dust and mud from being carried indoors, the United States Department of Agriculture suggests.

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, is motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has affected Mr. Tolliver's eyes to the point of threatened blindness. Marjory wins the beauty prize, $50.00. She gives the money to her father to consult Chicago specialists. Mr. Tolliver leaves for Chicago with Miriam. Ginger meets Alexander Murdock. Mr. Tolliver returns, the doctors giving him little hope. Ginger gets an idea for a "Parsonage Home for the Blind" and solicits funds.

It was she who announced the early arrival of Horace Langley. Mopping his brow, she said he was, and clinging like grim death to the arm of Eddy Jackson, who laughed at him. Much later, with the final announcement that the other bridesmaids were on hand, she dispatched the twins, in pastel pink and yellow, to join the springtime bevy of orange, green mauve and rose in the primary department.

Then she led her father down the stairs to the living room, where he was to wait for Helen.

"All the who's who are there," she proclaimed blithely, "and all the boodlums are parked."

She ran up to her sister's room, and gave a last tender touch to the white veil. "Oh, Helen," she whispered. Helen took her in her arms and the two girls wept together. After all, Ginger was Helen's baby, had been Helen's from the moment when, returning from the little cemetery on the hill where her mother was laid away in flowers and snow, she ran to the upstairs room of that other old parsonage to answer the pleading wail of the orphaned baby.

"You—you mustn't," said Ginger stoutly, winking away her tears. "You'll spoil your looks. Helen—I wish father could see you. Now, don't cry. I'm going right down."

She smiled bravely, tearfully, at her sister, unfailing refuge of sixteen years, now leaving her, and ran down the stairs.

"Tell him to wait for me just a minute. I am coming at once," Helen called after her."

Ginger went to her father. "Father," she said, "I must go now. Helen said for you to wait here for her just a minute—I think she's going to pray, father, she looks just like praying. Oh, father, she is beautiful. She looks like a picture of a Madonna with all kinds of secret happy thoughts in her heart that nobody else knows anything about. Just wait, darling, she is coming."

And Ginger tripped daintily down the flagstone path like a floating blue cloud in her airy gown.

In the living room Mr. Tolliver, accustomed to patience by weeks of blindness, waited quietly. But Helen, in the room she shared with Ginger, was not praying. Helen was not a sentimental girl, but one of deep, fine feeling, much of which centered around the baby sister whom she had so long held as her especial charge. Helen was not going away brusquely to happy marriage without a final tender word and gesture for the child who would come home lonely in her absence. She had written Ginger a letter—written it the night before her marriage, when girls may well be excused if their every thought is for themselves and their lovers and their hopes. Helen's were for her youngest sister. It was for that purpose that she denied herself to Horace, and to the girls, shutting herself up for hours behind a locked door, to write to Ginger Ella telling her how much she loved her, how much she had enjoyed the years of caring for her, how much she hoped for her future. Not a flowery letter, no literary work of art, but one that came from Helen's heart.

With this letter, she was going to leave for Ginger a precious thing, the little diamond ring that had been their mother's engagement ring. It had been given to Helen, at her mother's death, had been worn by her in sacred remembrance for sixteen years, but now, with the hand of her own betrothal upon her head, and soon to be enforced by the wedding circlet, she would pass this treasure on to Ginger. She had intended to leave her farewell message on the dressing table of the room they had occupied together, but now, upon sudden impulse, thinking of Ginger, she knew in a flash of revelation what the girl would do upon her return. She would fly straight up the wabbly ladder to her private sanctuary in the attic, where, alone with her loneliness, she would weep out her heart to exhaustion, and fall asleep.

Helen smiled to herself with quivering lips. "The darling," she whispered, and then, mischievously, but with determination, she carefully draped her veil about her shoulders, ran down the corridor, set Ginger's ladder under the trapdoor, and climbed round by round, pushing open the trapdoor above her. In the attic she drew herself up, crossed the dusty beams, and stood beside Ginger's tidy little table desk. Her sympathetic eyes noted the pads of paper, the well-sharpened pencils, the little old doll's trunk, the pigeon-hole of letters.

"Oh, Ginger, my darling," she whispered, and wept again for leaving her. But she wiped away the tears, laid her letter in its sealed envelope, "My Ginger," on the table, with the ring in a velvet box beside it.

* * * * * *

The bride in stately white and escorted by a fairy-like vision in dainty blue frills, floated along the familiar old path across the velvety lawn. A low murmur of admiration drifted down the walk, and Helen, smiling, lifted a hand to her townsfolk in friendly greeting. Ginger, leaving the bride at the door of the primary room already vacated by the maids in their slow procession, flew around the church and grabbed her father.

Slowly, solemnly, rose the strains of the wedding march. Eddy Jackson, breathing hard, accompanied the groom to the white chalk marks placed for them before the altar. Down the ribboned aisle tripped small white fairies, sprinkling flowers, after them the bridesmaids in pastel, rainbow-tinted gowns, after them, the bride, serene, unruffled, sweet-eyed.

"Oh, Ginger, My Darling," She Whispered, and Wept Again for Leaving Her.

Ginger, cool and slight in her crisp blue, with a firm finger on her father's arm, led him slowly down the aisle and placed him squarely upon the chalk mark, before she went to stand by Helen, serving the double role as maid of honor to her sister, and as her father's escort.

"I do," murmured Helen sweetly.

The familiar voice of her father resonant and low, unbreaking, continued the service. And presently Helen's hand was in that of Horace. A great lump rose in Ginger's small throat. And in the momentary breathless silence that followed Helen leaned forward, put both arms around her father's shoulders, and kissed him tenderly.

Helen was married—it was all over.

With laughter and kisses, and many gay words, the crowd surged down to the Sunday school room for the buffet luncheon served by the Ruthenns. And when the proper moment came, Helen slipped away from the others, and went into the small room beside the pulpit where she changed quickly from her bridal robes to trim black and white, for traveling. And then, just a very little later, there was a cab at the curb, and the guests from within flocked out to mingle fraternally with those equally interested outside.

Horace took Helen's hand in his, and in a shower of flowers and rice, they run down the walk. With her foot on the running board of the car, she paused. Her eyes swept the small sweet sea of loved and loving faces. She found the bright eyes of Marjory and Miriam, found her father standing a little away by himself. Then she found Ginger, a small, sad emn figure, with lips forced to a grim smile. And Helen tossed her great bouquet, lilies of the valley, for get-me-nots and tiny rosebuds.

Ginger had not thought of this, must have been sheer instinct which shot her lithe young arms high over others to catch the precious trophy. Helen smiled at her.

"My Ginger." Her lips merely formed the words, but Ginger, staring, read the syllables distinctly.

The cab rolled away.

A shout of laughter, a chorus of prophecies, surrounded Ginger, with the captured bridal bouquet in her hand. But she heard none of it. She was going home. She answered no smiling thrusts, called no responsive greetings, to the merry throng about her. She just set her small face toward the old brown door, and her obedient little feet carried her lead enly toward it.

Up the stairs, heavily, heavily, and down the hall to the bedroom she had shared with Helen. The room looked strange—big and roomy. She marveled at its bigness, for she and Helen had often complained roughingly of its slight dimensions. Suddenly she realized. One of the little twin beds was gone, and the other, her own, was in the center of the space the two had occupied. Ginger's eyes burned suddenly. But she was glad that other bed was gone. She had not realized how it would have ce ing there and gazing across at that empty pillow where Helen's brown hair, Helen's gentle face, Helen's friendly eyes, had been before.

"She thought of that," she said aloud.

Conscious of the weight of the flowers, she crossed dully to the desk by the window. There she found a fat blue vase, filled with fresh water, waiting to receive them.

"She did that. She meant all the time that I should have her flowers."

Carefully, with fingers that seemed unfamiliar and strange to her, she loosened the white ribbons, folded them carefully, and placed the flowers in the blue bowl.

Then she sat down on the solitary little twin bed, and stared at them, stared all about the room.

"That's what she was doing all morning," she thought, "fixing this room for me. Putting my things where her things had been, straightening the drawers, and tidying the closet, so everything would be full of me, and wouldn't show so much emptiness of her."

She got up suddenly, and turned down the hall. The ladder was against the wall. She climbed dismally, pulling herself, a great weight, through the trapdoor, and crossed the beams to the dormer window. From force of habit, she drew the small stool up to the table, and reached for her pad. And then she saw a white envelope.

"My Ginger."

She picked up the letter. It was then she saw the velvet box. She opened it curiously—a small diamond, in an old-fashioned setting—her mother's engagement ring that Helen had worn for sixteen years. Ginger held it in her hand a long time, and stared into the dim recesses of the dusty old room with grave, glad, wondering eyes. This was to her a symbol of Helen's trust.

"If I'm not a whole lot better after this, I'm a whole lot worse than I think I am," she decided finally. "I know Helen expects me to keep a motherly eye on father and the twins, and I shall not disappoint her. Oh, how pleased she'll be when she hears about my home for the blind."

There was a certain confidence in her manner as she slipped the small gold band upon her finger. After all, already, she had taken the family affairs in charge. The first links of her chain were firmly forged.

Animals and Reptiles Worshiped by Mankind

It is a fact that cows, on account of their supposedly sacred character, are allowed to roam at will in India, but the animals are venerated or respected rather than actually worshiped. Real worship of cattle, however, has existed at other periods of the world's history. It was common among the ancient Egyptians, who possessed the cult of the bull Apis. When one representative of Apis died, a new bull was sought and specially educated in sacred matters for four months. Celebration of its birthday was held annually, with sacrifices of white oxen, and it was unlawful for women to go near it. Apis was supposed to have oracular powers, and after death, was mummified. Another animal that has received great respect has been the white elephant, which is believed, in Siam, to carry a dead man's soul. It cannot be purchased, and feasts are held for it and a funeral when it dies. But perhaps the most feared and respected of all is the serpent. At Whydah, in Africa, there is a serpent temple, and these reptiles in many parts of Africa are regarded as incarnations of dead relatives.

Beauty to Toleration

The only hope of preserving that which is best lies in the practice of an immense charity, a wide tolerance and a sincere respect for opinions not ours.—P. G. Hamerton.

MANY VERSIONS OF THE BOLERO; FUR MODES REACH THE HEIGHTS

ONE among many evidences that both daytime and evening modes reflect the Spanish influence, is the bolero. These cunning little jacket effects appear in endless versions and if the bolero is not designed as a separate piece then more than likely trimming is arranged to simulate it.

If there is one thing more likable about the bolero than another, it is its youthfulness. In the picture the stylist successfully poses a bolero over a one-piece frock. The thought comes that this idea might be put into practical working by the woman who has in her wardrobe a "perfectly good" sleeveless one-piece dress which she would like to tune to midwinter wear. Why not modernize it with a jaunty little bolero fashioned somewhat after the manner of the one pictured? In the instance of the bolero ensemble shown here the material is black silk flat crepe. There is a touch of white georgette in the square neck of the dress with persian lamb edging the bolero—a combination that might have been designed for mourning, so somber is it in its smartness. But that is the way of many a Paris costume this year, if it is not all black then it is almost sure to be black-and-white.

The hat which tops this costume is a very chic little model, and please to observe, if you are looking for outstanding style touches, that it has a nose-veil, for veils are being worn by the majority of smartly dressed Parisiennes. Furthermore this hat has a brim and we are going to see more and more of brims as the season advances. A single white gardenia on the underside of this shapely brim emphasizes the black-and-white theme most becomingly.

Speaking of the bolero it is also popularly worn with a matching skirt and a contrast blouse.

Fur Modes Intrigue.

It does not seem as if one iota more of luxury and beauty and unusualness could be added to furs as stylists exploit them this season. This applies not only to the all-fur coat but to fur in its every conceivable adaptation to the mode.

Time was when fur manipulation was supposed to have its limitations. Because fur was fur little was expected of it beyond the uniform and the conventional. However, our ideas have been revolutionized. It is very evident that nowadays designers are working along the theory that whatever can be accomplished with fabric can be achieved with fur. And so the artist-furrier is turning out most marvelous style creations which intrigue with their cunning "dressmaker touches" and otherwise elaborate and unique treatments.

As an example of fascinating fur intricacies consider the charming ermine-trimmed ensemble to the right in the picture below. This costume for afternoon wear is a Worth creation. The graceful collar, the widened cuffs, the flare of fur plus a perky bow on the wee chapeau all bespeak the new trend which demands of fur all those vagaries and vanities which belong to modern stylizing. The black-and-white bag under this fair Parisienne's arm is one of those accessory niceties which contribute a final touch of chic to a perfect ensemble.

Fur luxury is bespoken in every detail of the magnificent fox-collared beige caracul coat which lovely Mary Nolan of screen fame wore when she posed for the photograph which is reproduced in our illustration. One can readily imagine what oh's and ah's and glances of admiration and perhaps of envy Miss Nolan's appearance in these gorgeous furs must have called forth from her sister co-stars in filmland. For where is the woman who does not covet either a caracul, a leopard, perhaps a raccoon coat or some other equally as alluring type, one of the modish white ermine wraps for evening, perhaps. It is interesting to know that the little hat worn with this coat is crocheted of beige angora yarn and it has a matched-satin facing.

It will be observed that the two contestants for style supremacy as shown in this picture, approach the fur theme from entirely different angles, that of the coat all of fur versus fur used in a trimming way. However, as fur as luxury, compelling beauty and chic, also masterful craftmanship is concerned they are one and the same thing.

Smooth at all Speeds

Quick, Quiet and Flexible!

You can have no conception of the high quality of Plymouth behavior until you have driven this amazing Chrysler-built car.

Plymouth is smooth at all speeds—and amazingly quiet and flexible. Take the wheel—drive as you will. Throttle it down, step it up, run the whole range of speed. Not a flutter—not a tremor. A new crankshaft, dynamically and statically balanced; lengthened engine stroke and increased piston displacement; larger main bearings and connecting rods and light aluminum-alloy pistons. All these play a big part in creating Plymouth's new smoothness.

Editor St. Joe Weekly News:

The business place pictured on this page was that of the Electric Shop, located in the new Masonic Building on West Eighth Street, in Auburn, and although Mr. Wise, the Manager is a new man to us we know that the Electric Shop has always served us well in the past and with the high grade line of stock which is sold there, one cannot go wrong, for the name "General Electric" which we see on the electric refrigerators is a safeguard for us when we think of buying a new Electric Refrigerator.

And in the Radios we see the Crosley and the Amrad. The Crosley is one of the Pioneer Radios and from their cost to cost service and long duration they are not a cheap radio although they are sold at a moderate price.

The Horton Washer which we see there is the friend of the Housewife and we know that for the woman who is compelled to do her own washing, to do it the Horton way is the easiest, cleanest and most economical way. So we should feel that the Electric Shop is here to do us a service and we know that Mr. Wise, the Manager is doing his part.

LIGHTS PROMOTE EGGS IN WINTER

Scratch Feed Is Scattered in Litter Previous Night.

Egg production can be profitably increased during winter months through the use of artificial lighting, suggests O. C. Ufford, extension poultryman for the Colorado Agricultural college.

"Hens normally lay the most eggs in the spring and early summer when there is the greatest amount of daylight," Mr. Ufford declares. "It has been found that by prolonging the period of light during winter days a higher average egg production will be obtained than when artificial light is not used."

There are three methods of artificially lighting the henhouse by the use of an automatic clock. Probably the most popular method is that of turning on the lights between 4 and 5 a. m. and keeping them on until daylight. The morning scratch feed is scattered in the litter the night before.

Sometimes a combination of morning and evening lights is used, the evening lights being turned on about 4 p. m. and kept on until 6:30 or 7 p. m., when the birds are sent to roost by automatically dimming the lights before they are entirely turned off. The lights are turned on again by the clock early in the morning.

The evening lunch method permits the birds to go to roost at the regular time, but arouses them when the lights are turned on about 8 p. m., when a feed of grain is scattered in the litter. This brings the birds off the roosts for about an hour for grain, mash and water, and then they are sent back to roost by the use of dimmers. This lunch prevents them from becoming hungry during the winter nights and enables them to better resist cold weather.

Mash for Winter Eggs Favored by Specialist

With a 50 per cent production for young stock as a practical economical limit for their production, J. B. Hayes, poultry specialist at the University of Wisconsin, advises that careful feeding should attend their introduction into the class of producers.

"Forcing," he declares, "should not be attempted on young stock, nor should it be expected of them that production on top of early maturity gained from forcing will be the best for flock production."

For poultry stock which is in condition to be forced, such as pullets that are well along to maturity, and hens that have fully recovered from their molt and are again in good condition, increased feeding during the winter months is a good way to bring up production of the flock. One of the best of rations for the flock to bring them to better production is this one:

Scratch Feed Mixture: Cracked corn, 2 pounds; wheat, 2 pounds; oats, 1 pound.

Mash: Bran, 100 pounds; wheat middlings, 100 pounds; buckwheat middlings, 100 pounds; ground oats, 100 pounds; oil meal, 50 pounds; salt, 8 pounds.

Practices in feeding that have been found to be the best, according to Hayes, include the feeding of grain in two or three portions during the day. The mash is the true "forcer" of the feed for the flock.

Rotting of Eggs Blamed on Carbon Dioxide Gas

According to a Cornell chemist, one of the chief reasons for the rotting of eggs is the escape of carbon dioxide gas through the shell. He discovered that newly laid eggs contain this gas in a limited quantity, but the porousness of the shell permits it to pass off within a short time.

He proved, however, that the egg would reabsorb the gas, and by exposing the shells to a minute quantity of carbon dioxide succeeded in keeping them fresh indefinitely. The cost of the treatment was said to be a few hundredths of a cent per dozen.

Fowls for Breeding

It is time to make the breeding pens. Select your best hens and confine them in small flocks of from 12 to 20, according to the breed, and place a good male in each pen. Have the hens in each pen as near alike as possible. If a number of males are allowed to run with a large flock you can never tell what the chicks will be when you select the eggs for hatching. Promiscuous breeding, even for utility stock, is never satisfactory for a profitable flock.

Management of Pullets

With regard to the management of the pullets, it will be advisable gradually to introduce the rations likely to be used during the laying period. Any change in the diet should be made before eggs are forthcoming in any large number.

All poultry keepers have difficulty in preventing the partial moult. While admitting that various factors may be responsible for this trouble, there is no doubt that management has to do with it

Increase Yields by Crop Rotation

Experiments at the Huntley Field Station Show Value of Alfalfa.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Results of crop rotation experiments extending over the last 18 years with irrigated crops in southern Montana, are reported by the United States Department of Agriculture in Technical Bulletin 144-T, "Irrigated Crop Rotations in Southern Montana," just issued by the department. The experiments were conducted at the Huntley field station, in southeastern Montana, to find out what rotations and methods would give the highest yields on the irrigated soils representative of the area.

Value of Alfalfa Shown.

The experiments demonstrated very clearly the value of alfalfa in the rotation and of the application of stable manure. Where one application of stable manure was made in a six-year rotation which included alfalfa, the yield of oats was 39 per cent greater, the yield of sugar beets was 43 per cent greater, and the yield of potatoes was 48 per cent greater than where stable manure was not added.

In respect to oats, the highest yields were produced in those rotations in which alfalfa was used, the next best yields were in those rotations in which stable manure was applied, and the lowest yields were on the plots cropped continuously.

Manure Effective.

As to sugar beets, in two-year and three-year rotations stable manure was more effective than alfalfa in increasing yields. All of the treated rotations showed a marked tendency to increase in yield the longer these rotations were continued. Comparatively low yields resulted from plots continuously cropped, and not better averaged yields resulted from the two-year rotations as where beets follow wheat and oats.

An application of manure in two-year and three-year rotations is well justified, the experiments indicated. The incorporation of alfalfa in a well-planned rotation brought a return second only to that when manure was used. As a rule, it appeared to be the better practice to leave alfalfa for a period of at least three years. Adding manure to a six-year rotation which included three years of alfalfa, much more than paid for the cost of application.

Copies of the bulletin may be obtained free from the Office of Information, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., as long as there is a supply available for free distribution.

Sanitation Regarded as Big Aid to Health

As a general rule the farmer should do all that he reasonably can to maintain the health of his herd through breeding, feeding, and sanitary measures, and apply the immunization treatment as a resource measure when danger of cholera threatens. Of course, it is realized that there are densely hog-populated sections of the country where hog cholera appears every year, which makes it necessary to apply the immunization treatment systematically each year.

Liming Garden Soil

Too few home gardeners use enough lime. Many gardens are not yielding up to their capacity because of soil acidity. Where lime is greatly needed the application of artificial fertilizers is not, as a rule, economical. The acidity should be corrected first in most cases. Lime also helps convert a clay soil into one of light and porous consistency. Vegetable crops differ widely in their soil requirements. Certain of them may be injured by lime.

Profitable Pork

Good management is always an important factor in reducing the cost of producing pork. This means using only well balanced rations, keeping the pigs healthy, and saving large litters. A very small amount of hay with a little milk or tankage as a supplement to the grain ration is very valuable, but the substitution of even the best quality of legume hay for a considerable portion of the grain does not lower the cost of the pork produced.

Uses for Combine

Probably the most interesting development in combine history of the last two or three years has been that it seems adapted to the harvesting of almost any crop. The University of Illinois has harvested corn with a combine; they have been used successfully in the rice fields of Louisiana, in flax fields of North Dakota and western Kansas; and growers of soy beans have almost reached the point where a combine is a standard piece of equipment with them.

Pullets for Layers

Pullets with small bodies rarely have a strong enough constitution to make a high egg record. Try to build a large body before egg production begins.

The growing mash may be diluted with cornmeal to hold back sexual maturity, and at the same time to bring on body flesh.

Early hatched birds may be held back by diluting the growing mash with cornmeal.

Manure Value Does Not Waste in Field

Best Plan to Haul Directly to Open and Spread.

To double the fertilizing value of farm manure add 40 to 50 pounds of superphosphate to the ton, says Professor E. L. Worthen of Cornell university at Ithaca.

Since manure loses value rapidly when exposed to the weather it should be stored in a watertight pit or a covered manure shed. Where it must be stored out-of-doors, it is best to haul it directly to the field and spread at once.

Winter manure can be spread to good advantage on all old sod to be plowed under for corn, beans or cabbage, and the older the sod the more important it is to manure it. Whether plowed down or applied after plowing, manure should be applied to areas to be used for cultivated crops next year, the one exception being good alfalfa or clover sod.

A poor clover seeding, the thin spots in the alfalfa, and the poor wheat field will all be helped by top-dressing. New York pastures have not received enough fertilizer in the past, and manure is suited for all permanent pastures in the state irrespective of the kind of grass.

Heavy applications of from 15 to 20 tons have been shown to be wasteful. Better returns come from frequent and light applications rather than from one heavy one, according to Professor Worthen.

Fertilizing Orchards Quite Important Task

One of the aims of the orchardist is to so handle his fruit that it will reach the consumer in perfect condition. This means care from the beginning of the season until it leaves his hands. Any practice that reduces the keeping quality must be avoided if the cause is known.

Experiments at the station have sought to determine whether the normal application of nitrogenous fertilizer commonly used in Ohio results in a reduced keeping quality, as some have suggested. Chemical determinations have shown that more total nitrogen is found in the flesh of the apple when fertilizer is applied and large applications result in somewhat proportionately larger amounts of nitrogen in the fruit. Other methods of determining this matter are positive. However, the storage tests with Stayman Winesap during the past three years have shown no breakdown in the flesh as a result of the fertilizer treatments. While the work is not completed it is suggested that the present method of fertilization be continued, using nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia beneath the branches at the approximate rate of quarter pound of nitrate for each year of the trees' age. Superphosphate between the tree rows at the rate of 250 pounds per acre should also be applied each year.—J. H. Gourley, in Ohio Farmer.

After Once Opened Keep on Feeding From Silo

After the silo has once been opened it is not advisable to cease feeding silage until the silo has been emptied or there is an abundance of grass. With the average farmer, silage should be fed from grass to grass, even if lighter rations are necessary to make it hold out. In this way the animals will always have succulent feed with the daily ration.

Where corn is put in the silo at the proper stage, little or no packing is needed during the process of filling, but all silos should be thoroughly packed at the top after they are filled in order to form a cap and preserve the silage.

Farm Notes

Onions require cool, dry storage.

* * *

The soil is in better condition for hauling and spreading lime now than in the spring.

* * *

A good time to clean out the hen house is right now while you are thinking about it.

* * *

Soil should be regarded as a checking account—it must be added to if it is checked against.

* * *

Terracing of fields, planting of trees, and growing grasses will solve the erosion problem.

* * *

Cabbage plants started in February will be less likely to produce seed stalks than those started in January.

* * *

While we are doing something about everything else, why not try our hands at cleaning up the fence rows on our own farms?

* * *

Live stock of all kinds should be kept off the ground occupied by the trees, until the trees are large enough to provide shelter and shade.

* * *

Field observations point to the fact that lime can be used to great advantage. It should be borne in mind, however, that lime is not a fertilizer.

* * *

Where it appears necessary to burn pastures to obtain more uniform grazing, the burning should be done just before the native forage plants start growing and after the freezing weather.

Scraps of Humor

PLENTY'A REASON

"Why are you so opposed to my marrying Jim?" demanded daughter indignantly.

"In the first place," declared her dad, "you are not strong enough to take in washing and you don't know anything about keeping boarders, and, in the second place, my salary isn't large enough to stand another lazy son in the family."

Never Corrects Error

Reader (rushing into the newspaper office)—See here, you've published an announcement of my death by mistake. That's got to be fixed up somehow.

Vessels May Be Older Than St. Patrick's Time

An interesting archeological discovery was made by men clearing an old ditch at Mornington, county Louth, Ireland, a village at the mouth of the Boyne.

Mornington is connected by tradition with St. Patrick, who in 432, after unsuccessful efforts to effect a landing in other parts of Ireland, entered the Boyne there and ran his vessel into what was then known as the harbor at Colpa, now called Colp.

In a ditch into which within living memory the Boyne used to flow, forming a natural harbor, workmen unearthed the timbers of several oaken vessels lying at an angle to the stream and apparently of great age. The length of the vessels cannot be ascertained until after further excavations.

The fact that sandy soil will preserve oak for thousands of years opens up the possibility that the vessels may be even older than St. Patrick's time. Steps have been taken to protect them until they have been seen by an archeological expert.

Other Senses of Blind Not Overly Developed

Blind persons do not hear better, they simply seem to because they listen harder, Mrs. Winifred Hathaway, of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, told members of the Michigan Educational institute. The popular belief that blind people have more acuity of other senses, such as hearing and touch, is not exactly correct. The special senses of blind people, aside from sight, are no better in the beginning than those of other people, sometimes not so good. But experience and specialization on the part of the blind persons enable them to make their other senses take the place of sight, so that their senses are better developed than those of normal people. The same thing applies to deaf persons who appear to have much keener vision than normal.

Mechanical Violin

Said to play with an uncanny human touch, a mechanical violin has been invented by two engineers in France. It has a number of keys which press the strings like the left hand of a player, and a revolving bow which permits different degrees of pressure. The violin is driven by two motors. One takes the place of the player's arm and the other imparts the swift movements of the wrist.

Virtues of "Sneeze" Gas

The danger of asphyxiation by illuminating gas would be virtually eliminated through the use of a "sneeze" gas which she has invented, Miss Mary L. Sherrill of Mt. Holyoke college faculty believes. The new gas, when mixed with illuminating gas, produces fumes which would arouse a sleeper and bring from him an involuntary cry of alarm, according to the inventor.

WHAT'S AHEAD for 1930?

A Dream of New Year's Eve

by L. J. Bridgman, in Youth's Companion

AT midnight deep one New Year's eve
The grandfather clock got up to leave,
A yawn upon his face.
"I'm feeling quite run down," he said;
"Perhaps I'd better go to bed.
Will some one take my place?"

The small tin clock from the kitchen shelf
Called out "I'll take your place myself.
Go on, you sleepy thing!"
But just as the big clock turned to go
"Somebody's calling," he said, "I know.
Did you hear something ring?"

The little clock danced to the door to see
What midnight caller there might be,
What gnome or elf or fairy,
And lo! while church bells rang their chime
"I hope I have arrived on time,"
Said sweet Miss January.

The 365 Seeds

By Myrtle Koon Cherryman

IF YOU were given a box, containing 365 choice seeds to be planted one at a time, what would you do with them? Would you toss each one out, carelessly, letting it fall where it would, or would you study to find the best soil, and then plant and water it carefully?

If you had been told that these seeds were all different, and that they could never be duplicated, you would be the more zealous in tending them; and if you had been further instructed that with proper care they would become luxurious plants with exquisite flowers and fruitage of benefit to mankind, while careless treatment would cause them to become troublesome and even poisonous weeds, what then? Of course you would put your whole mind on the cultivation of your seeds. No idle pleasures, no fascinating or risky gambles in life would be allowed to interfere with this fateful gardening. Once convinced that your seeds were really of the magic sort indicated, you would find great joy in their care and development. As each fresh one was taken from the box, you would think, "I must make this one finer than the last, because I know better how to handle it." You would watch expectantly for the results of your planting, would learn by your mistakes, and find much pleasure in your successes, the pleasure that comes only from the contemplation of things that grow. And when the 365 seeds were all planted, you would reap a rich harvest of beauty and usefulness.

On New Year's day, such a box will be intrusted to you by Father Time. He will give you no special instructions, but if you think carefully on the subject, you will know that your 365 seeds have the magic powers here in described.

More concrete roads than ever before

Last year—1928—saw more concrete roads built than ever before. During the year almost 8000 miles were completed, or placed under contract. This mileage is more than three times the amount of all other kinds of paved roads built during the year.

There's a reason for that!

It's significant that the greatest mileages of concrete have been built by those states having the heaviest traffic, and the most experience in building and maintaining paved roads.

Student is in Peru Hospital

The Peru Daily Tribune, of Tuesday, Jan. 7, contained the following article regarding the injury of "John" Coburn.

"Victor Coburn, 19, of St. Joe, Ind., student at Purdue University, may lose his left foot as a result of an accident that happened while riding a freight train from Lafayette to Peru last night. Coburn was hanging on the end of a car when his foot slipped and was crushed between the bumpers.

"Coburn related a strange story to police. He said that while he was on the streets of Lafayette last night he was kidnapped and taken for a ride and that later he was thrown from the automobile. The point where he was thrown out was far from the city and not knowing just where he was he boarded a passing freight train which brought him to Peru.

"After reaching Peru he was able to make his way from the train to the barn at the Sanitary Milk Company's plant where he was found by workmen early today. The youth's father was notified and was expected to reach here this afternoon.

"When found young Coburn was taken to the office of Dr. M. L. Wagner by police officers. Later he was removed to the hospital."

Tuesday morning about 4 o'clock a telephone message came saying that Victor Coburn had his foot smashed but due to message being repeated by the operators to Miss Viola Coburn not much information could be obtained and all day Tuesday an effort was made to locate him by wire.

Earl Coburn, who was working at Wabash was notified and he went to Peru and was unable to locate his son in the hospital so he went to Lafayette, but without avail. By afternoon, Viola had traced the call from the Peru police department and they stated that he would be located in the Miami County hospital.

About four o'clock, E. R. Kinsey, F. R. Bowman, Harry Hursh, DuWayne Kinsey, Viola Coburn and Thelma Curie, drove to Peru and visited him, and found him in good spirits, but just what the results will be could not be ascertained at this early hour.

STATION KWKH ACCUSED OF BROADCASTING PROFANITY

The federal radio commission and William D. Mitchell, attorney-general, were asked in the senate Tuesday by Senator C. C. Dill (Rep., Wash.) to stop the broadcasting of "obscene language" by Station KWKH at Shreveport, La.

Dill had read a telegram from L. J. Watrous of Minneapolis, in which a complaint against the station was made, and then expressed the opinion that if the radio commission believed it had no authority to prosecute, the attorney-general had such power under the penal provisions of the radio act.

"It would seem," the Washington senator said, "that public interest alone would justify the stopping of this broadcasting. The law makes it a crime to use profanity on the air."

The station is operated by W. K. Henderson who is an outspoken opponent of chain stores.

JUNIOR CLASS PLAY WENT OVER BIG

The play "A College Town," sponsored by the Junior class of the high school was given on Thursday, Jan. 2. This play had been billed for Dec. 19, but when that day arrived, it found the roads blocked by huge snow drifts and the mercury well toward the zero point, consequently the play had to be postponed to a later date. The weather conditions were more favorable on the date selected the next time, and found a fair sized audience present. A College Town proved to be a good selection. It abounded in amusing situations and proved a mirth provoking entertainment. The costuming was good as well as the interpretation by the young thespians. No doubt had weather conditions been more propitious the attendance would have been better, however, every thing being considered, it was good as it was. The young people of this Junior class are to be congratulated as well as all others whose help made the play a success.

WITH THE CLUBS

The Home Bureau Club met Friday, January 3, at the home of Mrs. Linua Thorpe. Shortly after the ladies arrived the hostess invited them to the dining room where a bounteous pot-luck dinner was served.

The rooms were beautifully decorated, with red and green festoons and bells which was in keeping with the Christmas season.

Immediately after the dinner hour the president, Mrs. Borthwick, called the meeting to order and the Christmas committee took charge. Numbers were drawn and each lady received a dainty Christmas package. A short business session followed at which time the secretary read the program for the coming year and the yearly reports were also read and accepted. The secretary's report of previous meeting was read and approved and eighteen members responded to roll call.

We were pleased to have with us as guests Mrs. Anna Bachtel and Miss Priscilla Borthwick. At an early hour the ladies all returned to their respective homes with many expressions of having spent a delightful day.

To Hold County Tourney At Waterloo, Jan. 18

Garrett Plays St. Joe in Opener

Waterloo will hold this season's DeKalb county basketball tourney on Saturday, January 18th. Drawings for games were made Thursday in Butler by the high school principals present.

The tourney goes to Waterloo because the original contracts among schools stated the county tourney was to be passed around to the several schools of the county and this was Waterloo's turn.

The drawings are as follows:

1st game, 9:00 A. M.—St. Joe vs Garrettt.

2nd game, 10:00 A. M.—Spencerville vs Ashley.

3rd game, 11:00 A. M.—Auburn vs Butler.

4th game, 2:00 P. M.—Waterloo vs winner of game No. 1.

5th game, 3:00 P. M.—Winner of game No. 2 vs winner of game No. 3.

Finals, 8:00 P. M.—Winner of game No. 4 vs winner of game No. 5.

Two officials will be used in each game. A list of a dozen referees has been compiled from which A. J. Smith, Waterloo principal, will hire two.

Each participating team will consist of eight men, the same as in sectional tourneys. Waterloo will furnish entertainment consisting of two meals for aach player and necessary resting rooms.

After expenses of the tourney are paid the balance of the door receipts will be divided among the participating schools on the basis of tickets sold by the schools. Single session admission will be 35 cents. There will be no season ticket.

OBITUARY

Lodema E. Hull was born February 24, 1870 near Concord, Indiana. She was the daughter of Delilah and the late J. B. Draggoo. On March 14, 1888 she was married to Martin Hull. She has been a life long resident of the community about Concord. After a brief illness she departed this life December 29, 1929, at the age of 59 years, 10 months and 5 days.

She is survived by her husband and children: Edwin of Palm Spring, California, Mrs. Marie Palmer of Monroeville and Mrs. Goldie Shutt of Spencerville; one granddaughter; and six brothers and six sisters.

When a young girl she joined the M. P. Church at Concord and for a number of years has been a faithful member of the Spencerville Lutheran Church.

The funeral was held Wednesday, January 1, from the Spencerville Lutheran Church, with Rev. G. D. Stoll officiating. Burial was made at St. Joe by E. R. Kinsey.

E. E. Turner Named As Superintendent

Grant Township Farmer to Succeed Marion Clark in Charge of DeKalb County Roads

The county commissioners made the following appointments Monday:

County attorney, Capt. H. C Springer of Butler.

County highway superintendent, Ernest E. Turner of Grant township.

County Health commissioner, Dr. W. W. Swarts of Auburn.

Physician for the county jail and the infirmary, Dr. C. P. Fox of Garrett.

County drainage commissioner, John S. Wing of Franklin township.

All of these appointees are republicans. Capt. Springer succeeds himself and his salary remains at $500 a year. The appointment is for a year.

Mr. Turner is a farmer and auctioneer and he takes the place of Marion Clark of Smithfield township, a democrat who filled the unexpired term of the late Byron Platt, who died suddenly in March, 1928. The salary of the office was cut from $6 a day to $5. The term is four years.

The term of the health commissioner is four years and the salary is $384 a year. Dr. Fox's appointment is for a year and the salary was increased from $140 to $240 annually. Dr. Swartz succeeds Dr. W. F. Shumaker of Butler and Dr. Fox takes the place of Dr. L. N. Geisinger of Auburn.

Mr. Wing succeeds himself and his salary remains at $4 a day. The term is one year.

The county board reorganized by the re-election of Nicholas Funk of Wilmington township, as president, Edward S. Kelham of Butler township, as vice chairman, and Charles G. Potter of Franklin township, as secretary.

The dog tax for 1930 was fixed at $3 for males and splayed females, $5 for females and $5 for each additional dog. The rate was cut a year ago to $1 and $4 but the township trustees reported that this was inadequate to meet the sheep claims and asked the former rates be restored.

Jugoslavia's Coast

Dalmatian Peasant Women.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

IF ONE enters Jugoslavia by rail at the northeast corner where Italy and Austria meet that country, his route follows the gray-green Sava eastward to Zagreb, the old Agram of Austro-Hungarian days. If one then turns westward toward Fiume, the sharp detour crosses the panorama of Croatia's magnificently forested mountain country as the train climbs to the regional watershed before descending to the Adriatic.

The route holds its surprises. Imagine a mountain town halved by a rushing river which plunges 40 yards into a crevasse under the sidewalk and then, three miles farther on, pops up unexpectedly, to resume its surface course. Yet such fluvial feats characterize not only Croatia, but the entirety of those barren highlands which extend southward behind the Jugoslav coast.

They form the so-called Karst region, which geologists have compared to a vast petrified sponge. Such are the tricks that time and rushing streams have played with the Karst's easily decomposed limestone. "Now you see us and now you don't!" gurgle in chorus a whole system of such jack-in-the-box rivers, as they plunge into the mountains' eastern flank, triumphantly reissuing, scores of miles westward, as feeders of estuaries or, in one case, as a fresh-water spring emerging from sea bottom.

Had some Marco Polo left us an account of the marvelous Land of Spongy Mountains, whose rivers cut through the bases of ranges 1,000 feet high, we might have dismissed him as a fabulist; yet in sober fact a Montengrin river has performed that identical feat.

While descending through the indescribably sterile looking Karst, one puts to himself the question: "Why, in this desert, build those innumerable, circular stone walls to inclose at most a bit of grass?"

Farming in Holes.

But you learn that what you see are karst holes—extremely rich oases—and that, in this land of jack-in-the-box rivers, natural precipitation, instead of draining into streams, sinks through the porous stone, carrying vegetable matter along with it, and enriches a regional series of funnel-like ditches. Thus, "farming in holes"—the karst holes, which sometimes number several hundred within a small area—provides grain for the inhabitants of this mountain-side desert.

The blinding, sizzling Karst comes to a spectacular end when you espy from nearly half a mile above, what appears as a gigantic relief map, the Istrian mountains curving around the Gulf of Quarnero, and to the southward the Velebit mountains outflung ridge spanning the rim of illimitable Adriatic blue.

In Fiume, you learn that the city has its front doors on the sea and its back doors among the mountains.

Any prospective visitor to Fiume who may question this has only to climb up 425 certain steps, taking them in cool weather and "on low." He will find himself among the city's back doors, overlooking the Velebit ridge. A turn about will give him an airman's view of the terraced hillside by which Fiume-Susak descends to its far-stretched curve of wharfage; and from one's feet there plunges headlong the mere ribbon of water that divides what is practically one city into two ports, Fiume and Susak—the former in Italy, the latter in Jugoslavia.

Probably no narrower stream than the Recina ever demarked so important a frontier. Its little, internationalized bridge, which is aptly symbolized by the hyphen in "Fiume-Susak," can be crossed in less than one minute. You may dine in Italy and take strolls in Jugoslavia between courses. A baseball battery warming up across the Recina, with the pitcher in Jugoslavia and the catcher in Italy, would be spaced approximately at the regulation distance.

When you buy and tussle with a map of the Jugoslav coast, it will give you that hopeless feeling which possibly overcame the first explorer who attempted to chart Maine's coast line. Also, you will sympathize with that other explorer, who, weary of counting islands in the St. Lawrence, probably said, "Oh, let's name 'em the Thousand Islands and call it a day's work!"

Queer Coast, Queer Names.

Even Maine's shores are rivaled in their zigzag conformation by those of Dalmatia. While a direct course along the Jugoslav littoral measures 300 sea miles, the indented length of that coast is almost three times as long. As for the man-sized job of counting Dalmatia's islands, that has been simplified by ignoring insignificant islets and putting the archipelago's units at 600 and its area at 2,000 square miles.

The locally published maps present other difficulties. The kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes (Jugoslavia) has made a clean sweep of former Austro-Hungarian place names in favor of their Slav equivalents. Like the out-of-luck American tourist who wouldn't stop off at "Praha" because he wanted to get on to Prague, the traveler today often needs a bilingual key to ascertain where he is. Here is a list of some Jugoslav place names, with their prewar equivalents bracketed: Lake Bled (Veldeser See), Lake Bohinj (Wocheiner See), Zagreb (Agram), Zadar (Zara), Sibenik (Sebenico), Trogir (Trau), Solin (Salona), Split (Spalato), Gruz (Gravosa), Dubrovnik (Ragust), Kotor (Cattaro).

As neither railroad nor motor trail spans the Jugoslav coast, one had best take the oldest and most appropriate of routes, the sea lane, to rediscover those shores whose maritime fame antedated England's by centuries. From among luxurious liners, more modest steamers, and fleets of sailing craft, one may choose one's traveling style along what is one of the best-served littorals in south European waters.

As Susak falls astern, Italy disappears behind islands. With an archipelago barring the open sea and with the Velebit's barren heights rising behind the narrow coast, it seems as if one is navigating a succession of blue, flawlessly calm lagoons.

It is almost a matter of saying good-by to Europe! It is small wonder that, with mountains barring the east and an archipelago barring the west, Dalmatia has always been a debatable land of halfway house, where racially speaking, Europe and Asia meet.

Certainly, the more one sees of Dalmatia, the more one feels himself to be, while not exactly out of Europe, yet somehow among the fringes of the Orient.

Along the Illyrian Coast.

Now and then your boat touches port in some deep-set bay with its hill-perched townlet—often an almost streetless clump of vine-clad houses—which had dug its heels into the Velebit and held on while as yet Venice was unheard of. Yet the specter of the lagoon republic, medieval Dalmatia's protestress, still haunts every nook and corner of the Jugoslav coast.

Small steamers wind through the narrow lagoonlike waters, known along the coast as "canals," which were once ruled by those petty potentates for whom, Croatian tradition asserts, mourning weeds have become perpetuated as a national costume.

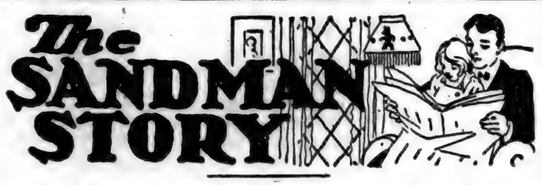
As one sails along, now the Velebit range, its barren, slate-gray flanks queerly diagramed with walled karst holes, thrusts menacingly forward, barring Croatia from the Adriatic. Occasionally there appear V-shaped valleys where some tiny, stucco port nestles among a luxuriance of trees, hedged gardens, and terraced vineyards. Such are the Velebit's always amazing oases, created by subterranean streams.

A wild strip, this, of the ancient Illyrian coast. Wild, too, were the first Illyrians, a mixture of pre-Homeric Greeks and those wandering Asians, the Liburni, after whom Rome called the country Liburnia. Legend says that from Cadmus and Harmonia, through their son Illyrius, sprang the tribes that perpetuated his name.

Just north of Zara (Zadar) one enters the waters of ancient Dalmatia. Ranging in width from 1 to 85 miles, this little sliver of a state enjoyed a well-developed coast which played its famous role in the sea commerce of the Middle Ages.

Dalmatia of to-day has an area of 4,916 square miles. The industries supporting her 650,000 people are cattle breeding, viticulture, cereal raising, and, of course, fishing.

The SANDMAN STORY



THE PROUD BIRD

HIS beak was long and he had a fat body but his legs, or rather his long feet, were very thin.

"My picture was sent to a little boy the other day," he said.

"Ah, yes," he continued, "I am so handsome a creature that they send my picture about on post cards, anyway at all.

"People so love to see me! For I'm a handsome, colorful bird, as you can see.

"My beak is strong, and I've a good, powerful voice. My picture makes a better pet than I do.

"I wouldn't be a very good pet. I might become nippy. That is a word I thought of myself. Pretty bright of the Amazon Tiger Bittern.

"Of course, I praise myself, too. Well, anyway, when I say nippy I mean that I might nip at some one just as an animal snaps at some one, and he is called snappy."

"My Beak Is Strong, and I've a Good, Powerful Voice."

"We all understand," shrieked the other birds.

A great many new ones had been added to the zoo that year, and though there had been new animals, and new reptiles, sea lions and lots of creatures brought to the zoo, there had been more birds than any others.

"Of course," the Amazon Tiger Bittern continued, "I'm not bad like those vulture creatures.

"There is the South American condor. He is perfectly huge and has no kindliness.

"He will go after a poor, weary old animal and eat him. He is of the vulture family, you know, and his beak is very strong and hooked so that he can tear food into small bits easily.

"He has a bald head and he looks old because he has so many wrinkles, but he isn't so old, and he is very strong.

"He can fly so high, and he has wonderful eyesight, and he also has some friends.

"That is because he is cleanly, and he likes to go about cleaning up places and eating all the old trash.

"Of course, all creatures must have some good points.

"The children are coming from school now to see us.

"Ah, how they rush to see us. They're so pleased to get away from lessons for a while and see really interesting creatures such as we are.

"They will call on the deer and the sobu family, and the monkeys, and they will come to see us, too.

"Sometimes they will not close their mouths all the time they are here.

"For one thing they will be so amazed at the wonderful way we act and also at our marvelous looks, and then they will talk so much to each other and to us.

"They will say:

"'See, isn't he a beauty? Oh, what a magnificent creature!'

"They will mean me, of course," the Amazon Tiger Bittern explained.

"And they will say:

"'Well, he alone is worth coming here to see.'

"Ah, they are in front of me now.

"Well, I must say that it was a visitor who sent my picture away, and Billie Brownie brought the news that the little boy sent a picture of himself to the visitor who had sent my postcard picture.

"It was a most lovely picture of the little boy, his mother said, so Billie Brownie told me.

"You see, I get my news in rather a round-about fashion.

"But the little boy didn't say so about himself. Billie said he was very, very handsome, with bright eyes and such a bright, beautiful expression, and that he looked like a real boy, and very handsome, besides.

"It seems to me the boy would have praised himself up, too, but he didn't. Well, I'm glad he got my picture. If he is handsome he can appreciate a picture of a handsome creature."

But the other birds were cackling with laughter as the children appeared.

For no one could talk more or boast more than the Amazon Tiger Bittern had just been doing—all for his own benefit and pleasure.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"JACK ROBINSON"

OPINION differs as to the proper duration of a social call. "Anywhere from ten minutes to a half hour," says the woman who has a social secretary and whose daily job is "calling," to the tune of tea and wafers. "All afternoon," says the bourgeoise, who takes along her knitting and sits down to coffee and cake. "And then," say some, "it all depends upon the call. On some occasions and with different people we stay longer than others."

But Jack Robinson was a man whose calls never varied. He never stayed long enough to wear out his welcome. In fact, hardly had he been announced, hardly had the servant who admitted him spoken aloud his name than he was gone.

So, as you see, "before you can say Jack Robinson" has no reference to the time it takes to say it. "As long as you can see Jack Robinson" would be more in order with its origin and significance.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

CATS SUCKING BREATH

THERE is a superstition—common all over the country and one believed in probably by the majority of people, with at least a half-belief—that a cat should not be left alone with a sleeping infant as the cat is liable to kill the child by "sucking its breath." This is evidently an echo of the story of Isis and the misfortunes which happened to infants with whom she was brought into contact during her search for the body of Osiris.

The cat was a moon-animal. Isis was the great moon-goddess of the Egyptians. The cat and Isis were intimately associated and Pliny says that the moon may fairly be considered "as the planet of breath"—and the breath to the ancient was the life and the soul as well. Now while searching for the body of Osiris Isis came to the house of a widow who denied her admission. A scorpion crept into the house and killed the widow's child. Isis gave birth to Horis and left him in a swamp where she afterwards found him dead. Thoth restored him to life. A king and queen took Isis in and set her to nurse the child. But they caught her burning away all that was mortal of the infant in order to make him immortal.

Considering these unfortunate occurences with regard to infants in the career of the moon-goddess, that the cat is her creature and that the moon is "the planet of breath" the modern superstition that cats suck the breath of sleeping infants will be seen to have ancient and legitimate pedigree.

Her first stage experience was in amateur theatricals, together with her sisters Constance and Natalie. In 1919 she formed her own producing company. She is regarded as one of the most popular players.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

WHOSE FAULT IS IT?

IT IS always interesting to debate the question whether environment is a more important influence in life than heredity. Without attempting to answer the question, we assume for the moment that environment is the most important for the reason that one has no control over his heredity but he can to a very great extent both create and master his environment.

L. A. Barrett.

Much of the contentment and satisfaction in life is attributable to that attitude of mind which has the power within itself to mold one's environment. In the final analysis life is just about what you make it, or, it is just about as you look at it. Life values are determined not by forces from without but are created by forces from within.

The laws of environment are not definitely or unalterably fixed as are the laws of heredity. No one can be justified therefore in blaming the former for adversities. When misfortunes come to us, the conclusion we oft times hastily reach may be expressed in popular phrases such as these—"Just my luck"—"fates are against me, no good trying"—"I was not born under a lucky star." This attitude of mind naturally leads to self pity which is dangerous for the reason that it robs one of initiative, persistence and determination. Self pity is one of the most perilous deceptions one can entertain. Cast it out!

Rather than blame environment for adversities, why not ask the question in frank honesty, just whose fault is it? If this question is asked seriously another is inevitable. By no means all, but a large share of misfortune is brought on by our own selves and many times needlessly.

The desire for large wealth for instance urges one to take risks which otherwise one would not think of taking. When the venture proves a failure might not part of the responsibility for the failure be with one's own attitude of mind? Instead of being content with a modest income, our over ambitious attitude of mind impels us to hold out for unreasonable returns.

In the social world, friendship sought for material gains soon goes to pieces, and we cry, "misplaced confidence," and blame the other fellow. To what extent is the lack of home training responsible for moral failures of our children? Much of the suffering due to material and moral failures is brought about by ourselves. Let us face the question squarely—Whose fault is it?

Outward things are not in my power, to will is in my power. Where shall I seek the Good, and where the Evil? Within me—in all that is my own.—Epictetus.

UNUSUAL BUT GOOD

We all tire of the same things day after day and when one originates something different it adds new pleasure to life. This is as true with foods as with anything else.

Graham Apple Pie.—Take two dozen crisp graham crackers, roll and crush, add one-eighth pound of melted butter and mix well. Line a pie plate and shape it into a pastry shell. Peel, core, slice and cook one-half dozen good flavored apples. Mix one cupful of sugar, powdered cinnamon to taste, one-eighth pound of butter and a little salt. Do not stir more than just enough to mix. Fill the cracker-lined plate and place in a hot oven for ten minutes. Serve topped with whipped cream. This is a pastry that the children may eat.

Date Butter.—This filling may be made in quantity and stored in glass jars until ready for use. Take one package of dates, one-half pound of layer figs, three-fourths of a cupful of walnut meats. Put the fruit and nuts through the food chopper, add boiling fruit juice enough to moisten. Any canned fruit juice may be used or orange and lemon. Add the liquid until of the consistency to spread. If to be kept do not add as much liquid, adding it when it is to be used. A bit of salt should be added when mixing.

Date Cakes.—Sift together one and one-half cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. To one-fourth cupful of butter add one cupful of sugar and cream, add the grated rind of half an orange and one-half a package of dates sliced. Add one-fourth teaspoonful of soda, the juice of the orange, using one-half cupful. To one cupful of sugar and one-fourth cupful of shortening add flour mixture to the creamed butter and sugar alternately with the orange juice. Pour into gem pans and bake fifteen minutes.

Moisten chopped dates with orange juice, add a few chopped nuts and spread on buttered rounds of Boston brown bread.

WINTER DISHES

This is the time of the year when fried mush, scrapple, griddle cakes and waffles abound.

Polenta. — Take one cupful of corn meal, one teaspoonful of salt, four cupfuls of boiling water, cook until the corn meal is well cooked and thick, add two tablespoonfuls of butter, three-fourths of a cupful of grated cheese, a teaspoonful of scraped onion. Mold and cut into thick slices when cold. Fry until brown, sprinkle with grated cheese and serve hot.

Onion Soup.—Chop two cupfuls of onion, cook in two tablespoonfuls of butter, stirring often. When the onions are tender add four cupfuls of vegetable stock, one teaspoonful of salt, paprika and pepper to taste and two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley.

Spicy Fruit Pie.—Take three-fourths of a cupful of raisins, two cupfuls of finely cut citron or melon rind, three-fourths cupful of brown sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two cupfuls of boiling water, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, the grated rind of half a lemon and orange, one-half teaspoonful each of cinnamon and grated nutmeg. Cook all the ingredients twelve minutes with one tablespoonful of cornstarch mixed with a little cold water. Cool and pour into a pie plate lined with pastry and cover with twisted pastry strips. Bake in a hot oven.

Butterscotch Pie.—Beat the yolks of three eggs, add one cupful of brown sugar mixed with three and one-half tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, two cupfuls of milk and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Cook until thick, add three tablespoonfuls of butter and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Sprinkle with chopped nuts after pouring into a baked pastry shell, cover with a meringue, using the egg whites. Bake until brown. Serve cold.

Peanut Butter Bread.—This makes delicious sandwich bread. Take two cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, one-third of a cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of peanut butter and one and one-half cupfuls of milk. Mix the peanut butter as for biscuits and bake one hour. Keep for a day before cutting.

Liver Fricassee.—Cut one pound of liver into half-inch slices, then into cubes, and soak in salted water for ten minutes. Cook two tablespoonfuls of bacon fat with four tablespoonfuls of flour until brown, adding one tablespoonful of grated onion; add salt, paprika, and enough water to make a sauce. Add the bits of liver which have been parboiled in boiling water. Let stand until well heated, then serve on buttered toast.

METAL CLOTH FOR AFTERNOON; CUTE BLOUSES FOR WEE BOYS

OF COURSE velvets, satins, moires, taffetas, chiffons and silk prints, are all very lovely and very fashionable for the formal afternoon frock. Yet, notwithstanding their favor in the day and evening mode, the "dressy" dress which proclaims last-word sophistication is made of a metallic weave of some sort or other.

Fact is that the gold or silver materia' of this or that evening or afternoon gown declares its formality rather than its manner of styling, for often the dress bespeaks quite tailored treatment, or at least its fashioning is accomplished along simple lines. The interesting part about these very voguish metallic frocks is, that they silver cloth for afternoon wear should receive special mention.

Now for the Small Boy.

There's going to be no such thing as a season of relaxation and unemployed after-holiday hours for mothers of tiny tots. Fashion is seeing to it that mother-dear's fingers shall be kept busy as busy can be lavishing embroidery of the most ornate character on the clothes of her wee ones.

In Paris styles for little boys as well as little girls reflect the vogue for decorative handiwork. The diminutive Parisian lad in the lower picture is wearing an attractive suit of wool crepe the blouse being handsomely embroidered in gay peasant colors. If conform to the usual silhouettes as a rule, a condition made possible because of the sheerness and suppleness of most of the new gold-and-silver weaves, which yield to manipulation with the same ease as other materials.

Were these new-mode metallics made up along fanciful out-of-the-ordinary lines, they would not carry half the thrill which they do, tailored, as they are, so often with utmost simplicity. Then, too, an over-ornate styling might raise the question of the good taste of a fanciful metal gown for daytime wear. However, so sedately are some of these gold-and-silver cloth frocks designed, one does not always discover at first glance that they really are made of metallic weaves.

In the picture the gown bespeaks its ultra modishness in that it is fashioned of silver metallic cloth designed along princess lines. The ensemble idea is carried out by introducing touches of the silver metallic into the making of the black velvet coat. The entire is enhanced with generous bordering of black lynx.

One of the metallics which fashion spotlights for evening wear is printed silver or gold cloth. Their dainty weaves are especially featured for the new short evening wraps. Charming frocks are also made of these pretty flowered and otherwise patterned sheer metal weaves. In citing the importance of metallics in the fabric mode, the vogue for the blouse of gold or a little French boy can look this cunning in an embroidered outfit, it goes without saying that a wee American is sure to look just as prepossessing. Therefore it behooves mothers to get busy and "doll up" juniors' and little sisters' wardrobes with much ornate stitchery for "time is fast a flying" and spring house-cleaning season will be here before you know it.

The designing of children's apparel becomes more and more interesting, now that the traditional sky blues and baby pinks are giving way to modernistic colorings and patternings. Embroidery is not the only way of achieving color touches which are unique and outstanding, for many methods are being employed, such as hem stitching done in contrasting shades. High-color pipings and bindings are especially featured throughout juvenile styling.

Such novel color schemes are worked out with gay yarns as pockets and motifs done in red, blue and yellow all-over cross-stitch so as to form solid splotches of color here and there on a little frock of white wool crepe.

Another Paris-made dress for a little girl is fashioned of white crepe satin exquisitely embellished with sprays of very fine tapestry embroidery.

Striking color combinations include such effects as a one-piece frock which uses an orange-capucine shade for the lower section, with lighter yellow for the blouse top, the two shades of yellow carried out in embroidered borderings.

Light green is one of the pretty colorings featured for youngsters. Sometimes the color ensemble is worked out with a coat of nile green flannel, the same posed over a frock either of handkerchief linen or silk crepe in the identical green.

Community Building

Builder Must Remember Years May Bring Change

Land is said to be developed to its highest and best use when the structure on it produces a larger return than any other building would produce, but it should be noted that this return must have a reasonable persistence. In other words, in the case of a home site, the owner should assure himself that the house he is building on it will return the satisfaction and enjoyment described above for a good long period of time.

Land that is developed today with a home of exactly the right type may fall in the path of a city's industrial progress, and, as this encroachment closes around it, the home becomes less and less the best structure for the plot and its value as a homesite decreases. At the same time, with the change in the character of the neighborhood, the amount of satisfaction and enjoyment secured from the home is decreased until perhaps the location becomes unbearable, when all satisfaction and enjoyment disappears. Of course, the loss of value in such a property as a homesite may be offset eventually by an increase in value for an industrial or commercial site, but this rise in value does not usually come about at once. There is a period of transition, when the neighborhood is declining as a residential site and yet has not yet ripened to maturity as a commercial area. Moreover many people who establish permanent homes do not like to see such changes even if they bring about higher values, nor do they like to move out of districts that have become home to them.

All Conveniences for Maryland "Model City"

A model city embracing all the latest ideas of community centers will be built by the Davison Chemical company on a site embracing 400 acres, near its plant at Curtis Bay, Maryland.

Central heating and refrigeration plants will be operated by the company, enabling residents to have modern conveniences. The city will be known as Davison. A harmonious plan of architecture is to be employed so that groups of houses will not be definitely unlike and yet not lack individuality.

In the center of the model town a community quadrangle is to be built for stores, shops and a moving picture theater or hall. It will be surrounded by a broad space where autos can park without charge.

One corner of the development will be used for a park which will include tennis courts, a baseball diamond and a football field. Hills and level land stretching southward will prove ample for building a golf links if desired. At the opposite end space will be reserved for a school and churches.

Encourage Tree Planting

Property owners are to be encouraged to plant more shade trees, and garden club directors have outlined a manner of planting by which the appearance of property may be enhanced, and by which certain characteristics as between adjoining properties may be preserved. The recommendation as to trees especially suited for the local climate and soil should be valuable, indeed.

The plan to encourage tree planting in the parking strips of vacant lots is also well worth while, and helps to round out a program which should mean much in adding to the city's natural beauty.—Bend (Ore.) Tribune.

Consider Improvements

Now is the time to think about improving your home. Is your home new or out of date? Is it comfortable and convenient, or lacking in some of the things that make life sweeter?

If your answer shows that equipment is needed, then you should join the home modernizing movement.

You should devote your thought and efforts toward making the home a more pleasant place in which to live.

There is no need to delay. You can start now as well as later. And the sooner you begin your plans, the sooner you will enjoy the delights of a modern, well-appointed home.

Trees Along Highway

The new state highway department should make some arrangements with the land owners along the many highways of the state to beautify these driveways by planting roses and other beautifying flowers, and pecan trees along its edge. Let these trees overlap the highway and the public can gather the nuts that fall in the road. The land owners could donate the land and the state the trees. Let's have the beautiful as we go along. It is just as easy as having things that are not pleasing to the eye.—Centerville (Ore.) Press.

Careful Lawn Planting

Great care should be taken that one does not overdo the planting on his lawn in his zeal to make it attractive. Spotty lawn planting should always be avoided. Shrubbery should be massed effectively as border, screen and division and foundation planting; some evergreens should always be included; they are beautiful in themselves, and add a zest to the winter landscape that nothing else can equal.

Common Artistic Error in Depicting New Moon

Artists accustomed to inserting a new moon in a picture in the most artistic position often transgress the laws of nature, as the horns of the crescent moon must always point in a definite direction, depending primarily on the latitude of the observer.

In the north temperate zone the new moon as seen just after sunset always points upward and to the left. In this latitude the sun circles to the south and, as it approaches the western horizon descends obliquely from left to right. The new moon, following the sun, takes approximately the same course, and since the horns always point away from the sun, they turn upward and to the left.

In the southern part of the earth the reverse is true, while in the tropics the horns point almost directly upward. The position of the old moon as it rises in the morning is the reverse of that of the new moon as viewed from the same latitude.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

WHEN IT LOOKS DARK to any weak, nervous or ailing woman, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to her aid. Women in every walk of life today say Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a reliable medicine. It is made from roots and herbs, sold by druggists, in both fluid and tablets.

One woman who used it said: "For about four years I was in miserable health, so run-down and weak my nerves were all gone. I could not sleep, was all dragged out, pale and thin. It seemed that all the strength and energy I ever had were gone. I finally began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it built me up, restored my nerves, I felt and looked so well one would think I never had a sick day."—Mrs. Della Sherer, 1629 E. M., Thursday night in the Corunna school house at 8 P. M., Friday in the Butler city hall at 1 P. M. and Friday night in the Waterloo library at 8 P. M. Monday evening a meeting was held at St. Joe school house.

Knew and Liked Americans

The St. Mihiel cemetery, as it is officially called, is perhaps the most visited by the people of France of any American cemetery. Like all of our battlefield burial grounds it lies on land redeemed from the enemy by our arms, in this instance it happens that the area set free by American forces was a populous region, and surrounded by a populous region. Also it is a region where Americans lived and trained and fought for many months, and the people of those cities and towns and farm villages really knew the Americans, and really liked them.

Inspiration From Graves

The work and influence of those who made the great sacrifice will not be buried and rest in oblivion. There will be an inspiration flowing from the graves of those who served their country speaking patriotism and loyalty, holding the nation true to its ideals and pointing the way to its zenith of glory.—Exchange.

THE FLYING ACE!

The Human Comet—Zooming
In Thrilling, Death-Defying Stunts!
at the
MOOSEVILLE FAIR!
TODAY

KURT ROHMER brought his low-hung yellow roadster to a stop in front of the Mooseville general store to read the flaming poster in the window.

"I'll go down to the big shindig," he thought.

The big roadster shot down the highway toward the fair grounds, leaving a trail of dust and of gasping natives in its wake. He could hear the throb of a motor in the air, and he drew the Yellow Tiger—it was his name for the car—up to the edge of the field just as the plane zoomed over the hill and banked for the downward swoop.

Fascinated, he saw it come nearer and nearer. It lifted a little—lost altitude again—and shot right at the car. Instinctively Kurt ducked. There was the roar of a thousand devils in his ears, a rending tear of canvas, and the plane shot upward; hanging in shreds from its wheels was all that was left of the canvas top of the car.

Kurt drew a long breath. He thrust his head upward through the twisted remnants of metal. "Human comet—my hat!" he whistled softly. "That guy must be a meteor!" He watched the plane circle over the field and swoop down to land at the far end of the grounds. The pilot jumped from the cockpit and came dashing across the field.

"I'm awfully sorry I scalped your car!" With a single gesture the Flying Ace snatched off helmet and goggles and tossed back an unruly mop of wavy chestnut hair. "I—I didn't mean to, really."

Kurt's eyes opened wide with amazement. Why, this was just a girl—Aubrey Weston! He grinned at her. "What do you do with the scalps you collect? Hang 'em on the propeller for a souvenir?"

"Oh, this is really my first scalp. You ought to be honored!"

Mr. Barnard came running up to her. "I'm sorry, Miss Weston, but I'll have to cancel that agreement I made with you. These people have all seen loops before. That's nothing new."

Kurt somehow hated to see the hurt in her eyes.

Suddenly she smiled. "Want to go up?"

The game little kid! She wouldn't admit she was beaten. Well, he wouldn't go back on her now. "Let 'er go!" he called.

Aubrey was flying a bit wild. She taxied bumpily over the ground, gained altitude with an upward sweep that set Kurt's ears ringing, and zoomed off toward the lake. Suddenly she banked and headed back in the direction of the fair. Over the edge of the plt Kurt could see the milling black specks that were the people.

They were directly over the field when it happened. Aubrey was flying high. Perhaps they hit an air pocket; perhaps almost anything—But there they were headed for the earth with a sickening speed. There was Aubrey standing in her cockpit frantically signaling him to jump; there was Kurt waving back at her, and shaking his head. There was the hard ground coming up fast, to meet them. And suddenly there was a jerk, a shudder of the whole plane, a rocking in the air, and the machine straightened out and slid along level with the ground, just above the hill!

As they taxied across the field, Kurt could hear above the roar of the motor the shouting of the crowd. They swarmed around the plane. Mr. Barnard came pushing through to Aubrey.

"That was marvelous!" he said. Great heavens, the man thought she had done it on purpose. "That was wonderful, Miss Weston. A remarkable exhibition of control. I'll take back what I said about the contract. And I'll give you another hundred to do it again!"

Kurt leaned over the edge of the pit. "She won't do it again today, Mr. Barnard," he said. "That was the grand climax. The show is over."

He held out his hand to Aubrey as she climbed from the plane. "Come over to the car," he said. They drove silently away to a quiet spot.

Aubrey looked very small and white. "Now, we'll hear just what it was that happened up there, anyway," he told her, but his voice was very gentle.

"It slipped," said Aubrey. "I thought if you'd jump it would be all right. But when you stayed, I just sat down again and grabbed that stick—like hec! I couldn't let anything happen to you!"

A few minutes later she said softly, "I guess I'm not much of an Ace. I'm only a Joker."

And Kurt answered tenderly, "Oh, Aubrey, you're not only an Ace, but a Queen—of Hearts."

Expression Defined

The correctness of the expression "of that ilk" depends upon how it is used. Ilk is a Scotch word, meaning "same." One could say "Fairfax of that ilk," meaning "Fairfax of Fairfax" if the estate bore the same name. "Of that ilk," does not mean of that sort, kind or class.

ROAD BUILDING TO GET NEW IMPETUS

Highway Officials Make Plans in Line With President's Program.

(By James W. Brooks—Director, American Highway Educational Bureau.)

Impelled by forces now getting behind public work of every character, and especially under the leadership of President Hoover, plans are in the making for increased activity in road building as one of the most far-reaching and constructive agencies in national progress.

In preparation for this objective, and for the consideration of other matters concerning highway improvement, members of the American Association of State Highway Officials have just held their regular annual meeting at San Antonio, Texas. This body is composed exclusively of highway officials who represent every state in the Union, and who also co-operate closely with the federal government in the administration of federal aid. At this meeting, legislative and financial needs in highway work for the immediate future were discussed and a resolution was passed recommending to congress that the federal aid appropriation be increased to $125,000,000.

Federal Aid Project.

In carrying on their part of the nation's work, highway officials are stressing the importance of completing the main federal aid project as originally planned. This plan, it will be recalled, was to complete state and interstate routes first in order to save motor vehicle revenues from the drain of excessive repair costs where roads are not built sufficiently strong in the first instance to sustain heavy traffic.

As to the wisdom of proceeding with increased activity on the original program, those in highway leadership assert that they are in line with President Hoover's engineering views on such matters. These views were expressed in one of his pre-election speeches at St. Louis and again on his recent visit to Cincinnati and Louisville in connection with waterway improvement. Tersely stated, it was the President's expressed judgment that trunk line waterways should be improved first, and highway officials in their recent conferences at San Antonio have again attested to the soundness of that principle as a means of conserving and making the safest possible use of highway construction capital.

Use of Highways.

Taking the country as a whole, the use of public highways is increasing at an amazing rate, likewise motor vehicle operating waste is increasing where highways have not yet been brought up to modern standards in construction. This situation may be taken as a lesson that not only should there be no let up in road building, especially on routes that are heavily traveled, but that public work of this character should be intensified. It may be taken also as a reminder that there should be no evasion of the obligation due to motorists who have acquiesced in gasoline tax levies in the various states upon the assurance that the main traffic channels of the country would be pressed to completion as early as possible and thus take care of between 75 and 85 per cent of the country's traffic before attempting to stretch the federal aid principle beyond its present scope.

With the initiative which President Hoover is taking in all internal improvement matters, it is expected that highway building soon will be greatly increased and thereafter maintained at a speed that will insure not only sustained employment in that particular field, but great profit to the country.

Carbon May Be Present

Use of high volatility, antiknocking gas may remove the noise traditionally associated with the presence of carbon in the engine, but it does not always mean that carbon is absent. Particularly after a winter of frequent choke use, there is likely to be carbon even if it is not causing the familiar old knock. It should be removed if inspection reveals an excess. Why not test the valve springs at the same time?

The Motor Quiz

How Many Can You Answer?

Q. Why should tires be changed from one wheel to another?

Ans. More mileage can be obtained from them if this is done. Tires that are run in the same position continuously develop wear peculiar to that position and if changed about wear is distributed.

Q. Why should the dust that collects on the headlight lenses be removed?

Ans. To improve illumination.

Q. What other effect, aside from safety, results from the brakes being kept in good condition?

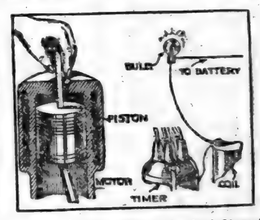
Ans. Conservation of the driver's energy.

Q. What will be the result if spark plugs are insecurely installed in the cylinder?

Ans. Leakage of hot gases between the plug and cylinder threads will occur, causing the plug to run too hot, resulting in loss of power.

Spark Time Indicator Is Very Useful Device

It is difficult to locate the exact point at which the contacts in the timer break and thereby cause the spark in the cylinder. You can, however, wire an electric light bulb, as shown, to get an absolute indication of the exact moment when the contact breaks. One terminal of the bulb is wired directly to the battery and the other to the terminal of the coil that is connected to the timer. When the contacts are closed the bulb will light.



When the Timer Contacts Are Closed, the Bulb Lights; When They Break, the Light Goes Out.

When the contacts break, the bulb will go out.

This method of timing or checking the ignition system is one which will be found helpful not only to the garage mechanic but to the motorist who works on his own car in his spare time. It does away with guesswork, and because of its simplicity of operation saves considerable time on the job.—Popular Science Monthly.

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, his motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has affected Mr. Tolliver's eyes to the point of threatened blindness. Marjory wins the beauty prize, $50.00. She gives the money to her father to consult Chicago specialists. Mr. Tolliver leaves for Chicago with Miriam. Ginger meets Alexander Murdock. Mr. Tolliver returns, the doctors giving him little hope. Ginger gets an idea for a "Parsonage Home for the Blind" and solicit funds. She gets results at once. Helen is married and leaves the parsonage.

CHAPTER V

When Miriam went to Chicago with her father, Miss Jenkins moved across to the parsonage to remain with the two girls. Miss Jenkins was glad to do this. The girls felt it was for that she had followed them about through a series of three charges, that now and then, in emergencies, she could step largely into the household and assist in its management.

Still came discouraging reports from the city. Mr. Tolliver was "run down," on a high nervous tension, mentally strained. Orders were more peremptorily curt than ever. The doctors could not offer any possible hope for the ultimate recovery of his sight unless he followed their regime, which called for absolute rest, an abundance of fresh air, good wholesome food, and complete mental freedom. The girls at home, in conference with Miss Jenkins, considered this bitterly.

"How can a man rest when he has to support a family, and keep peace in a whole church?" wondered Marjory.

"Of course, later on, I shall be able to take care of him," said Ginger, "but he seems to need taking care of now."

The girls were so well used to Ginger's largeness of expectations that her remark called forth no discussion of ways and means. Besides, they were far too depressed for argument. A growing horror preyed upon their thoughts—permanent blindness—a horror which they tried to kill by ignoring.

When Eddy Jackson called on the telephone, it was a welcome diversion.

"I thought perhaps you would like to go alone with me in the car," he offered, "and tell me all your secrets, and ask my advice about investing this fortune of yours."

Eddy Jackson had been her only confidant concerning her hoped-for fortune.

Ginger promptly accepted the invitation, delicately passing over the hint as to her confidence.

"Now you are not invited, Marjory," she said firmly, when Marjory offered to join them. "I want to talk business with Eddy Jackson, and you know what chance I have to talk business when you and your complexion are around."

Fearful that she sight of the car would drive her sister to more open desire, she was waiting at the curb when Eddy drove up. And in a moment they were rolling off to the country.

"You see, it is a long time since you bought those bonds," he said, "and I thought you might need help in clipping the coupons."

"If you are trying to be funny," she said, "I don't mind telling you that—my business—is off to a very good start. Unfortunately, the first returns are not large ones. And right now is when I want it most." She sighed a little.

"What's the matter? Bad news from your father? What do the doctors say?"

"Just what they have been saying for five months. He is worn out, nervous and weak. His eyes can't get well until the rest of him is stronger. A nervous shock may make him blind—forever. Oh, Eddy, I'm going to give him everything he needs—time to play, the best things in the world to eat, and fresh air, and mountains, and seashores—everything, after while. But he needs it now!"

"How soon do you expect to be able to do these things?"

Ginger figured, painfully, counting on her fingers, her lips moving. "Well—I'm afraid—I couldn't do very much—not so very much—for maybe six months. Maybe longer. I don't exactly know. And he may be entirely blind by then."

They drove for a while in silence.

"Ginger, your inspiration is catching. I have a good idea myself. A quiet atmosphere, fresh air, good country food, pure milk. Well, what's the matter with Pay Dirt?"

Ginger did not understand.

"Why, send him out to Pay Dirt for a rest. He won't have any salt air, but he'll have complete quiet and a rest. He won't have any mountain breezes, but he'll have unadulterated Iowa. He won't have any French menus but plenty of fresh eggs and good milk, and chicken three times a day if he wants it. And it won't cost him a cent. You can come along, to read to him, and walk with him, and sort of jolly him along. You can have the right wing—two little bedrooms, and a bath. He shall rest until he is sick of resting. He sha'n't marry, bury, or preach. He shall just lie around in the sun, and lounge in the hammock, and eat and sleep—and you can make him laugh."

"But Eddy—the church!"

"Oh, hang the church. Give 'em a vacation—do 'em good. The best way to make some people appreciate their religion is to take it away from 'em for a while. But anyhow, if we can't go to such extremes, and I dare say your father would object, we can get a student preacher to fill in for a month or six weeks. Best thing all the way round. I'm a member myself, and I'll go to old Jop this very day, and get things started. We'd better have it all fixed before your father comes back, for he just might have an objection or so. Now you be ready to come out with him—"

And in a Moment They Were Rolling Off to the Country.

"Miriam will have to go with father. Remember—I have my own personal business to look after at home."

"Oh, is that the way of it? Well, Miriam then—anybody. And the rest of you must come out and visit very often to keep him from getting lonesome. I wonder we didn't think of this before. Why, it is just the thing all the way around. It will tickle mother to have some one around for her to make a fuss over, and your father—You see, Ginger, when he is at home, he can't rest. He lives every minute five times over, once for himself, and once for each of you girls. Oh, there are only three of you now. But there's Jenky. And when you want things he can't affor., it simply makes him sick. And when the bills come in, and he hasn't the money! Rest? How could any man rest! Get him away from it, that's the ticket."

"Oh, Eddy!" Ginger was spellbound at the depth of his understanding. "Isn't it too bad you haven't got a family of your own? Why you'd be perfectly wonderful with children—just like father."

So Eddy, with some reluctance, turned the car back from the pleasant lanes, and went into consultation with Marjory and Miss Jenkins.

"I asked Ginger to come out with her father," he said frankly, "for she looks pale and tired, and I thought the change might do her good. But she says Miriam. Ginger has affairs of her own which require her continued presence in the city—at least, she says so, though she did not take me into her confidence. At any rate, I shall make arrangements for Miriam and your father at Pay Dirt."

"And Ginger—and the rest of us—will come and visit," promised Marjory, with a sly smile for the young man. But she added, with great seriousness, "Eddy, I think you are a dear good boy. You are so sympathetic and so generous it simply isn't fair, it leads us to expect too much of human nature."

"And it will be the best thing in the world for father," interpolated Ginger proudly. "And something we can well afford—since it doesn't cost anything."

"Eddy, believe me," added Miss Jenkins almost tearfully, "you shall have your reward for the good you are doing."

"Well," he said facetiously, "I hope the reward happens to be the thing I want. The worst thing about rewards is that they are usually just what you want least."

"What do you want especially?" demanded Ginger, her thoughts flying to the future affluence attendant upon her home for the blind.

"Something that I dare say will disagree with me if I ever get it," he replied, laughing. "But I want it."

"Don't eat anything that will give you indigestion," she continued. "I had it after the strawberry festival. It's terrible."

Quietly then they made their plans for their father's return. Eddy promised to go that same day to Joplin Westbury, treasurer of the official board of the Methodist Episcopal church at Red Thrush, trustee, steward, and vice chairman, to ask for a month's vacation for Mr. Tolliver, to take effect the following Saturday. This would allow a full month after his return for winding up affairs in the old church before the formal dedication of the new.

When Eddy broached the subject to Joplin Westbury, that influential man acquiesced with an alacrity which rather disconcerted than pleased him. He was prepared for arguments, expostulations, complaints about expenses. Instead of this Joplin Westbury listened gravely, with his shrewd eyes reflectively narrowed, nodding his head in tacit agreement. Indeed, there was something very much akin to relief in his manner.

Only one minor detail he wished altered. Mr. Tolliver needed more than a mere four weeks of rest, he must have eight weeks—his vacation must continue until the formal dedication of the church.

"We've got things well in hand, now, and what's left can wait until we've moved over. If a little rest will do him good, a big rest will do more. And that will bring us up nearly to the fall conference, and if he is well, why, good. And if not—why, there's no harm done."

A somewhat cryptic remark, but when Eddy Jackson asked for explanation, Joplin Westbury was noncommittal.

"Oh, nothing—nothing at all. But it's good to be prepared for any possible emergencies—both in the church—and out."

Joplin Westbury was as good as his word. He had the district superintendent on the long-distance telephone by nine o'clock the next morning, and upon statement of their needs, was gratified by a piece of rare good fortune. The superintendent had at his disposal a brilliant young minister, a graduate of Drew Theological seminary, who had just returned from a year's special study in England, and was even now awaiting the convening of the conference for his assignment. The practice in active ministry would be a very fine thing for him, and he could be secured at a nominal figure.

In the meantime, Mrs. Westbury had telephoned the members of the board, announcing a special meeting to be held that evening, which was a mere matter of routine to legalize the arrangement, for Joplin Westbury had already sent a telegram to Hiram Buckworth, stating the details of his proposition, and had received an acceptance that very afternoon. Hiram Buckworth promised to arrive in Red Thrush on the afternoon train, on Saturday, ready to officiate on the Sabbath, and requested them to arrange for his room and board in Red Thrush, with the parsonage family, if possible.

Joplin Westbury considered this a particularly lucky stroke, and reported his success to Eddy Jackson with great gusto. Eddy hastened to announce his progress to the girls at the parsonage.

"You see, by boarding this Buckworth chap, you can pay all of your expenses in the parsonage. Mr. Tolliver and Miriam are company at Pay Dirt, so that you can save the whole two months' salary to pay for his treatments in Chicago."

Poisoned Food Vainly Set Out to Kill Rats

Recently a well-known school teacher in a Lewis (Hebrides) public school told the following rat story: "Last spring a family of rats invaded his barn. To get rid of the undesirable visitors, he got a supply of a rat poison and spread it one night on the floor of the outhouse, thereafter locking the door to prevent any of his domestic animals entering and eating the food. Next morning, he found, to his amazement, the untouched food, covered over with a layer of chaff which was lying in a heap near at hand. He asked his wife if she had been to the barn, but was answered in the negative. However, on the following night he first removed the heap of chaff and put down the poisoned food as before. On the following morning he was further mystified to find the food still untouched, but on this occasion it was covered with a piece of old sacking which was lying in a corner of the premises. Next night the rats took their departure.

Owe "Dailies" to War

The Civil war revolutionized the habits of the people, writes Warren F. Spalding in the Boston Transcript. All their movements, mental and physical, were quickened. Having had the news of the war day by day, they never returned to the old ways. The daily newspaper was the child of the Civil war. People became accustomed to having news every day. They found that other things were interesting, and they must have the news about everything every day; the daily newspaper had become indispensable.

SO COOL HE FORGOT

A few minutes after an alarm of fire was given in a hotel, one of the guests joined the group that was watching the fire, and chaffed them on their apparent excitement. "There was nothing to be excited about," he said. "I took my time about dressing, lighted a cigarette, didn't like the knot in my necktie, so tied it over again—that's how cool I was."

"Fine," one of his friends remarked, "but why didn't you put on your pants?"

No "Excuse It, Please"

"Yes, lady, getting the wrong number got me here," said prisoner No. 71123.

"Dear, dear!" exclaimed the old lady visitor, "I suppose you used such profane language the telephone company complained."

"No," replied the prisoner; "you see, the officers found I had three wives."

NOT NECESSARILY BETTER

First Girlie—You say you like him because he's a better man?

Second Girlie—No—a petter man.

Practical Economies

A fortune great may grow,
And yet, before he's through with it,
A man may scarcely know
Precisely what to do with it.

Cold Comfort

Gerald—You don't seem pleased when I suggest you have a lovely disposition.

Clarice—I'm not. Telling a girl she has a lovely disposition is usually an apology for not being able to say she is either good-looking or interesting.

Can Depend on One Nation

"This nation cannot be trusted to support and defend liberty?"

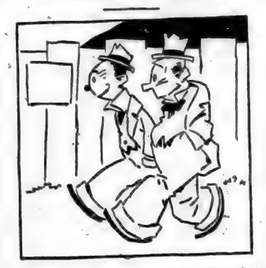
"No; the only nation that can be depended upon to do that is indignation."

A Trick of the Trade

The Salesman — These imported breakfast robes don't go very well.

The Manager—Advertise 'em next week as ladies' smoking jackets; that'll move 'em.

SHIPPED WEST



"Prehistoric oysters were found in the Potomac river recently."

"Yes, I think I ate some of them in a restaurant the other day."

But Today's Nights

In days of old when knights were bold
Politeness held its reign,
Men of that tribe would not describe
Their lady as a "jane."

She Meant Well

Mrs. B. (writing to beloved traveler husband)—Dearest, day and night my thoughts are with you always. Sleeping, I dream of you; waking in the morning and seeing your bathrobe hanging on the bed post, I wish it were you.

The Unexpected Answer

Fed-up Motorist (tinkering with old car)—First car you ever saw, I suppose?

Ruralist—Noa, sur, but it's very much loike it.

Modernism

"Alas!" sighed the disappointed suitor, "the girl of my dreams has married another and all hope of winning her is gone."

"Cheer up," advised his best friend, "she'll probably be back in circulation again by this time next year."

An Apt Pupil

Old Mr. Fewlox—Don't you think in time you might learn to love me?

Young Miss Goldilox—Well, if I had a nice young tutor I might learn the theory of it.

THE BAPTISM AND TEMPTATION OF JESUS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 3:1-4:11 (Print Matt. 3:13-4:11).

GOLDEN TEXT—This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Was Baptized.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Baptism and Temptation of Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Facing His Life Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Triumphing Over Temptation.

I. The Baptism of Jesus, the King (3:13-17).

While the forerunner was discharging his office, the King emerged from His seclusion at Nazareth and demanded baptism at John's hands. The incongruity of this demand with the purpose of baptism brought from John a protest, but upon Jesus' satisfactory explanation, John baptized Him. Touching Christ's baptism, note:

1. Its significance. (1) Negatively. a. It did not mean His mere obedience to the commandment of God, because His entire life had been lived within the will of God. There was not a moment in His life but what was lived fully in accordance with the Father's will. b. Not because He had sinned, for He was absolutely sinless, harmless, undefiled—separate from sinners. This separation was so complete that even the devil could find no occasion against Him (John 14:30).

(2) Positively. Its significance is found in harmony with the central purpose of His coming into the world, which was to secure for His people salvation through death and resurrection. This act was the official entrance upon His work. It was an act of consecration on His part to the work of saving His people through sacrifice.

While baptism is a sinner's ordinance, Christ was baptized not because He had sinned, but because He took the place of sinners to be a substitute for them. In this He who knew no sin was made sin for us that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him (II Cor. 5:21).

2. Approval from the opened heavens (vv. 16, 17).

Immediately following His consecration to His work, the heavens were opened and the Spirit came and abode upon him, followed by words of approval from the Father.

II. The Temptation of Jesus, the King (4:1-11).

Being thus commissioned for His work, His ability to meet the one whose destruction He had come to accomplish, must be demonstrated (Heb. 2:14). This temptation was the opening battle of the dreadful conflict between Christ and Satan. In this struggle note:

1. The battleground—wilderness of Judea (v. 1).

The first man was tempted in a garden with the most pleasant surroundings, and failed. The second Man was tempted in a bare wilderness, and gloriously triumphed.

2. The method of attack (vv. 3-9).

Since, as the Redeemer of mankind, Christ sustains a threefold relationship, the Son of Man, the Son of God, and as Messiah, each one was made a ground of attack. (1) As Son of Man. This was a test of the reality of His humanity to demonstrate as to whether the humanity which He obtained through the virgin birth was real. The appeal was made to the instinct of hunger. Hunger is natural and sinless. (2) As the Son of God. It was a test as to whether this personality which had taken upon itself humanity, was divine. The devil quoted from a Messianic psalm to induce Jesus to presume upon God's care. God does really care for His own, but to neglect common precautions to do the uncalled for thing, just to put God's promise to a test, is to sin and to fall. (3) As the Messiah. Christ's mission as the Messiah was to recover this world from the devil. The devil offered to surrender to Him on the simple condition that He adopt his method, thus obviating the necessity of the cross.

3. The defense—the Word of God (vv. 4, 7, 10).

Christ met the enemy each time and repulsed him with "It is written." Each time he quoted from Deuteronomy—the book which the higher critics would discredit as unreliable. Jesus had enough confidence in it to use it in this the most crucial hour of the world's history.

4. The issue (v. 11).

The enemy was completely routed. The strong man was bound, so that the spoiling of his house was possible.

To Secure Salvation

"But what can mortal man do to secure his own salvation?" Mortal man can do just what God bids him do. He can repent and believe. He can arise and follow Christ as Matthew did.—W. Gladden.

For the Millions

Christ appeals to the soul as light appeals to the eye, as truth fits the conscience, as beauty speaks to the esthetic nature.—The American Magazine.

LIFE OF ADOLPHUS KESTER WHO DIED AT BUTLER

Adolphus Kester, son of Peter S. and Annabelle Widney Kester, was born in Wilmington township, near Butler, Ind., Sept. 20, 1849. He grew to manhood and started his life work in that neighborhood. March 6, 1873, he was married to Louise Catherine Fridenberger. To this union were born five children: Minnie, who in young womanhood passed on before; Bessie, wife of Rev. D. C. Hollinger of Toledo, O.; Atlanta, now Mrs. R. D. Cather of near Butler; A. J. Kester of Butler and Helen, married to S. R. Wells of East Chicago, Ind.

After forty-one years of happy companionship, the wife and mother was called above in May, 1914.

On July 22, 1916, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Ada Maurer of Auburn, who was his faithful companion till the day of his departure, Dec. 27, 1929.

Throughout his natural life he served an ever widening community as carpenter and building contractor. For eight years he gave his best thought and effort as a member of the Butler city council.

He was converted and united with the church in a union meeting held March, 1870, at the Wesleyan Methodist Church south of Butler. When the Mr. Pleasant U. B. Church was organized, he was one of the charter members. For many years he was superintendent of the Sunday School at that church. When the family located in Butler Nov., 1897, he affiliated with the Butler U. B. Church. Here again he served as Sunday School superintendent, also as class leader and in other official capacities.

Besides the wife and four children, the deceased leaves one brother, Dr. A. A. Kester of Fort Wayne; one sister, Mrs. E. B. Nimmons of Butler, nineteen grandchildren, four great grandchildren, and a wide circle of friends to mourn his departure.

The last days of his life were made more comfortable by the loving hands of his wife, children and grandchildren, who were at his bedside to the last, and he was borne to his last resting place by his grandsons. Surely, it is a wonderful heritage to have had such a father.

Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. F. B. Parker, assisted by Rev. Stelle and Rev. Aldrich on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 29, at the Butler U. B. Church. Burial took place in the Mt. Pleasant cemetery.

The will of the late A. S. Kester was admitted to probate in the DeKalb circuit court Saturday. It was executed Jan. 9, 1919, with W. H. Wolcott and Frank A. Brink as witnesses. All the personal property was devised to the testator's wife, Ada Kester, and she was given the rentals from the real estate for the first year after his death. Three daughters, Bessie L. Hollinger, Atlanta Cather and Helen B. Wells, are given all the real estate, consisting of 60 feet off the east end of lots 54 and 55 in the original plat of Butler, and the south one-third of lot 7 in Danforth's addition to Butler. Mr. Kester added that he had provided for his son, James Arthur Kester, by deeding him land in Wilmington township.

WINTER VEGETABLE DISHES

(By Betty Barclay)

When fresh vegetables are scarce and expensive the wise housewife will turn to the canned variety. By the use of skill and ingenuity in their preparation she will have little difficulty in banishing her family's regrets for the fresh peas, corn, asparagus and lima beans of the summer months.

The main objectives in preparing canned, or for that matter dried vegetables for the table should be variety and the accentuation of their original flavors. The first can be achieved by a willingness to try new recipes. As for the latter, a little sugar, used not as a sweetener but as a seasoning agent, will do wonders in bringing back the flavors which the vegetables possessed when they were picked in the garden.

Corn and Pepper Scallop

To two cups of canned corn add one half cup milk, one finely chopped green pepper, one finely chopped red pimento, one teaspoon sugar, one teaspoon salt, and one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Fill greased individual ramekins one-third full. Then sprinkle with fine bread crumbs, and continue another layer of the corn mixture. Sprinkle again with bread crumbs, and continue the process until the ramekins are full. Sprinkle bread crumbs on top, and dot each ramekin with a half teaspoon of butter. Bake for ten or twelve minutes in on oven at 450 degrees.

Savory String Beans

Shred two medium-size onions and saute them in bacon fat until tender and lightly browned. Add 1 pint strained, canned tomatoes. Season with one teaspoon salt, one-fourth teaspoon pepper, dash of cayenne, two cloves and two teaspoons sugar. Bring to a boil and add one quart canned string beans. Simmer for about fifteen minutes. Add a teaspoon of butter and serve.

At Gettysburg

(From Harper's Magazine.)

HARVEST

ONLY the seasons and the years invade
These quiet wheatfields where the armies crashed,
And mocking birds and quail fly unafraid
Within the forest where the rifles flashed.
Here where the bladed wings of death have mown
And gleaned their harvestry of golden lives
The fruitful seeds of corn and wheat are sown,
And where the cannon smoked an orchard thrives.

Long are the war years over, with their pain,
Their passionate tears and fury, and the sun
Lies hot and yellow on the heavy grain,
And all the fighting on these fields is done,
But in their peace the quivering heart recalls
The youth that bled beside these old stone walls.

THE CEMETERY

HERE Lincoln stood, in strong simplicity,
And spoke the brief, immortal word that rings
Forever over earth and over sea,
With echo of all brief, immortal things.
Beneath these numbered stones how many sleep
Who beat against the bolted gates of death,
And entered in so swiftly none might keep
Their names that vanished with their yielded breath!

But not in vain these unknown dead have died,
Nor these whose names are clearly carven there.
Above their rest the wings of Love are wide . . .
There is a sense of glory in the air.
Here Lincoln stood, on this blood-quickened sod,
And gave himself, these graves, this land, to God.

HAPPY NEW YEAR, Daddy!" was Martha's timid greeting as she entered the room where the shades were drawn. Her father had been so despondent since the tired little mother was gone. "Nothing ever goes right for me," he would say.

To Martha's greeting he scarce replied. Suddenly inspired she caught his hand and led him out into their Southland garden, fresh with dew, to an easy chair in a rose bower flooded with sunlight—then ran away to play. Half dazed, the disconsolate one plucked a red rose and pressed the cool petals to his cheek. . . .

A bird of the self-same hue alighted on the trellis. "You beautiful bird, how came you here?" asked the surprised man. "You are sad," sang the bird, "I came to wish you a happy New Year." "How sweetly you sing, little bird—but you are happy. How came you to have such marvelous crimson feathers?"

Then the little bird sang such a song as mortals seldom hear. In a glorious burst of melody the story came from the bird of the crimson feather.

In a day that has long been forgotten by all save the red-bird's world, our species was the sombre one in a land where birds of brilliant plumage dwelt. The King of our Flock was sore ashamed and very, very sad.

It chanced one day that he was flying near the shore and saw his poor reflection in a muddy pool. Filled with self pity he resolved to leave this bird-bright land for a distant shore where he could hide himself. A great ship was raising anchor. He knew not whither the ship was bound, but he hid himself on the deck. On and on the great ship sailed—away to the Golden West.

One balmy day in springtime a sunbeam found its way to the nook where the weary heart sought refuge and whispered, "Follow me." Rather reluctantly the bird came out of the shadows—into the light. The sunbeam led him to a pansy-colored butterfly, caught in a fisherman's net. At first the little bird hated the butterfly for its beauty; but, as he saw it imprisoned and suffering, his little heart fluttered with pity and love. Flying quickly to the net, he industriously picked away the threads with his sharp bill until the butterfly was free. As it spread its gorgeous wings and soared away, the little King felt a warm glow of gratitude and he was glad—for the butterfly!

The sunbeam came again and whispered, "Follow me." This time the little bird came willingly, joyfully, just as the great ship reached the Land of the Setting Sun. Over the rippling waves he flew and lo! he saw a new reflection in the waters, for his plumage shown in glory with the sunset on the sea.

"Can this be I?" he asked of the sunbeam and the sunbeam whispered, "The real you." The dear little bird was so rejoiced that he sought the most beautiful red rose tree in the world's most beautiful garden in which to build his nest—back in the land where birds of brilliant plumage dwelt. Did he then seek the loveliest of all the bright birds for his mate? No. He chose the homliest of all his species, saying, "I will teach her to reflect the sunlight of Love that she too may know the joy of making others happy."

When the Great Father, who loves all the birds, saw our King, wanting to share his new-found beauty and blessing, He caused three tiny eggs to be placed in the nest—eggs tinted like the afterglow of evening—unlike any our King had ever seen.

One day when the father bird came with a store of ripe berries to feed the patient little mother, the eggs were broken and three wee birds, as resplendent in beauty as the sunset on the sea, chirped their eager greeting.

The garden rang with the wild notes of his rapture. Again the sunbeam came and whispered, "Your children shall always be called, 'The Birds of the Crimson Feather.'"

"Why, Daddy, you've had a nice nap and you look so rested!" cried the radiant Martha. "Yes, dear," her father replied, "and now I am awake and ready to wish you and all the world a Happy New Year."

New Year's Peace By Radio

By Florence Harris Wells

IT WAS New Year's eve but Robert Holden had refused all the numerous invitations that had come to him to watch the Old Year out. Robert was in no mood for festivities of any kind or description.

A year ago he and Katharine had welcomed the New Year together planning how before the year ended they would be settled in their own little home and now here he was still in his bachelor quarters, more lonely and more forlorn than ever before in his life; for Katharine's musical career had proved too alluring and she had decided she could not give it up.

"No, not even for you, Bob," she had smilingly, albeit seriously replied to his ardent pleadings. "At least not yet," she had added. "I must taste the sweetness of success for a while. It has been too slow in coming and too dearly paid for to turn away from it so quickly."

All Bob's entreaties and arguments were of no avail. Katharine was adamant; so Katharine had gone to her many engagements from coast to coast and Bob had gone about his day's work. But all the zest and inspiration was taken from his labors.

Absent-mindedly Robert turned to his radio and tuned-in on something—anything, he didn't care what.

The words, "Katharine Mulder will now sing—" finally cut into his wandering thoughts.

Bob did not wait to hear what Katharine would sing. Out into the night he rushed and aimlessly he trudged through the softly falling snow oblivious of direction or time. He could see nothing but Katharine's smiling, resolute face, hear nothing but her rich contralto voice as she used to sing the old song favorites for him and that newer one, "At Peace with the World with You," which seemed to just fit in with their mood when together.

"Peace," he muttered. "There is no such thing!"

It was nearing midnight when he approached his club, still unaware of time or place.

Bewildered he looked about him and gradually he realized that for some unknown reason he was the center of attention. The breezy remarks penetrated his consciousness:

"Pretty good New Year, old chap, after all, isn't it?"

"Thought you'd get around to share your glad message with us."

"Great of you, I'd say, to come back to us for the last song."

"About time for it now, isn't it? Let's tune in."

It was then Bob roused enough to stammer:

"What's it all about? What do you mean?"

It was Bob's best friend, Hal, who grasped the situation first:

"He doesn't know fellows!" Hal threw his arm about Bob's broad shoulders and led him apart from the others.

It's Katharine, Bob; she sang over the radio tonight for you."

At the mention of Katharine's name Bob started to move away. But Hal held him firmly and the words "For you" brought an immediate response:

"For me! What do you mean?"

"Just what I said. The announcer announced that Katharine Mulder would sing for Bob Holden and she hoped he was listening in. And then what do you suppose she sang?"

Hal didn't wait for any reply:

"She sang that old song 'How Can I Leave Thee!' Only, Bob, now get this, she changed it to—

"'How could I leave thee!
How could I from thee part!
Thou only hast my heart,
Dear one believe.
Thou hast this soul of mine
So closely bound to thine,
Naught else can I love,
Save thee alone.'"

Do you get that, Bob? She said "Naught else can I love." Now wait a minute, I'm not through—when she finished the announcer said Miss Mulder would sing again at midnight, and in the meantime her address was right here in this city."

But the last remark fell on the desert air. Bob was at the door.

As the New Year was ushered in with pealing bells and shrilling whistles, over the radio at the club Bob's friends heard a rich contralto voice singing:

"At Peace with the World with You."

PETER KIRK had not always been a recluse. The earlier settlers remembered that while Mrs. Kirk lived, no cabin in the country was more hospitable than theirs. But when she died Peter seemed to draw aloof from human intercourse. Perhaps, for the time, he found all the companionship he wanted in daily association with his son Fred, then a sturdy boy of fourteen.

After Fred grew up and married Mary Cather, his father became more a recluse than ever. Peter had forbidden the wedding, not that he had anything in particular against Mary, but living so long alone with Fred had twisted his perspective. Anything which came between him and his son he regarded as evil. When Fred regretfully but firmly refused to give up Mary, the old man's love turned to something like hate. He ordered the boy off the farm and told him never to come back.

Fred obeyed that command. He had taken land within a mile of his father's, but never did he or Mary cross the boundary line between. Often their hearts turned to the lonely old man in his empty cabin, but they felt that the next move must come from him.

Peter cooked his simple breakfast, did up his few chores, set his cabin in order, and sat down with his thoughts, for it was New Year's day, bright and bitterly cold outside. Fred and Mary pressed insistently into his mind. Living on the next farm, and without a word for a whole year! What way was that to treat a father? He tried to stir up indignation against them, but the effort was not very successful, for Peter was at heart honest, even with himself.

So he sat and gazed absent-mindedly at the little window of his cabin which overlooked the trail coming up from the high road. Often on moonlight summer nights he had kept guard at that window against the chance intrusion of some stranger. If anyone appeared on the trail he bolted his door and sat silent until the intruder went away. But now the window was screened with a lacework of frost, drawn by invisible fingers working silently all through the night. In delicate patterns beyond the genius of any artist nature herself had decorated it.

"Drawn by an Irresistible Force Across the Bare Floor."

Suddenly he sat upright, galvanized, as though a vision were passing before his eyes. They focussed on the frostwork on the pane, and his lips moved, but no sound came from them. Slowly he rose to his feet, drawn by an irresistible force; slowly across the bare floor his boots clattering in the silence.

"Lucy!" he cried. "Lucy! Is it you, or am I going mad?"

On that frosty window pane his old eyes had traced a face, angelic in the purity of its whiteness, ineffable in its expression of eternal calm. It was the face of Lucy, his wife. For a full minute he stood as one held in the grip of some supernatural spell. Then the lines blurred, and the pattern which had seemed so clear was lost in a maze of delicate etchings.

Terror gripped at the old man's heart. "I'm going mad!" he cried. "Fred! I'm going mad!"

He stumbled to the door, threw it open, to fill his lungs with the fresh, frosty air. "Fred! Fred!" he cried again.

"Here I am, Dad!" The cheerful voice sounded in his ears. Yes, sure enough, there was a figure like Fred's coming up the trail!

"Happy New Year, Dad!" and the young man's strong arms were about him. "Did you see me coming?"

Peter could adjust himself quickly. "Didn't you hear me call?" he asked. "Come in, Son, and welcome." But where's Mary?"

Fred's voice fell to a note of eager confidence. "Mary can't come at present, Dad. She's at home with a little mite that came to our house this morning. We're going to call him Peter."

But the old man was already hustling into cap and coat. "I'm coming right over to wish him Happy New Year," he said.

A PROBLEM OF IMMIGRATION

Mexico's natural resources are said to excel, acre for acre, those of the United States. The area of U. S. A. is 3,026,791 square miles. Mexico's is 767,198. U. S. A's first settlements were Jamestown 1607, Plymouth Rock 1620. Cortez landed at Vera Cruz in 1519, about a century before the Mayflower came. Mexico's birthrate far exceeds ours. Yet U. S. A's population is about 120 millions, while Mexico's population is only 14 millions.

Even if we were to ignore our handicap of almost 100 years, Mexico's population today should, compared with ours, be some 30 millions. Why does Mexico's population thus stagnate at less than ½ our proportion? The reason lies in the racial superiority of the Anglo-Saxon. Because of our better methods, the Mexican yearns to live under the Stars and Stripes. Here he is not recruited, at the bayonet's point, to fight in a "revolution" regarding which he knows nothing. Here is enforced a sanitation not to be found in his country. Then, too our wage standard is attractive. Our fieldworkers in Mexico formerly found peons working for 17 cents daily. Is there not good reason for the mass migration northward?

But our very peace, and our living standards that attract his coming in one of the largest mass immigrations in history seem to have within them the spores of their own decay. The Mexican peon's differential birthrate spells the slavish "barbarians" to her citizenship. The same cause putrified the brilliant early Roman civilization.

With nearly 4 million Americans unemployed last spring, while about 4 million peons were with us, we are speeding this deterioration of the old American stock. Mexico should go under the same Quota as we maintain against Europe.

OUR PRESIDENT AND ENFORCEMENT

Congress is now busily concerned over the question of prohibition enforcement. In its report, the commission appointed for the study of conditions surrounding the question of enforcement made four recommendations, viz.

1. Transfer the investigation of prohibition violations and the preparation of cases against offenders from the treasury to the justice department.
2. Codify all federal prohibition legislation.
3. Make padlock injunctions more effective.
4. Relieve congestion in the federal courts by one of three expedients; preferably by prosecuting "casual or slight" violations without indictment with penalty such violations limited to $500 fine or six months in jail, which would require authorization by congress.

No report was given by the commission in regard to unifying control of border patrol agencies, as has been considered by treasury and Canadian officials. These conclusions are not final, but reflect the views arrived at by the body, after a seven month's study of government documents, congressional hearings and consultation with federal officials.

Public hearings were avoided, as it was thought best "to make a careful study of the whole question."

It is apparent that President Hoover is in favor of enforcement; the only question, is the method to be employed. It is to be expected that the wet element will be hostile toward any effort looking toward a more effectual curtailment of their activities in the way of law evasion. They have complained in the past, that the law enforcement is impossible, yet when any effort is being made to further strengthen the aim of the law, they are up in arms. It is to be hoped for the preservation of our institutions, the maintaining of our natural intregity, and the material and spiritual welfare of our country, a way will be found to strengthen the arm of our chief executive in his honest effort to keep inviolate this principle of prohibition.

ENJOYING THE SUNNY SOUTH LAND

Frank Seiler, an Auburn resident, writing from Vero Beach, Florida, says that he arrived in that city on January 8 and found the bright sunshine and everything in full bloom like the middle of June in Auburn. Continuing he writes: "Today we went over to the ocean beach. There were many in bathing. I know that this will seem pretty chilly to some of our home folks. Yesterday and today nearly all the men and boys here were going around in their shirt sleeves. People are coming in here in droves and everything is filling up fast. They say down at Miami that everything is just running over with people. Our train from Jacksonville down on the east coast was made up of 20 Pullman cars and all were well filled. The conductor told me that during the last week travel to the southland had just about doubled."

FOURTEEN MENINGITIS CASES OUTSIDE INDIANAPOLIS

Fourteen cerebro spinal meningitis cases were reported in the state outside of Indianapolis in the weekly bulletin of the state health department issued by Dr. William F. King, director.

The weekly report figures are for the week ending Jan. 4.

The smallpox epidemic continued in various parts of the state, the report showed. There were 138 cases reported for the week, as compared to 56 for the same period last year. Wayne county with 35 cases was the largest reported. Marion had only five.

Scarlet fever increased during the week to a total of 137 cases. Last year the total was 81 for the period.

There were but 21 cases of diphtheria, while last year the number was 54.

Fifty-nine deaths in the state since December 9 have been attributed to meningitis, 47 of which have been in Indianapolis.

FOOT WAS AMPUTATED

Last report from John Coburn at Peru, who is in the Miami County Hospital is, that he had his foot amputated last Thursday, and that he is getting along fine and on the road to recovery. Due to the exexposure of his trip, he was suffering with a high fever and col ; but no serious results were evitable. Chas. Cochran called on him Friday night and found him in good spirits.

No further identification of the members of the hazing party has developed.

Lafayette, Ind., Jan. 11.—Purdue University authorities were investigating a report from Peru that Victor G. Coburn, 19, a Purdue freshman, was kidnapped, injured and had his left leg amputated in a Peru hospital.

The report said Coburn was abducted by two men and abandoned at a small town after a two-hour auto ride.

The youth was reported to have suffered a crushed foot when it was caught in a coupling as he attempted to ride a freight train to Lafayette. The leg was amputated below the knee.

Coburn is a pledge of Delta Alpha Pi. His home is at St. Joe, DeKalb county.

LOW LANDS ARE COMPLETELY SUBMERGED

It has been said "When you have nothing else to talk about, you can talk about the weather." Just now there seems to be but little else to talk about but the weather. While we can not say the water in the low lands is as high as it has been in past years, yet it is at flood tide, the melting snow and sleet, and the rains which have fallen during the intervals between snow storms have kept the ground in a highly saturated condition, and at present writing, prospects are not fair for an immediate cessation of the things which have brought on these conditions. Persons are complaining of damages due to leaky roofs, and clogged drains have caused cellars to be flooded in some places.

ENGINE STALLS ON B. & O. CROSSING

Dwight Collins had a novel, and quite hair raising experience which might have terminated fatally one day last week, while driving out of town in his Ford coupe. As he was crossing the B. & O. tracks at the Engle crossing, west end of town, his car stalled, went dead. A freight was approaching from the east, this Dwight says he saw, but as he was resolved to get his motor started, he, like the boy on the burning deck, stuck to his post, as a consequence, he was quite forcibly picked up by the pilot of the engine, and carried a considerable distance westward. The car was quite used up, although not exactly beyond repair. Had it not been for the hard sleet that had fallen, and which provided a smooth and unobstructing surface to such parts of the car as were touching the ground the owner might have easily been killed, and the car in a much worse condition. Dwight says he has been in other wrecks, but in none which he escaped so luckily, sustaining, as he did, only a few minor bruises about the head.

Two Strange Seas

Scene on the Shore of the Caspian Sea.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE world's two most important and best known bodies of water that lie below sea level are the Dead sea and the Caspian sea. The Dead sea is really a gigantic sinkhole. In no other continent is there such a deep depression in the earth's crust; nor will one find greater desolation or more uncomfortable conditions for man and most other living things even in the hearts of the greatest deserts.

The Hebrew scriptures have thrown an atmosphere of tragedy about this country. There, the chronicle states, were situated the wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, destroyed by the wrath of Jehovah; and there the modern reader sees the blasted region, seared by unbearable heat, with its bitter death dealing waters, to prove the story to his satisfaction.

According to the Biblical narrative the Jordan valley and the plain near its mouth on the shores of the Dead sea where the destroyed cities lay shared the early good fortune of the Promised Land itself and "flowed with milk and honey." But an end was put to this pleasant condition by the rain of brimstone and fire.

The story of the region deciphered from its rocks by geologists begins much earlier than the days of the patriarchs whose actions are recorded in the Bible. This record seems to indicate that Palestine and the whole western end of Arabia rose from the sea a million or more years ago in what the geologists term the Tertiary era. Shortly after the rise, it seems, a great slice of the land parallel to the coast of the Mediterranean sank to great depth, forming the huge rift valley, "the Ghor," now occupied by the Jordan river and the Dead sea.

It is not clear whether there was a connecting channel between the Mediterranean and the great valley; but a well defined ancient beach indicates that in those remote times the great depression held a sea or lake at about the same level as that of the Mediterranean. The Jordan did not then exist; its entire valley as well as the sea of Galilee was swallowed up in the parent of the Dead sea, which was some 200 miles long and 10 to 15 miles wide.

Dead Sea Has No Outlet.

It is believed that the climate of Palestine in remote times was moist and that the great inland lake was for a while kept at its highest point. When drier conditions set in the lake began to shrink, eventually retreating into the present position of the Dead sea and exposing the valley now occupied by the Jordan. This is practically the only large river in the world which flows in a valley readymade for it almost from source to mouth.

The Dead sea depression having no outlet, all the salts contained in the large original inland sea were retained when evaporation reduced the volume of the body of water to its present dimensions. In addition, for hundreds of thousands of years the Jordan and the other streams and torrents that flow from the desert hills into the basin have been carrying in additional salts until now the waters of the Dead sea constitute one of the most highly concentrated natural brines in existence. It is estimated that on the average some six million tons of water flow into the Dead sea daily, and since the level of the sea changes but little, an equal amount is pumped out daily by evaporation.

The present Dead sea is 47 miles long and about 10 miles wide. Its surface lies approximately 1,300 feet lower than sea level and at its deepest point its bottom lies another 1,300 feet down. This great rift in the earth's crust, therefore, lies 2,600 feet below sea level and is the deepest hole in the land anywhere in the world. Because of the intense heat and dryness and the presence everywhere of salt the land immediately about the Dead sea is a region of desolation.

Because the intense heat and pressure often prove fatal to others than the few hapless Arab nomads that manage to survive in the region, this area has until recently not been intensively studied by scientists. It was at first thought that there is no evidence of recent volcanic action and that the traditional destruction of the cities by a rain of fire and brimstone may have referred to the explosion of pockets of crude petroleum. A scientist who visited the region in 1909, however, reported a small extinct volcano near the northeastern corner of the Dead sea near the reputed site of Sodom and concluded that a shower of ashes from this vent may have caused the catastrophe so vividly described in Genesis.

Caspian Sea Is a Puzzle.

The Caspian sea was thought, in the earliest periods of recorded time, to be part of the great "stream of ocean" surrounding the habitable earth. Herodotus, the Greek Baedeker, mentions a visit to it in 458 B. C., when it was an even greater mystery than today, for then no one knew its extent.

Some authorities claim that the Caspian had its origin in a great inland sea, an Asiatic Mediterranean, with an outlet to the Arctic ocean. In support of the Arctic outlet it is pointed out that seals are still hunted in the Caspian and there are other forms of life which show evidence of Arctic ancestry. It is argued that the Caspian owes its present size to climatic changes and evaporation. That the sea has reached other levels is evident by the number of terraces that can be seen back from the coast. However, to complicate matters, the weak development of the terraces indicates that the sea did not stand at any one level for a long time. Walls and cities have been found in many sections underneath the surface, an indication that the level of the water was even lower at one period than it is now.

Shifting shore lines are not the only eccentricities of the Caspian. Although 85 feet below the level of its neighbor, the Black sea, and with no known or possible outlet, the Caspian is less than half as salty. It is only three-eighths as salty as the ocean. Furthermore, the northern part, which receives large quantities of fresh water from the Volga, Ural and Terek rivers, is so slightly salty the water is quite drinkable.

The Black sea, with approximately an equal surface and almost the same climatic conditions, not only retains a constant level but is continually discharging at the Dardanelles. Yet the volume of water poured into the Black sea is not nearly so great as that which the Caspian receives. The Volga, alone, drains almost half a million square miles into the Caspian.

No other inland body of water is so richly stocked with fish, nor has as wide a range of species. The Caspian presents an intermingling of salt and fresh water forms. Before the World war the annual catch, including the seals of Krasnovodsk bay, was valued at more than five million dollars.

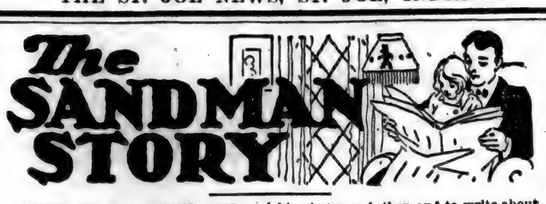
With an area equal to that of the state of California, or more than all the Great Lakes combined, the Caspian sea today occupies the deepest part of a great depression situated to the west and south of the Ural mountains. The northern or fresh water half is shallow, nowhere reaching a depth of more than 118 feet. The southern half, however, is cut by two deep depressions and soundings have reached 3,600 feet.

Coastal Strip Is Narrow.

Both the north and the east coasts are flat and hard to approach. Caucasus mountains on the west and the Elburz on the southern, or Persian, shore are close to the sea and leave only a narrow coastal strip. On this strip are most of the important cities of the region. Taken as a whole the Caspian is not an attractive body of water. Its shores are as barren as the granite boulders of its bordering mountains. As there is no fresh water above or below the surface of the ground near the southern coasts, the inhabitants must bring drinking water from long distances or condense sea water. One of the distinguishing features of towns along this part of the Caspian sea is the floating condenser plant, usually some worn-out steamer or sailing vessel. Sometimes the water is piped ashore, sometimes it is carried in tank barges and then peddled around the streets, as is milk in other cities.

Baku, the capital of the Soviet republic of Azerbaijan, is the largest city on the sea and the center of a prosperous, busy oil region. Its surroundings are like those of the nitrate towns along the coast of Chile, only the settlements are more numerous and better built. Before the war Baku was one of the most important cities in the Russian empire.

The SANDMAN STORY



NEWS IN NATURELAND

BILLIE BROWNIE sat down and commenced to read aloud the latest copy of the Natureland News.

It was the paper of Natureland, and Billie Brownie loved to read it aloud to the Fairies and the Elves, and the other Brownies, and the Gnomes.

They all enjoyed hearing it, too.

"Weather will be different at different times," he read. "Some days it will be cold, other days it will be warm, but on the whole the weather report is satisfactory.

"The weather will have variety and interest for all at one time or another.

"And now," Billie Brownie said, "I must read the 'Personal Items.'

"Mr. Robin is expecting to leave the South before long. He has had a delightful autumn and early winter and has met many old friends.

"He Is Also Known as Mr. Groundhog, He States."

"Mr. Gray Squirrel had a banquet last night of nuts which he had put under the snow last fall. It was a splendid banquet. Covers were set for many, and a good time was had by all.

"The animals in the zoo are eating a great deal during the cold weather and find their appetites excellent. They have a good cook, but they ask their friends in other zoos not to call him away. They would like to keep him.

"The Opossums are still up to their own tricks and will not change until they find others which are very much better.

"Up to now they think their own tricks are very clever, particularly the one about pretending not to be alive when an enemy comes near, or else pretending to be sound asleep.

"Mr. Woodchuck has not decided whether he will see his shadow or not when he peeps forth from his sleeping quarters in the near future.

"He says all the people like to take his photograph then and to write about him in the newspapers.

"He is also known as Mr. Groundhog, he states.

"Mr. Groundhog's cousin, residing in the Small Mammal House, the Zoo, has a new friend. His new friend is a dear little honey bear from South America. Mr. Groundhog is very friendly with his keeper and is allowed, as they say, 'the run of the place.'

"Mr. Horace Country-side Woodchuck is dreaming sweet dreams of the fun they had at Woodchuck Park last summer.

"There were many of them in a colony, and they had their holes in the nearby big fields. Only a few people drove along these country roads, and the woodchucks had things pretty much to themselves.

"They used to come up and sit about their homes and enjoy the beautiful sunshine.

"Sometimes people passing would admire them. They only met friends and no enemies, which was very delightful.

"Their winter dreams are now of the sweetest.

"King Snow and the Icicle Girls and Old Man Winter and Madame Snow and Prince Sleet have all sent word that they are going to remain around a little longer, anyway.

"What is meant by that 'anyway' we can't quite tell.

"The Snow Jewelers wish to run an advertisement about their Snow Crystal Jewels. They say they have the finest collection ever brought together, and that the prices are reasonable and the jewels exquisite.

"Their advertisement is to be found on the left hand side of this paper."

Billie Brownie showed it to every one.

Then he continued reading:

"The Donkey family held a braying contest the other day. Each hehawed so well that all were specially deserving of the prize, but no one received it, because no one was better than the other.

"Mean Mr. Fly rubbed his wings with his two hind legs and went a-calling the other day.

"No one wanted to see him, but that did not bother Mr. Fly. Nor will he mind what we say about him in our valuable paper.

"His manners are as bad as ever. And he was not a welcome visitor.

"Everyone had hoped that there would be no flies for a long time. But somehow or other, this Mr. Fly found his way to a farm house on a warm day in quite a warm place. He said he had other friends on the way."

And Billie Brownie folded up the paper.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE "LIBERTINE"

TODAY the libertine is a rake, a dissolute person without morals or self-restraint, who places the desire of the moment above thought of right or wrong or consideration for others. And in the history of the term we find an interesting story, a good example of the romance there is in words.

From the Latin "libertinus," libertine means literally "freedman," the original significance of the word. "Libertus" and "Libertinus" are familiar as names given by the ancient Romans to the manumitted slave.

It is said that there is but a short step between liberty and license and the quick assumption would be that from its original meaning of one who is legally free the word "libertine" was corrupted to describe one who was too free and unrestrained and so took on its present significance of dissoluteness. That, however, would be only half the story.

To complete it we must know of a pernicious sect that sprang up in the Sixteenth century in the Reformed Church of France and who called themselves the "Libertines" or Spiritual Brethren and Sisters. Under the guise of a dogma—they professed pantheism, or the worship of all gods rather than one—Libertinism soon degenerated into open and avowed sensualism. And though the cult is long extinct its name survives in the significance of our word "libertine" today.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

WHITE HORSES

IN NEW ENGLAND they say, "Wish on the first white horse you see after the New Year and you will get your wish, "or "Say white horse seven times every time you see one and you will receive a present." But in Canada they say that if you watch a span of white horses out of sight you will die within the year; and in another section it is considered bad luck for a bridal couple to ride behind a pair of white horses.

In the superstition with regard to a span of white horses we have an echo of the mythological Legend of Hippolytus who was killed when his span of white horses ran away with him upon the Troezen shore and who, with Diana, was afterwards worshipped at Nemi where white horses were sacrificed to him. The fate of Hippolytus sufficiently explained the idea of bad luck attaching to a span of white horses.

On the other hand the idea of good luck attaching to a white horse arises from the fact that such an animal was considered a propitiatory offering calculated to obtain the favor of the gods and as such they are annually sacrificed in many places in the heathen world.

There is a popular belief that when you see a white horse you will soon see a red-headed girl. In some variants of this superstition a red-headed person of either sex is indicated. Now the standard of Hengist and Horsa, the Jutish chief who invaded England in the Fifth century, was a white horse. The Jutes were a German tribe and we have it upon the authority of Tacitus that the Germans were red haired, which the ancient Britons were not. So wherever you saw the White Horse of Hengist and Horsa you would see a red head. The general form of the superstition which specifies a red-headed woman is, apparently, an hero of the names of the Jutish chieftains, Hengist and Horsa. Wherever you saw the White Horse of Hengist you would see the red head of his brother, Horsa—the chief with the feminine name.

OUR COMMON PROPERTY

EACH man enters into a world which is not of his own making. What past generations have accomplished furnishes him the materials with which he works out his own future. Values, both moral and material, which have become the common property of all, we have inherited from others. The best we have is a debt we owe to others. Many illustrations from real life could prove this point. One is here selected from the world of art.

L. A. Barrett.

Viewing the works of Michelangelo, that famous sculptor of the Italian school, we realize that there struggled within the soul of the artist something more than a talent he developed in schools. A dominating power and a controlling motive is evidenced in all his work which owes its origin to a source which for a long time it was not easy to explain. No one can study the Last Judgment, the Martyrdom of St. Peter, or, the Conversion of St. Paul without being keenly aware that the artist owed his power to the inspiration of a personality to which he must have been greatly attached. The explanation came late in life through a letter the artist wrote to his brother, in which he expressed his love and admiration for that "Mountain Preacher," Savonarola. Many critics concluded that the spirit of Savonarola lived again in the frescoes on the Sistine chapel. But the connecting link between the genius of the artist and the influence of Savonarola harks back to a little town in Italy, where ministered a humble and obscure friar who, in an address which Savonarola happened to hear, said the words which inspired him to give his life for the restoration of Italy.

"Things and men are the results of causes, and the causes of results." Here is an interesting series of results—the unconscious influence of one man's simple statement awakening the soul of the man who set Italy free, the influence of whose life and sacrificial work fired the soul of Michelangelo.

The entire world of art today owes a profound debt of gratitude to that obscure friar because with "tears mingling with his colors, Michelangelo prayed and painted."

Our common property is a debt we owe to others. Let us ever remember the example of Michelangelo, master of many arts.

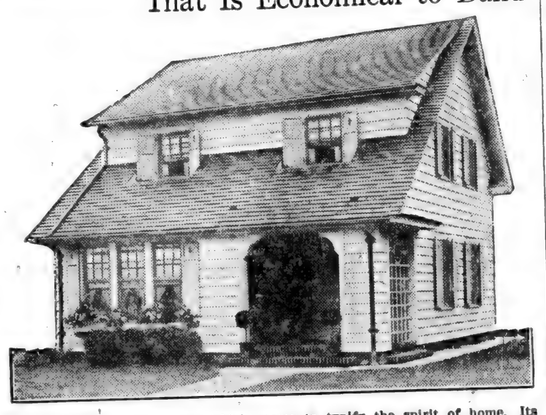
Comfortable, Attractive Home That Is Economical to Build



Here is a little cottage which seems to typify the spirit of home. Its story-and-a-half construction has been designed to produce a charming outward appearance and the interior will be found equally satisfactory.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Something more than a monetary investment is required to make a house a home. Small houses that do not cost much comparatively can be made, through proper design, to be more homelike than some in which the investment is considerably greater. This happy result is secured through the proper selection of the home building design with relation to the lot upon which it is to be built and to its surroundings.

The house illustrated is of a type which is economical to build and at the same time provides a comfortable, attractive home. Set in rural surroundings with lawn, shrubs, flowers and trees, the owner will have a home of which he may well be proud and at the same time he and his family will have a comfortable abode.

As will be seen, this is a small frame house 26 feet wide and 20 feet deep. Much of its attractiveness can be attributed to the set-in porch dormer and the projection in the roof at the front. The latter adds considerable space to the second floor and permits bedrooms that are light and well ventilated.

How the six rooms contained in this house are arranged and the size of each room are shown on the floor plans which accompany the exterior view. The set-in porch leads into the living room which occupies the right side of the house. The dining room is built out flush with the porch floor and with multiple windows at the front and a large window at the side makes a sunny, airy place for the family to dine.

Second Floor Plan.

The kitchen also is of good size, being 12 feet by 12 feet. The stairs to the second floor are open and run out of one corner at the rear of the living room. The stairs end in a central hall on the second floor off of which are three bedrooms, all corner rooms, and the bathroom.

The floor plans show that the foundation walls of the house are straight, which means economy and provides a basement of practically the same size as the house itself.

For those prospective home builders who are looking for a neat, attractive house, which is large enough to accommodate a good-sized family and which may be built at the minimum of cost, this design should appeal considerably.

Garage Floor Can Be Built by the Owner

The man who owns a car and doesn't have a concrete floor in his garage can easily build one himself in his spare hours.

So indispensable has this type of floor become in the care of the automobile that few garages are now built without them. Concrete makes an ideal garage floor. It is waterproof and oilproof, easy to keep clean, will not rot, is easy on tires and it never wears out.

In building the floor all the soil should be excavated about six inches below the level intended for the top of the floor. If it is necessary to fill in at any low spots, care should be taken to tamp the new loose earth firmly so that the floor will have a good solid foundation.

Provision should be made for drainage, either to a sewer or low ground. The floor should slope to the center or to a gutter at the front or back. If the drain is made at the center, a sand trap should be built about one foot square and ten or twelve inches deep and covered with a heavy screen.

The sewer outlet is placed in the side of the trap about six inches from the bottom. This trap provides a place for sand and mud to settle and prevents clogging of the sewer. The accumulated sand can be removed with a shovel from time to time.

The floor should be given plenty of slope toward the drain so that water will run off freely. One-inch slope to ten feet is recommended. It will usually be found satisfactory to build the floor in sections that are small enough to be finished easily. Strips of concrete laid alternately permit the builder to work easily from both sides and obviate the necessity of his doing the job all at one time. Two by sixes, place on edge, may be used for the forms and should be staked securely in place with the top leveled to the intended surface of the concrete.

The concrete should be mixed one part portland cement to two parts clean sand and four parts crushed stone or washed pebbles. All parts should be mixed thoroughly with just enough water to make a quaky, jelly-like mixture.

As soon as the concrete has been placed in the forms it should be struck off with a straight-edged board and finished by smoothing off with a wooden float or trowel. This will give an even, gritty surface. Metal troweling is not advisable, since it gives a surface that is too smooth. When the concrete has hardened enough to resist finger impressions it should be covered with earth or straw and kept damp for a week or more by sprinkling. This curing is important, since concrete does not attain its maximum strength if allowed to dry out.

For each 100 square feet of surface, 6 inches thick, you will need 11¼ sacks of cement, 23 cubic feet of sand and 45 cubic feet of crushed stone or pebbles.

Big House on Small Lot Brings Disappointment

Before a lot is bought one should decide to take as much land as one can afford. Even if the house is made smaller to make up for the added expenditure, it is wise to get as large a lot as possible. Many otherwise beautiful suburban communities have been ruined by building large houses on small lots. Row after row of them, with only a few feet between each house, their appearance is unattractive.

Many house owners solve the problem of more land by striking farther out into the country, where land is cheap. They find it is possible to get 100 to 150 feet at the price of 40 or 50 feet nearer town. Room to breathe is what every house owner wants; space in which his wife and children may thrive. You cannot get all there is in outdoor life when the house covers the entire lot.

Cover Exposed Pipes to Prevent Freezing

In every modern home an uninterrupted supply of water is necessary at all times, and precautions should be taken to prevent the damage to property caused by frozen and burst pipes. Precautions such as draining outside pipes, and covering all those exposed with a good insulation should be made. If the family is to be away from home several days with the fire "dead," and flow of water unused, all water pipes should be drained. It is best to consult a good plumber regarding the protection that is needed against freezing weather.

CARBON MONOXIDE GAS IS DANGEROUS

Practice of Starting Engines in Closed Garages Deadly Error.

With the season of cold weather comes the increased danger to motorists from deadly carbon monoxide gas, warns the Chicago Motor club. The practice of starting engines in garages before opening garage doors results in many fatalities each year, according to reports received by the motorists' organization. Motorists should pay strict attention to ventilation in the garage, and, above all, should not "warm up" the car unless ample avenues of escape are available for exhaust gases. A cross-draft through the garage is most desirable.

Has Numbing Effect.

"Carbon monoxide gas has a numbing effect on the senses and many instances are recorded where motorists have died before they could span the short distance from the driver's seat to the fresh air," says a bulletin issued by the club.

"One of the best practices is to open the garage doors before starting the motor. Another is to connect the exhaust pipe with a pipe leading through the door, so that fumes will be carried out of the building. This can be done by means of rubber tubing and an extension on the exhaust.

Few Inhalations Fatal.

"Owners who do their own mechanical work should be particularly careful that they do not leave the motor running without providing adequate ventilation. Only a few inhalations of carbon monoxide gas are required to cause fatal results.

"These suggestions are offered in the hope of reducing deaths attributable to the motor car. Very little cooperation is needed to prevent unnecessary monoxide fatalities, but the public must first be aware of the peril from those deadly fumes."

Shortage of Motor Car Fuel Supply Not Feared

For the next 50,000 years, at any rate, American Motorists may feel assured of an ample fuel supply for cars, boats, airplanes and whatnots. Nor will it be necessary to carry a tank full of TNT or nitroglycerin in the car to get us there and bring us back.

Thus one great national worry was laid at rest, when Thomas A. Boyd, fuel technologist, recently talked to the Canadian section of the Society of Automotive Engineers meeting at Toronto.

Mr. Boyd cited the known quantity of petroleum, crude petroleum, petroleum sands and shale deposits and described three ways of converting coal into liquid fuel. These are pyrolysis, or coking at high and low temperatures; hydrogenation and gasincation. The speaker dealt at some length with the Burgess hydrogenation process.

Speaking of the relative amount of power contained in gasoline, Mr. Boyd stated that this hydrocarbon contains 19,000 British thermal units; TNT has 6,500; nitroglycerin, 3,200; dynamite, 2,500; and black powder, 1,200.

Eliminates Crossings

The bridge division of the New Mexico highway department is working overtime on plans and specifications for grade crossing elimination which will greatly increase the safety of the highways. Last year four grade separations were built at the crossing, which has been the scene of automobile tragedies. Three more eliminations are now in the plan stage, to be commenced and pushed through this year.

The Motor Quiz

How Many Can You Answer?

Q. Should a driver attempt to turn out of a rut at high speed?

Ans. No. This may cause a tire to blow, resulting in a skid or even overturning of the car.

Q. How many grade crossings were eliminated from the federal aid highway system of United States in 1928?

Ans. Three hundred ninety. Wisconsin led with 35; Alabama, second, 31; Michigan, third, 26; Texas, fourth, 25; Indiana, fifth, 24; Kansas, sixth, 23; Montana, seventh, 22; Georgia and Illinois, 21 each, and Mississippi, 17.

Q. During what year did Canada produce its largest number of automotive units? How many units were produced and what was their approximate value?

Ans. During 1928 Canada produced 242,054 automobile units valued at more than $162,867,000.

Q. How many different kinds of trouble can be attributed to missing spark plugs?

Ans. There are (1) sluggish engine; (2) slow pick-up; (3) loss of power; (4) hard starting; (5) engine loses power on hard pulls and cuts out at high speeds; (6) incomplete combustion, gas gets into crankcase, dilutes the oil and causes formation of carbon, excessive wear on pistons, cylinder walls and bearings.

VACUUM GEAR SHIFTING DEVICE PERFECTED

J. H. Newmark, New York automotive engineer, announces that after a period of seven years of research and experiments, a vacuum gear shifting device has been perfected which does away with the gear shifting lever commonly used on automobiles and enables the driver to do the shifting on the wheel by fingertip control. The vacuum gear shift, it is explained, requires a minimum of equipment and makes use of a natural element to shift the gears—the engine intake, used to create a vacuum. It requires only to remove the cover plate of the present transmission box and to apply a special one, in order to place the new gear shifting device on cars in use. This is done by attaching vacuum tubes leading to two small vacuum cylinders mounted on a cross member at the rear of the transmission case. A simple line also runs to the motor intake pipe. A pretty young model demonstrates the ease with which the gears may be shifted.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

"Hello! Hello! How Much Does Happiness Cost?"

Only the price of learning a simple health rule, this smiling youngster finds!

"Happiness is on the other end of your phone too," says little Barbara

"HAPPINESS just radiates from our baby since we began giving her—"

What was it that Mrs. Fred E. Schmitt of 2023 Stone Street, Falls City, Nebraska, discovered, which she could give to her baby that made her happy, well, strong and buoyant?

Not a medicine; not a drug of any kind; just harmless bodily lubrication. Only that, and nothing more. Mrs. Schmitt's discovery that little Barbara kept well when she was made regular as clock work is the same discovery as has been made by millions of other people, who are enjoying the happiness of health because they use Nujol.

Babies, old folks, people in the prime of life—all alike need to have the bodily poisons (we all have them) regularly cleaned out. Nujol just gently, naturally, normally lubricates the action of your body which needs lubrication as much as any other machine.

Please remember that Nujol contains no drugs; is non-fattening; is not absorbed in any way by the body; can form no habit; cannot hurt you, no matter how much you take. All it can do is keep you internally clean, and make you continually feel better. Colorless, tasteless as pure water, Nujol will make you see the bright side of life; it will help you to get the most out of your life; it will make you wake up in the morning feeling fit, and help you to do a good day's work with a smile.

Millions of people have discovered this fact—why don't you? You can buy Nujol in sealed packages at all drug stores. It costs but a few cents, and makes you feel like a million dollars. Get a bottle today and see how brimming zestful health will boost your day's happiness.

Your Kidneys

Give Them Prompt Help When Needed.

KIDNEY disorders are too serious to ignore. It pays to heed the early signals. Scanty, burning or too frequent excretions; lameness, stiffness and constant backache are timely warnings.

$200 Paid For One Copper Cent

J. D. Martin of Richmond, Va., is the proud possesor of a check for $200.00 paid him for an old copper cent. The Numismatic Company, Dept. 653, Fort Worth, Texas, who purchased this penny from Mr. Martin, says there are numerous old coins, bills and stamps in circulation for which they will gladly pay big cash premiums. So that you will know the value of old coins and stamps and what to watch for in your change, the Numiscatic Company will send for only 4 cents to any reader of this paper who writes them, a large illustrated coin folder describing some of these wanted articles and the big profits to be mased. Better wirte them today for this large folder so you can post yourself an dknow just what to look for. Remember that Mr. Martin's knowing thevalue of his penny meant a diffeernce of $199.99 to him. Without knowing its value that penny might still be in circualtion, passing through thehands of thousands until someone like Mr. Martin, who knows old coins, recognized its value. It pays to be posted. Send 4 cents now for the illustrated coin folder. You have nothing to lose, everything to gain.

In 198 there were 435, in 1927 315 and in 1924 the number was only 196.

WHY SHOULD I ADVERTISE?

The press agent traveling ahead of a circus called on the owner of a general store in a little town. It wasn't St. Joe, but it was only a few miles from here.

"Brother," he said, "when the show gets to town we'll have the usual parade, and I want to rent you some advertising space during the parade."

"Whereabouts?" the merchant asked. "On the elephant. He's the greatest thing in the procession. I'll put your name on each side of the big boy, and there won't be a man, woman or child for miles around who won't see your ad."

"There's not one of 'em that don't know me already," replied the store keeper, "and what's more, they all trade here, Why should I advertise? I don't need to."

The circus man reflected. He gazed across the street and felt stumped. Finally his roving eye fell upon the church. Then he turned to the merchant. "Nice church you have here," he remarked. "How long has that been there?" "Forty-one years, I reckon," the merchant answered. "Most everybody around here is a member."

"That church has been here for forty-one years," said the press agent, "and most everybody in town belongs, yet they ring the church bell every Sunday morning."

PROSECUTOR SHARPLESS TALKS AT P. T. A.

The P. T. A. held another meeting Tuesday evening of this week. The program was carried out as arranged with one exception, the vocal duet by Miss Gant and Miss Ditmars was not given on account of a throat affection of one of the young ladies. The orchestra under the direction of Donald Kinsey gave several numbers, some not on program. All were highly appreciated.

All numbers given on the program were good. The main feature was the debate, in which Homer Stomm and Harry Hursh crossed swords with Maurice Gillespie, the other antagonist, Derwood Ridgway who was to assist Mr. Gillespie did not appear on the field, leaving Mr. Gillespie to bear the brunt of the battle alone. The subject was, "Resolved that athletics are being over emphasized in the Indiana high schools and, as no judges were appointed, the audience was to decide the case, in their own minds. Good points were advanced by both sides.

Richard W. Sharpless, prosecuting attorney of Auburn, spoke upon the subject of "Child Delinquency." Mr. Sharpless, gave good reasons for child delinquency chief of which lack of education and poor home conditions, examples were given which well illustrated this point. Extension of time in school has materially lessened this evil of delinquency.

The reading of minutes by Miss Cleota Morr followed. Mrs. Fred Thornton gave a talk in which a proposal was made to give to the orchestra $10.00 in recognition of their past efforts and prospects of future programs in which the orchestra has participated and may do so again. An announcement of the basket ball game on Friday eve, Jan. 17, was made by Fred Leighty, the proceeds of this game to go to Victor Coburn, who was so unfortunate as to lose a foot, a few days ago.

There being no further business O. K. Shull, who acted in the place of Mr. Morr, regular chairman, dismissed the audience.

LIGHT INSPECTION—LIFE PROTECTION

Would you gamble $5000.00 against 40 cents?

Of course not, no thinking intelligent person would. Yet 40 cents (four thin dimes) will buy a new spare bulb for your headlights. Yet new eyes for yourself are both expensive and hard to find. Casualty Company records value human eyes at around $5,000.00, each, yet what chance has a motorist in a head on collision with flying glass in the night.

Head on "collisions" and "sideswipes" resulting from defective headlights are the most terrible, crushing and fatal of all road accidents to automobiles.

Improperly adjusted and defective headlights are an irritation to approaching drivers and are a positive danger to all. Spare bulbs for headlights are more important than spare tires.

Good brakes, clear vision, expert driving, safe roads and in fact every element of safety availeth naught when "Dead Eye Dick" comes down the road. He is a silent, invisible, lurking murderer taking his toll quickly and fatally.

Men HAVE been convicted for murder and sentenced to the Indiana State Prison at Michigan City for "contributory causes" no more excusable than the "Dead Eye Dick" man behind the wheel.

LEADERSHIP
Result of Service

Editor of The St. Joe News:—

The picture representing a business whose advertisement is found on the "Who's Who Page" of the St. Joe News, is Mr. Kreg, the amiable and pleasing manager of Kreg & Fee, Hicksville, Ohio.

It is at this store you will find new styles and greater furniture values—they embody the latest fashions in distinctive furniture—furniture you'll be proud to own. Rich veneers, and solid pieces, too—of mahogany, walnut and oak, vie for supremacy of style and rare beauty in this exquisitely wrought furniture.

Style and quality—and, of course, better values—have been their chief aim in selecting items for their Furniture Department. They are constantly on the alert for the new, the fashionable, the practical pieces, which will reflect the good taste, refinement and culture of their customers.

You will be amazed at the consistently low prices which prevail. They are considerably lower, we believe, than others ask elsewhere for similar style and quality. There's nothing more charming and grand in a beautiful home than decorative Wall Paper which is shown in a splendid variety of up-to-date exclusive designes by Kreg & Fee. Brocades, Tiffany tones, floral, rough plaster effects, stripes, tapestry, tile, sanitas—a most complete array of pleasing, decorative patterns, all moderately priced. Kreg & Fee's values are difficult to equal.

Leadership comes to him who serves—it is the proof of performance. Any individual, any institution, who would consistently lead must spare no effort or count no cost to maintain that position. Leadership is the reward of a job well done—and its price is constant vigilance. Kreg & Fee Co., Hicksville, Ohio, is an example of leadership.

Grace Leighty.

FARM EXPERT SHOWS HOW FARMER CAN CUT DOWN BIG BUTTER SURPLUS

The dairy farmer who in 1929 ate oleo so as to save butter paid $47.50 plus the cost of the oleo for the privilege of eating the butter substitute.

This statement was made today by C. M. Long, in a talk at the annual agricultural conference being held this week at Purdue University.

"The farmer pays heavily for the oleo he consumes," said Mr. Long. "Every pound of oleo he uses he leaves one pound of butter on the market. The 40,000,000 pound butter surplus now in storage over a year ago has resulted in a drop of ten cents per pound of butterfat. The average dairy farm keeps about five cows, whose average production is 180 pounds of butterfat. By this 10 cents drop in butterfat prices, the farmer with cows has lost $18.00 per cow or $90 on his herd of five. Ninety dollars is sufficient to pay 50 cents a pound for 35 pounds—his family's quota of butter—and leave him $47.50 to the good. In other words, the dairy farmer paid $47.50 and whatever the oleo cost him for the privilege of eating oleo.

"Statistics show that for every 10 pounds of butter, at least one pound of oleo is eaten in the United States. There are approximately 4,500,000 farm families producing dairy products. If they are eating only the average amount of oleo, it is equivalent to 450,000 families eating this produce exclusively. Counting five persons to the family, we have 2,250,000 people. If they had consumed the average amount of butter per year, which is 17 pounds, they would have taken care of 38,250,000 pounds of butter or practically the surplus that is in storage this year over last, to say nothing of the benefit to health."

Mr. Long suggested that in view of the present overproduction of dairy products, farmers immediately begin to weed out the 7,000,000 farm cows which he said, are not producing enough to pay for their keep but whose production tends to keep butterfat prices down. He also urged the inauguration of a systematic advertising campaign to secure bigger place for dairy products in man's "stomach room."

"There is nothing on the horizon that should cause the dairy farmer alarm," said Mr. Long. "Of all animals, the cow is the cheapest producer of human food and her products are absolutely necessary to the health and well-being of man-kind. With skimmilk to produce poultry and pork at profitable prices which now seem evident, the good price of veal calves and the good prices of discarded cows and surplus dairy cows as beef and the abundance of feed that is now on hand, it would seem that the cow, the sow and the hen farmer is in a fair way to make as much money in 1930 as he has in past years."

WHIPS AND RELISHES

(By Betty Barclay)

It is always wise to have a number of recipes for such tasties as whips and relishes, filed away where they may be found at a moment's notice. When unexpected company comes, one of these dishes will turn an ordinary meal into a company meal. Here are two recipes that will fit nicely into such a collection:

Marshallow Whip

1 package strawberry flavored gelatin.
1 cup boiling water.
1 cup cold water or fruit juice.
6 marshmallows, finely cut.

Dissolve gelatin i nboiling water. Add cold water or fruit juice. Chill. When slightly thickened, beat with rotary egg beater until like whipped cream. Add marshmallows. Pile lightly in sherbet glasses or pour into mold. Chill until firm. Serves 6.

Jellied Vegetable Relish

1 package lemon flavored gelatin
1 cup boiling water
¾ cup strained tomato juice
3 tablespoons vinegar
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 cups mixed cooked vegetables, finely cut.

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Add tomato juice, vinegar and seasoning. Chill. When slightly thickened, fold in vegetables. (A mixture of several of the following may be used: Celery, green peas, green or yellow pod beans, asparagus tips, onions or carrots.) Turn into small individual molds. Chill until firm. Unmold and serve with meat course. Serves 8.

The 1930 hunting and fishing licenses are now on sale at News office. All licenses expire with the calendar year, so a person may as well buy now. 1tf.

Community Building

Modernization of Home Worth Outlay Involved

Practically every woman would refuse emphatically to dress in the garments that were stylish ten years ago.

And the average man would look with scorn at the thought of owning an automobile that was built back in 1918.

Yet both complacently live in a house that has the architectural designs of Spanish-American war days and think nothing of it. Both put up with the inconveniences that go with such a dwelling and are satisfied with the old home.

Only recently has the home-owner begun to realize that it is no longer necessary to live in odd-appearing houses simply because that was the way they were originally built. During the past year or so it has been brought to the attention of the property owner that houses clothed in out-of-date lines show as poor taste as dressing in clothes with the lines of yesteryear. Both may have utility—but how unnecessary the old lines are!

The home owner who lives in an out-of-date house often hesitates to improve his dwelling because he has a mistaken idea of the costs of modernizing. These costs are usually moderate. A surprising range of improvements can be made for a few thousand dollars.—Exchange.

Co-Operation to Bring About Highway Beauty

The program of the state highway commission for putting the rights of way along the highways in order and to some extent beautifying them with trees and shrubs, will have more than the immediate effect indicated. If the people of Missouri are to have pride in their fine roads, and if the people of the towns and cities and farms are to be interested in co-operating for more attractive drives, then the first essential is to put the rights of way in order. The power of example is recognized. If the chambers of commerce in the cities and towns and the associations of farmers in the country can be enlisted to help in the planting program, in the adoption of uniform mail boxes and roadside racks, and if the owners of stands can be induced to make their places attractive, then there will be hope that more of the outdoor advertising concerns will abandon such billing as interferes with this program. Also when progress in these directions has been made, the state or local authorities will have better moral ground for any legal proceedings that might be necessary and helpful in the way of regulation.—Kansas City Times.

Types of Hedges

Ordinarily we think and speak of a hedge as being a row of plants closely together to effect a solid mass of foliage. In the formal hedge, the plants are trained in geometric outline by periodic trimming. The informal hedge is trimmed to gain compactness, but the plant is allowed to develop more or less naturally.

In landscape design, the formal hedge is almost indispensable. Its uses are legion. That is why most every home grounds can use hedge treatments to advantage. The formal hedge can be used to bound and screen the architectural garden. It can be developed higher than one's head, or, by using certain plants, it can be kept less than a foot high. Within the formal garden one often finds these low hedges bounding the flower beds and garden paths. In the simplest garden, hedges may be used to establish the lines and pattern of the design.

Children Set Out Trees

Approximately 400,000 pine trees were planted in New Hampshire this year by boys and girls. The trees were distributed through the co-operative efforts of the New Hampshire Forest nursery, the Smith Hughes vocational agricultural teachers and the Extension service.

The Society for the Protection of New Hampshire Forests gives books as prizes to the boys and girls under sixteen who do the best tree planting job. Everyone planting trees is eligible to membership to the American Tree association under a special provision of the association.

Determine to Own Home

The ownership of a home is an ambition to which every one should aspire. Have you, Mr. Tenant, this ambition and hope? Have you determined to accomplish the purchase of your own home? If not, do so at once. It is a step in the right direction. It makes for better citizenship. It supplies a new interest in life, and the benefits that accrue are worth many times any sacrifice that may be made. —Exchange.

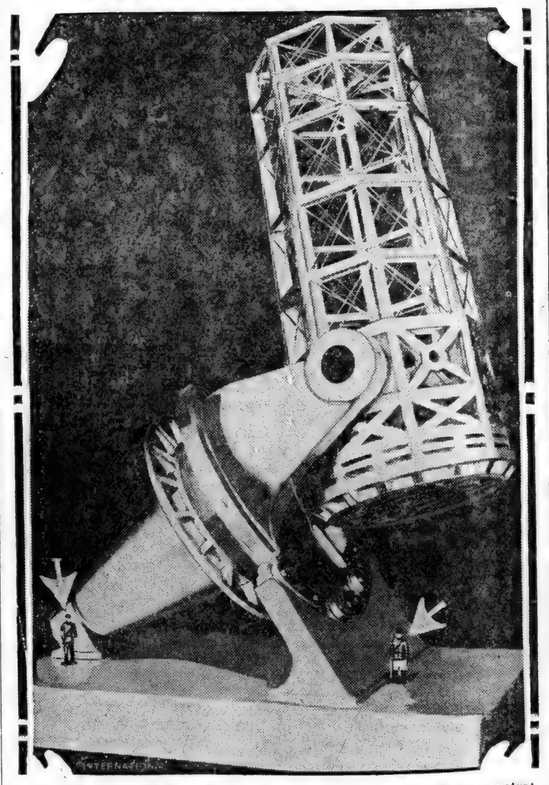
Shorn of all their glamor, these bootleggers' boats are shown as they were brought to an ignominious roost behind the bars. They are being held "prisoners" by the United States border patrol of Detroit. This is perhaps the only "boat jail" in America.

Largest Telescope Is Projected



Here is a rough model of the largest telescope, a reflecting eye penetrating into the reaches of space, that is to be built and put to work in southern California or Arizona. The mirror disk is to be 200 inches in diameter. Details of this epochal forward step in science have been prepared by Dr. George Ellery Hale, honorary director of Mt. Wilson Observatory and chairman of the observatory council of the California Institute of Technology. The human figures by the model give an idea of the size of the telescope.

HOW TO LIVE LONGER

By JOHN CLARENCE FUNK
A. M., Sc. D.

Director of Public Health Education, State of Pennsylvania.

"Nothing but a Cold."

A FATHER of a family of six, the youngest of whom was three years old, came home from work with a well developed cold. Being an affectionate individual he kissed his wife and all the children, making a particular fuss over the wee one. That was on Friday. Ten days later the baby was dead. The rest of the family, excepting one, had colds. That one had pneumonia.

It takes experiences like this to make one realize that "nothing but a cold" may indeed be very much something. "I didn't think that anything so common as a cold could possibly do any damage," lamented the father in the above case. And in so saying, he voiced the opinion of countless thousands who have little else than contempt for this ever present and universal affliction.

Nevertheless, colds deserve more than contempt. And not getting it, they frequently hit back. Indeed, it has been conservatively estimated that millions of hours and millions of dollars in wages are annually lost because of the public's lack of respect for a cold. And what is worse, the pneumonia fatalities traceable to unattended colds are almost staggering in number. Considered from all viewpoints, the common cold is in reality a very formidable adversary.

Unlike the many other maladies that lend themselves to official control, colds need to have little fear from that source. Not that health departments are disinterested. On the contrary, they are extremely concerned. Only they are helpless. Which means that the individual is the only person who can effectively do anything about this most important disease problem. Happily the observance of a few simple rules will materially diminish the cold's present power.

It must be understood that this type of infection is contagious. Therefore, anyone who is thus afflicted and fails to cough and sneeze into his handkerchief is decidedly and most selfishly negligent. Then again, it is merely fundamental common sense to reduce intimate personal contacts to a minimum, when in this condition.

With eating utensils kept to one's self and not used to help feed the baby, and with reasonable personal aloofness practiced in the home, millions of secondary infections that manifest themselves in families could be eliminated. Take this for a cold fact. And act upon it the next time you are suffering with "nothing but a cold."

The Sun Can Hurt

IN SPITE of repeated warnings many thousands of foolish people still conclude that one can suddenly expose the tender skin to a summer's day dose of torrid sun and remain happy. Well, it simply cannot be done.

One must admit that it is great sport to jump out of a city office or home into the briny deep. But it must be as readily conceded that to insult nature by exposing one's delicate epidermis to the sun's rays until painfully blistered, is carrying one's enthusiasm beyond a reasonable length.

With the present sun fad so extremely and justly popular, it is probably excusable for many unthinking persons to imagine that one has but to stand half naked in the sun's path and derive untold benefit. But the sun does not work that way.

While it is quite true that in tuberculosis and rickets and some skin diseases the direct rays of the sun have definite healing value, that fact does not justify any normal person in arguing that he will be immensurably benefited by putting the sun violently and burningly to work on his short fourteen-day sojourn. Such an attitude is extremely silly.

As a matter of common sense the sun, even at its best, should occupy but a small part of the vacation program. New acquaintances, change of scene, outdoor air, reasonable eating and sufficient rest, are the main factors to be considered if a maximum of benefit is to be derived from the annual visit to mountain, lake or sea.

Be a sun faddist, if you will. But don't be a burnt one. Remember, the sun can hurt.

Joseph Addison, who wrote the familiar hymn, "The Spacious Firmament On High," married the duchess of Warwick on August 9, 1716, and had a rather melancholy time of it for the remainder of his life.

"If you have any historical or biographical imagination at all," an article in the Minneapolis Journal stipulates, "perhaps you can reproduce in your mind the picture of the neat and classical figure of the essayist and poet as he escaped, now and then, from the uncomfortable glories of Holland house and made his way thankfully to the more comfortable little coffee house in Kensington where he was accustomed to meet Doctor Johnson and other Eighteenth-century wits and sports and where he put in a pleasant evening eating and drinking accompanied by intelligent conversation."

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

When Back Hurts Flush Your Kidneys as You Clean Your Bowels

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate, thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in trying to correct kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

GINGER ELLA

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, his motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has seriously affected Mr. Tolliver's eyes. Marjory wins the beauty prize, $50.00. She gives the money to her father to consult Chicago specialists. Ginger meets Alexander Murdock. Mr. Tolliver returns, the doctors giving him little hope. Ginger gets an idea for a "Parsonage Home for the Blind" and solicits funds. She gets results at once. Helen is married and leaves the parsonage. Mr. Tolliver goes to Eddy Jackson's farm for a rest.

"I wish Helen were here," said Marjory. "Why, I will have to sort of—be the head of the house myself—and I am not used to having ministers around—except father. But you are quite right. We must do what we can, and we shall take Mr. Buckworth gladly. What can we charge him?"

"We are to pay him fifteen dollars a week. I think ten of that could go for his room and board."

"That would leave him but five dollars a week for laundry, and collections, and—"

"We can do his laundry with ours." interrupted Ginger. "And I dare say he doesn't tithe as father does—it isn't as fashionable as it used to be. And we can't run the house on less than ten a week."

"Well, ten a week then. And if he objects, we'll come down to eight. He can have father's room, with the books— Miss Jenkins, you'll have to tell him about the money, and the laundry, and everything. I simply couldn't do it."

On Friday afternoon, Miriam returned with her father just in time for supper, a supper that was a banquet, for many of the kindly members, knowing of the plan for his enforced vacation, had conspired to make his last dinner at home one to be remembered. There were baskets of fruit and flowers, fine candies, fragrant home-baked rolls and pastries, rich preserves and delicate jellies, pats of country butter and jars of cream, chickens all ready for broiling.

They were still at the table, merrily recounting the news of the week, the doings of the church, the letters from Helen, when Joplin Westbury came, or rather, was delivered in person, by Eddy Jackson. Joplin Westbury, clearing his throat in best treasurer-of-the-board manner, announced that on behalf of the church he came to present his beloved minister with a two months' vacation on full pay, in order to restore his strength for the great day of the formal dedication.

"Mr. Westbury, this—this is most awfully good of you and the board and the church," said Mr. Tolliver meekly. "It just happens—and this may surprise you—the doctors advised that I give up work and responsibility for a while, but I simply did not see how it could be done. I should not have asked it, I assure you. It is most generous, Joplin, most generous. Girls, I see the hand of the Lord in this."

"I see the hand of Eddy Jackson," thought Ginger Ella to herself, but not for the world would she have marred her father's pious gratitude with the voicing of her irreverent thought.

But Joplin Westbury, in spite of the good gift he had brought, seemed ill at ease and awkward, chafing under the united thanks of the innocent family, and hurriedly took himself off. When he had gone, Eddy extended the invitation, for himself and his mother, for Mr. Tolliver and Miriam to come to Pay Dirt.

They spent the evening talking together quietly, every seemingly light word overlaying an undercurrent of deep and glad thanksgiving, and then Miriam led her father out to the waiting car, the other girls trooping noisily with them for a last good-by.

"Now you see, my dear little girls, and try to remember, that things do work together for good," he said, smiling.

"Yes," whispered Eddy Jackson to Ginger, "but just the same, I wish you'd scout around among the members, and see if there's something underhanded going on. I don't like the looks of old Jop. Ordinarily, he just loves to play Heaven, but tonight he was all fussed up. Between you and me, I think there's something rotten in Red Thrush.

* * * * * * * *

After all, Miss Jenkins was merely a temporary companion in the parsonage. It was Marjory, the pretty twin who, since the marriage of Helen, and in the absence of Miriam, must reign as hostess. It was a pleasant experience for Marjory, and she took it seriously, superintending the entire arrangement of her father's room for the young minister, and merely permitting Miss Jenkins to dust and sweep, and Ginger to wash the windows.

All during the Saturday morning, as their hands were busy with their pleasant toil, they chatted eagerly of this strange and unexpected break in the even tenor of their lives.

"Too bad Helen had to miss it," said Ginger.

"I shall be very dignified. I dare say he will think I am twenty-one."

"Well, remember he's a preacher, and don't waste your good powder on him."

"Mr. Westbury says he is a very brilliant student, very."

"Such a dumb name, Hiram," complained Ginger. "Wouldn't you just know his parents were Methodists?"

By one o'clock they were dressed for his arrival. Miss Jenkins, thoroughly rehearsed in her part, seated herself sedately in the living room with the Central Christian Advocate. Marjory repaired to her father's room to give a last deft touch to table, to curtains, to the fall of the lace bedspread. Ginger, after meeting the postman half way down the flagstone path, started to the attic with her mail, six letters, each with a small hard roundness in one corner.

There Was a Sudden Crash From Below, a Splintering, a Thud.

Six dimes were added to her hoard in the doll's trunk. Ginger shook the trunk affectionately. Two dollars and eighty cents now. Not so very much, yet, but still, considering the original outlay of three postage stamps, it was doing very well. And certainly, business was growing. Never a day passed now without at least one welcome letter for E. Tolliver, one dime for the home. But for all her immersion in her growing fund, Ginger did not overlook the immediate interest of the arrival of Hiram Buckworth. While she would scorn to betray an undue curiosity about any male creature, she did feel that a pre-knowledge of his general appearance would assist her greatly in forming an estimate of his character.

Finding that she could not command a view of the street from the high dormer window of the attic, not even by standing on the backless chair, she turned the key upon her accumulation of dimes, and went downstairs. In her father's room, the only one opening upon the street, she found Marjory, ostensibly draping the curtains to more becoming lines, but with a long-lashed eye upon the approach.

"I dare say he looks like most immature ministers," remarked Ginger coldly. "And judging by the Hiram, he will have baggy trousers and a wilted mustache."

She descended the circular staircase with great dignity. Miss Jenkins had abandoned the Advocate and crouched behind the portieres turning an anxious gaze to the corner, a block away, where the newcomer must first appear.

"I hope he sees you," said Ginger bitterly. "It will give him such a good impression of our disinterestedness."

"I—just wondered if he was coming," said Miss Jenkins, fluttering back to the Advocate. "Now, I am just to say who I am—and who you and Marjory are—when you come down, I mean—and tell him ten dollars a week—before you come down, I mean, and if he argues, I am to yield with dignity. And then I take him upstairs—after you girls come down, I mean—and say dinner will be served at six o'clock."

Obviously, the windows of the living room were closed to scornful Ginger Ella. One vantage spot was left to her, the basement, and she repaired thither. As the narrow window in front was too high for her, she rolled an empty apple barrel to the proper position, stood it upright, and laid an old ironing board across it. Then she climbed up, with great care for her best summer frock, and was rewarded with a clear view of the entire street.

At exactly two-fifteen, Hiram Buckworth briskly rounded the corner, and made for the old brown parsonage, unaware that from various well-shadowed recesses, three pairs of steady bright eyes bore silent witness to his approach. Hiram Buckworth saw only a pleasantly sun-burned shingle-brown old house set in a well-trimmed lawn canopied with broad-branching maples, saw an inviting pathway of old flagstones, bordered with pansies. The eyes behind the curtained windows saw a tall young man, who walked vigorously, with a vigorous swing to his arms, a vigorous swing to his legs, noticed particularly how the sunshine cast bronze into his dark hair, for, most unministerially, he carried his hat in one hand.

"What a nice, clean, Christian boy he looks," approved Miss Jenkins in great relief.

"Why, how very young," wondered Marjory.

"He doesn't look any Hiram to me," was Ginger's private comment.

But Hiram Buckworth, unaware of these secret impressions, marched briskly up the flagstone path, set down his bag, and rang the bell. A decent interval was permitted to elapse—Ginger, holding her breath on the apple barrel counted the approved twenty—and at the very number, Miss Jenkins went to the door, a flustered and flushed Miss Jenkins, unused to doing the honors of a house.

"I am Hiram Buckworth," he said pleasantly, brown hand outstretched.

"Are you indeed?" stammered Miss Jenkins. "I am Miss Jenkins—I will introduce the girls when they come down. I was just to let you in— Oh, goodness me, whats' that?"

There was a sudden crash from below, a splintering, a thud, and over all, a sharp expletive which in any other than a ministerial home would have been considered distinctly profane. For Ginger, aghast at the stumbling confusion of the embarrassed Miss Jenkins, of which she heard every word, in impulsive eagerness to rush to the rescue of the parsonage reputation, had stepped too far on the end of the ironing board, so that it flew up suddenly and dropped her into the barrel which overturned on top of her. The silence that followed the first crash was an immense one.

"Nothing," chattered Miss Jenkins volubly, "nothing at all, you see. Just a noise—lots of noises here—house full of them—rats, I suppose—rats in the wall. Come right upstairs. I'll show you your room."

Marjory, holding her breath at the window upstairs, heard these horrible words. What was the woman thinking of? Her instructions had been positive, oft-repeated, to take him to the living room, break the news of ten dollars a week, and hold him in conversation until the appearance of the two girls for formal introduction! Up the stairs—and Marjory spying upon him from the window! She ran toward the door, but already they were at the curve of the circular staircase. She threw a wild glance about the room—no possible escape—the closet, the bath with its single entrance! She, Marjory, presiding hostess of the house to be caught in this humiliating predicament? Not to be thought of!

As quick as thought, she dropped to the floor and crawled beneath the bed, where the fringe of the lace spread sufficed to curtain her retreat.

"It's a nice room," rambled Miss Jenkins nervously. "It's Mr. Tolliver's own room. I hope you like religious books. Mr. Tolliver never reads anythings else—not that he reads anything now, poor dear, what with his eyes—I suppose you've heard about that?"

"Yes, such a misfortune."

Highest Sense of Duty in "Doing Unto Others"

Men talk much of duty, but chiefly spend the most of their lives in efforts to evade its full obligations as ideally expressed through the ages.

Tennyson says: "Sweet it is to have done the thing one ought."

To appreciate and realize this sweetness is the reward of duty. Sometimes it is hard to do the thing we ought to do, but conscious satisfaction invariably soothes the soul that has been true to itself.

Duty is protean in aspect, but there is never a possibility that one will fail to recognize it in any expression, in any manifestation. There can be no mistake. It speaks a various language, but we inevitably understand.

The thing we ought to do makes for spiritual growth and development always. We may evade, refuse to do our duty, but in so doing we invite suffering and loss of spiritual stature and estate.

To do unto others as we would that they should do unto us is duty in the highest sense. If men would but live this simple rule all our problems would be soon solved and the world be very glad.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Lesson for January 19

JESUS BEGINS HIS MINISTRY

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 4:12-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Chooses Some Helpers.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Begins His Ministry.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Jesus Began His Ministry.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Comprehensive Program of Jesus.

Jesus began His official work as Messiah at Jerusalem where He presented Himself to the men of the Jewish nation.

I. The King His Own Herald (vv. 12-17).

1. The reason for this (v. 12).

The news of the imprisonment of John the Baptist caused Jesus to forsake Judea and go into Galilee. The fate of John was accepted as foreshadowing His own. The rejection of the forerunner meant the rejection of the King, whose advent he proclaimed. Because of this He withdrew from the metropolis and went to the remote regions where His work would attract less attention.

2. To whom the proclamation was made (vv. 13-16).

It was to the people at Capernaum in fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy (9:1, 2). These people were not blessed with such privileges as those in and around Jerusalem. Thus we see that the darkest and most corrupt of the provinces was getting the light first. In this we see a foreshadowing of the present age, when the gospel of the grace of God is being preached to the Gentiles.

3. His message (v. 17).

"Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." This is the same kingdom which John the Baptist and the Old Testament prophets proclaimed. It means the Messianic earth rule of Jesus Christ. It is for this we pray when we intelligently say, "Thy kingdom come." At that time the light will break forth which shall illumine the whole earth.

II. The King Calling to Himself Assistants (vv. 18-22).

1. His command of authority (vv. 18, 19).

He did not endeavor to persuade them, and He did not use arguments but issued the mandate. To command is the King's prerogative—not to argue or entreat.

2. The station of the servants called (vv. 18, 21).

They were men of lowly birth and occupation—fishermen. God chooses the foolish things of this world to confound the wise and the weak things to confound the things which are mighty (I Cor. 1:26).

3. They were called to definite service (v. 19).

"I will make you fishers of men." He had previously called them to be disciples (John 1:36-42). He now called them to service. This call therefore was not the gospel call to sinners which is "believe on me," but the call to service of those who have already heeded His call to discipleship. The qualities which made for good fishers—patience, bravery to face the storm and the night, the perseverance which toiled all night though no fish were caught—would make for good fishers of men.

4. Their prompt obedience (vv. 20, 22).

They put their trust in Him who called, believing that He was able to supply their needs. There is no time for delay when the King commands.

III. The King's Triumphant Progress (vv. 23-25).

He went the whole round of Galilee, teaching the Scriptures, preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, and healing all manner of diseases. He did a threefold work:

1. Teaching the Scriptures in the synagogues (v. 23).

The revelation of God needed to be explained. This is what He was doing in Nazareth (Luke 4:16-22). Such is the primary business of every minister.

2. Preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom (v. 23).

The King who was present and was heralding His own mission, was ready to establish His kingdom if they would have been willing to receive Him.

3. Healing all manner of diseases (vv. 23-25).

"His fame went throughout all Syria, and they brought unto Him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and He healed them."

What God Has to Tell Us

If we think no more of ourselves than we ought to think, if we seek not our own but others' welfare, if we are prepared to take all things as God's dealings with us, then we may have a chance of catching from time to time what God has to tell us.

Paying Toll to the Devil

He who does evil that good may come pays a toll to the devil to let him into heaven.—J. G. and A. W. Hare.

Serious Problem Faced by Chinese Christians

In its war on superstition, which has involved the destruction of a number of temple idols, the Nanking government has aroused the Buddhists of Hankow, who, claiming that overdrastic attacks have been made on their faith, have appointed a delegation to visit Nanking and to demand that a policy of no discrimination against Buddhism be adopted. The delegation declares that if religion is to be suppressed or religious property confiscated then they demand that all religions be treated on the same basis. The government, in accepting a petition from the Buddhists, has let it be known that the delegation will be given a hearing. Holding office under the government are many Chinese Christians who are now to be faced with the problem of agreeing to attack their own religion as well as Buddhism or else show why the Buddhists are being denied religious liberty.

SPORTING NEWS

On Friday evening of last week the High School of this place dropped a double header to Leo at the Spencerville gymnasium. In the first game, between the second teams of the schools the game was one sidedly in favor of Leo. In the second game between the first H. S. teams the game was more close and evenly matched. The referee absotively and posilutely officiated in a most efficient and fair capacity, holding tenaciously to the sacred and honorable tradition of impartial and honest officialdom.

We believe that our high school, if allowed to play, can defeat a team of five of the best referees in the state, in the line or behind the whistle—on some good neutral floor.

The score at the first half was a dozen apiece. Tiger leaps and bear hugs, and parachute drops were the main features of the game on both sides. The local fans are good sports and like good clean basket ball, even defeat—but defeat must come from no where but the opposing team to suit our taste.

—Honest Ingun.

Hamilton defeated the Independents here Saturday night in a fast game, with a score 36 to 10. The visitors were indeed a fast and husky team. The locals took their defeat without a whimper and boast of the splendid playing of the Hamilton boys. A good delegation accompanied the team.

THE BEST REMEDY FOR BAD COLDS

(By Betty Barclay)

A high medical authority recently stated that one of the most important things we can do, both to prevent and to correct colds or flu, it to take action against acidosis.

Keeping away from technical terms as much as possible, acidosis merely means that the body is less alkaline than is should be. It is present with every common cold, and may even cause colds. It weakens the body's power to throw off germs and lowers resistance so that a cold gets an easy start. When once well started it is likely to "hang on" and get worse instead of better.

Colds are not the simple little thing we once thought them. We may live through dozens or perhaps hundreds of them, and then have one develop into something serious, with fatal results. Although physicians seem to feel that a cold nipped in the bud is a simple thing to take care of, they are constantly forced to do their utmost to save the life of a stubborn man or woman who refuses to seek their services until it is almost too late.

Hundres of thousands of people have colds at almost any time. When an epidemic gets in full sway, the number leaps into the millions—and usually one or more epidemics, of more or less volume, pay a visit between the first of November and the last of March.

What do you do when such an epidemic hits your locality, or when you as an individual feel a cold coming on? At the first sign of a cold, you should go home as quickly as possible. Of course you may lose a day's time, but you may also save twenty years or more—which is more than a fair compensation. Take a hot bath and get into bed at once. Then drink a full glass of hot lemonade. The "sweat-out" that follows will eliminate the poisons.

In the morning pour the juice of one lemon into a half glass of water. Stir in a half teaspoon of baking soda. Drink it while it effervesces. Repeat three times a day until all cold symptoms disappear. Also, see your doctor before the cold becomes serious. If your early home treatment does not seem to get at the root of things, call the family physician immediately, for if this treatment does not suffice that cold has probably taken root and is a very dangerous companion.

It may seem strange to suggest lemon juice in this way, after stating that the body needs to be more alkaline. The fact is that both lemons and oranges have a decided alkaline reaction when taken into the system, so that the lemon juice rapidly helps to bring about the alkaline condition desired.

Knowing this, it is easy to go a step farther and suggest more fruit cups, more lemonade, more fruit salads, more spinach, more celery, lettuce, cabbage—in fact more fruit, vegetables and milk while you are well, so that the body may be kept strictly alkaline. Reduce a bit on meat, fish, eggs, bread and other acid-producing foods, and fill up the vacant spots with vegetables and fruits. If you do this while you are well, you may not need to fight a cold this coming year.

But if a sneez or a chill announces that a cold has arrived, follow the directions given above and forget the fact that you have sometimes been able to fight a cold while at work. The man so healthy that he can do this lattel task, may in the doing infect his fellow workers who will not be able to follow in his footsteps—which, by the way, is something well worth thinking of.

ADVANTAGES FOR THE CHILDREN
(Hilda Richmond)

Mr. Schramm was rejoicing over his wonderfully good year in business, more because of what he could do for his children than for his own personal benefits.

"I'm going to get the boys each a tip top sled," he confided to his wife as December twenty-fifth approached. "When I was a boy I had to make my own things, and I want my children to have some advantages. I well remember how it took four of us boys to drag the heavy old sled we cobbled together to the hill where we wanted to slide."

Santa Clause was very generous to the Schramm children, and their parents enjoyed the fun as much as they did — winding toys and making wheels go round on Christmas morning. It was an ideal Christmas for coasting, so after dinner in company with a number of neighborhood youngsters the three boys set out for the hill a few blocks away.

"Let's go over and watch them, Mary," said Mr. Schramm. "We won't let them see us, but I'd like to know if they are able to manage their new sleds, this being the first winter we've lived where they could coast. It's a novelty to them, but their Dad coasted from November till spring, year after year, at his little farm home."

Four boys panted along near Mr. and Mrs. Schramm with a home-made sled. Their caps were tied firmly down with old pieces of flannel that might have been a petticoat in former days, and their home-made mittens were clumsy and big. Mr. Schramm looked at them with pity in his eyes remembering his own limited outfit in boyhood. But the clattering boys hurried merrily on. They reached the brow of the hill out of breath and throwing themselves face down on the sled they flew like birds down the hill. Back they came panting and instantly every boy on the hill was bargaining for a ride. Mr. Schramm became intensely interested. He and his wife arrived in time to hear their own children begging to go down "just once."

Catching sight of their father they rushed to him to say, "O, Papa, won't you help us make a good sled like that? It is so much better than the ones Santa Claus made!"

When Mr. and Mrs. Schramm walked homeward after watching the fun, the father laughed as he said, "Mary, all my ideas of advantages have had a severe jolt this afternoon. We'll be cheating our children if we don't encourage them to meet and overcome difficulties."

"I'm glad we've both found that out before the children are grown up," said Mrs. Schramm.

ST. JOE INDEPENDENTS PUT ONE OVER ON HAMILTON

The local Independent basket ball team played in a double header with Butler against the city team of Hamilton in the High School Gym at Hamilton Tuesday night, in a very unusual game. Hamilton had three full teams in uniform on the floor which signified that they fully intended taking both games—easy.

St. Joe played the first game. Hamilton started things off by taking a ten to two lead over St. Joe but St. Joe came in for a tie score and the fight was on. During the game the score was tied four times but in the last eight minutes St. Joe piled up a lead of two points at the 30 to 28 stage of the game and Hamilton called time out to put in another team in pleasant anticipation of just what was going to happen to St. Joe.

The game then resumed and Hamilton made a long shot tying the score 30 to 30. St. Joe crawled in the fourth speed ahead and Engle, Kinsey and Williams sunk one apiece in the net for a 36 to 30 lead.

The fans of both Waterloo and Hamilton gave Hamilton team the raspberries for throwing in a fresh team and at the same time getting a worse beating than they had previously gotten. Hamilon was in the air and did not come down during the last five minutes, making only one foul throw, which ended the game 36 to 31.

St. Joe played a fast clean game being able to hit the old net any old time. A return game will be played soon with Hamilton.

OBITUARY

Edwin Leland White, son of Edwin and Lela White, was born May 7, 1924, at Fort Wayne, Indiana. Departed this life January 18, 1830, at the home of his birth in Fort Wayne, at the age of 5 years, 8 months and 11 days.

He leaves a father, mother, and one sister, Naomi May, one grandfather, Samuel Williams and one grandmother, Mrs. Pearl White, of Toledo, and many other relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

He had attended school on Friday and came home with a headache and on Saturday he died of bronchitis.

The funeral was held from the Kinsey funeral home at St. Joe Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock with Rev. B. W. Mayfield officiating. Burial was made in Riverside Cemetery.

TO SETTLE ESTATE OF HIS FATHER

Walter H. Stewart of just north of St. Joe, has been appointed in the DeKalb circuit court as administrator of the estate of his father, the late James W. Stewart, who died at Lancing, Mich., last Sept. 28, leaving $500 in personal property. The son is the only heir. He filed $1,000 bond, with Carl E. Perkins and M. C. Sechler as sureties. The administrator was authorized to settle for $550 his claim against the Central Advertising Co. of Lansing, for the fatal injury of his father by a motor vehicle owned by the company. James W. Stewart was seventy-six years of age at the time of his death.

BENEFIT GAMES GO OVER BIG

The twin performance of the two basket ball games played here in the Community Gymnasium on last Friday evening was a wholehearted success. As advertised, this performance was for the benefit of Victor Coburn, who had the unlucky misfortune of having his foot mashed while riding on a Wabash freight between Peru and Lafayette a few days ago and who later had his foot amputated as a result of the accident. Mr, Coburn is a graduate of 1929 Graduating Class of the St. Joe High School and at the time of the accident he was taking an engineering course at the Indiana State University of Lafayette. Besides these educational attainments, Mr. Coburn has a good mound career in base ball, having made good against some pretty good professional teams. These things, together with John's other quality, gentlemanliness, caused the Mr. Mark Williams, Mgr. of the Independent basket ball team and the citizens of the community to put on a benefit performance of two games to aid Mr. Coburn to complete his year's work at college.

As a result a record attendance jamed the Gym and the proceeds were announced to be $60.00. St. Joe is no exception to the Golden Rule. The town is like certain individuals, they harbor a big heart where it is least expected.

The performance was good. The first game was between the hack drivers of the school busses and Bachtel's Tigers. This was a very high class exhibition of dramatic art and high class vaudeville, seasoned with athletics of the scientific sort. Sargeant Bachtel came on the floor first with his motley crew, dressed in costumes all the way from that of Captain Kid to the Impossible Turk, while Brigadier Jennings sauntered in with his outfit, resembling just anything you might have in mind, long and short in stature, etc. The game was full of funny, awkward fantastic maneuvers.

The second game was between the Ironmen of Auburn and the local Independents. This was one of the cleanest games that has been played on the gym floor this year. The first half ended 18 to 10 in Auburn's favor with no fouls called on either side. In the second half the Independents put on a rally and shot four straights from the far out areas and tied the score. From then on it was anybody's game, the score being tied twice after. At the 28 mark the score was tied by St. Joe and the game went into the five minute period. St. Joe started things off with a toss under the hoop and maintained this lead until the end. The score being 30 to 28 in St. Joe's favor. This five minute period was full of fast playing but not unnecessarily rough, most of the time being spent in time outs to pull legs back in place of three of the injured players. Kinsey, Stomm, Williams, Tustison, and Engle all starred on long shots. The whole management wishes to thank all who contributed to the success of this enterprise.

ABOUT TO LOSE HIS RIGHT EYE

Karl Akins, as the result of being hit in the eye by a twig, while skating Monday, may lose his right eye. His doctor gives him no hopes of saving it although he is getting along as well as possible. He is at home.

AUTHORIZING PENSIONS

Since the present Session of Congressman David Hogg, who represents the Twelfth Indiana District, has secured the passage through the House of Representatives of twenty-six Special Bills providing pensions, or increases of pensions for Civil War widows who were not adequately provided for by already existing pension laws. Among those living in this locality who are benefitted are; Mrs. Elizabeth Hess, Garrett; Mrs. Georgia Hersh, Avilla; Mrs. Amanda Dirrim, Hamilton; Mrs. Martha E. Seitz, Auburn; Mrs. Candace J. Carr, Ashley.

Fish and Game Club Information

Fur-bearing Animals Held for Breeding Purposes

Persons who have taken or purchased fur-bearing animals alive and expect to keep them for breeding purposes after January 15th in the close season, should be sure to write the Division of Fish and Game for the necessary application blank upon which to apply for a Certificate of Inspection (breeder's permit.) This blank is for the purpose of obtaining a necessary record, and registering all persons holding protected fur-bearing animals in captivity in close season, as permitted by law. The information asked for on the blank calls for the location of the premises and the number and kind of animals they have penned. The fee of $5.00 per annum charged for the Certificate of Inspection should not be sent to the Department unless accompanied by the above application blank. Persons may hold birds and animals for breeding purposes in open season without a Certificate of Inspection, but to hold same lawfully in captivity in close season requires a Certificate of Inspection. The fee of $5.00 charged is mainly to cover the expense of making inspections that are needed to ascertain whether those holding certificates are obeying the laws or not.

Arrests and Convictions Made for Violations of the Fish and Game Laws in November, 1929

Arrests made for violations of the fish and game laws in November numbered 527. Convictions were made in 495 cases; 23 remained to be tried; 9 were dismissed. Fines and costs amounted to $10,258.60. The leading offenses were as follows: Taking fur-bearing animals in close season, 215; hunting, fishing or trapping with out license, 143; hunting on Sunday, 59; hunting without permission, 42, the affidavits being signed by the landowners; shooting on public highways, and with searchlights illegally, 16; fishing with nets and traps illegally, 10; killing quail out of season, 7; killing pheasants, 7; killing squirrels in close season, 6, and dynamiting fish, 6.

HOME BUREAU ACHIEVEMENT DAY

The DeKalb County Home Bureau will hold their seventh annual Achievement Day Program in the Assembly Room of the Court House on Friday, January 24th, at 1:30 P. M. The Home Bureau folks are looking forward to this meeting with a great deal of pleasure. This will be the first time that the public has been invited to a meeting where Miss Zaring, the Purdue University Specialist has given a demonstration. Miss Zaring will demonstrate "The selection and effective arrangement of accessories in the Home."

She will give directions for making many of them including the attractive new parchment waste paper baskets, decorative pillows, footstools, etc. There will be a display of these materials and other pieces that the Project Leaders have made during the year. This has been a very practical course and the Project Leaders are quite well pleased with the project. Those who have not had an opportunity of attending any of the Project Meetings will have this opportunity of getting some of this work direct from the project specialist.

All the Home Bureau Folks of the County are expected to attend this and as many of the town folks as care to see the work. We will continue this Project next year with more advanced subjects involved. Such organizations as the Sewing Clubs are welcome to send representatives of their Club to the Project Leader's Meeting. The work that is given is as of much value to the town women as it is to the folks who live on farms.

A SUCCESSFUL NUMBER

The third number of the lecture course was held in the gymnasium of the High School on Thursday evening of last week.

This number was given by Miss Dorothy Dyer and consisted of readings and musical numbers. Miss Dyer introduced her numbers by a recitation in rhyme, giving her audience an idea of what was in store for them; then followed in rapid succession a pleasing variety of selections, as stated in her poetic introduction. It would be hard to determine just which of her selections were most favorably received by her hearers, suffice it to say all were good, the impersonations revealed the fact that she is an all observing person, and gifted with the art of mimicry to a remarkable degree, whether depicting the woes of the much abused wife, or illustrating the joys (?) of a jaunt in the old T-model Ford in the quest of health and recreation.

Perhaps it might be truly said that she specialized in musical numbers on the piano accordian; the applause she received, upon appearing with this instrument, attested the fact that she and her audience were in hearty accord.

The attendance was not as good as this number warranted.

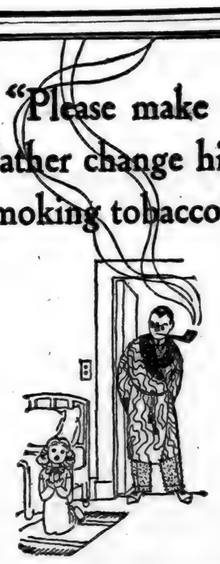
"Please make Father change his smoking tobacco"



MEN go to their graves ignorant of the suffering an over-strong pipe has caused others. But now, we trust, Father will lose no time in discovering Sir Walter Raleigh, whose mild, fragrant blend is as popular with the smoked-at, as it is delightful to the smoker. This blend of choice Burleys has plenty of body and a very special fragrance. Yet it's so mild you can smoke it all day long, with only the sensation of increasing enjoyment.

How to Take Care of Your Pipe

(Hint No. 1) Don't switch tobaccos when you break in a new pipe. Stick to the same brand for 50 or more pipefuls. Mixing tobaccos makes a pipe either strong or flat. Send for our free booklet, "How to Take Care of Your Pipe." Dept. 93, The Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation, Louisville, Ky.

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

STORY FROM THE START

In the usually quiet home of Rev. Mr. Tolliver of Red Thrush, Iowa, his motherless daughters, Helen, Miriam and Ellen—"Ginger Ella"—are busy "grooming" their sister Marjory for participation in the "beauty pageant" that evening. With Eddy Jackson, prosperous young farmer, her escort, Marjory leaves for the anticipated triumph. Overwork has seriously affected Mr. Tolliver's eyes. Marjory wins the beauty prize, $50.00. She gives the money to her father to consult Chicago specialists. Ginger meets Alexander Murdock. Mr. Tolliver returns, the doctors giving him little hope. Ginger gets an idea for a "Parsonage Home for the Blind" and solicits funds. She gets results at once. Helen is married and leaves the parsonage. Mr. Tolliver goes to Eddy Jackson's farm for a rest. Hiram Buckworth is engaged as substitute pastor.

"Yes, such a nice man. That's your bathroom—you needn't be afraid to use it, it goes with this room. We have another one at the back. Marjory emptied the closet for you, and the bureau drawers are empty. We have supper at six o'clock, and— Oh, I forgot to introduce the girls. But they didn't come down, did they?"

Beneath the bed, Marjory writhed in helpless fury at the poor woman's fluttering anxiety. But she went out at last, and closed the door behind her. Marjory lay rigid beneath the bed, hating the young preacher, hating Miss Jenkins, despising herself for her childish curiosity. Her only hope was that quick-witted Ginger, missing her, would guess her predicament, and devise a scheme to get the new boarder out of the room for a while. Unfortunately, Ginger was in a predicament of her own.

But Hiram Buckworth knew nothing of these unpleasant complications. He put his bag on a chair, and opened it, leisurely. Then he went to the closet, and looked in. Crossed to the windows, and looked out. Stood before the bookshelves, examining the titles of books, now and then taking out a volume for a brief inspection.

"Oh, dear heaven," prayed Marjory, "don't let him get inspired to write a sermon."

Hiram Buckworth left the bookshelves, and had a look at the bathroom. He was whistling softly between his teeth. No hymn the tune that he whistled, something light, something catchy, with rolling cadences. Presently he broke into song, low song, barely more than a hum, in a pleasant low voice.

"'Now I ask you—very con-fiden-tially—Ain't she—sweet?'"

Slowly, he removed his coat, shook it out, and hung it over the back of the chair, and took off his collar and tie. From his bag, he drew out a fresh lot of ties, and selected one with nice discrimination, his eyes flashing quick comparisons in color tones from sox to tie.

"Oh, I hope he isn't going to change his clothes," thought Marjory, and shut her eyes very tightly indeed.

Hiram Buckworth went to the bathroom, and turned both faucets into the tub. Marjory could hear the trickle of the water over his fingers as he tested the warmth of it.

"'Very—con-fidentially—'"

Marjory, beneath the bed, was bathed in cold perspiration. He came deliberately back into the room, took shoes from the bag, removed the shoetrees noisily, shook out fresh shirts and placed them in the drawer. Finally, from the rack, he chose a thick bath towel. Marjory watching through the sheltering lace fringe saw him return to the bathroom. The door—would he close it? His hand was on the knob. Yes, he pulled it—slowly. It was ajar—a little—just a very little—

The door slammed shut.

Not one moment did Marjory Tolliver linger beneath that bed. She gathered together all her lithe young muscles, and with one vigorous jerk, propelled her slim body from beneath the bed in the direction of the door, the hall door. She leaped to her feet, and flashed into the hallway. Hiram Buckworth hearing the slight sound, the click of the latch, opened the bathroom door.

"Yes?" he called. "What is it?"

The door to the hall stood open. He crossed the room, and looked down the corridor. At the farther end, he saw, or thought he saw, the flying French heel of a white slipper.

"Haunted," he said to himself. "That's nice."

But when he went back into the room, he not only closed the door, carefully, but turned the key in the lock as well.

"'I ask you—very con-fiden-tially'"—he whistled softly as he turned back into the bathroom—"'Ain't—she—sweet?'"

Miss Jenkins had gone straight from her reception of the new minister to the rescue of Ginger Ella, for she had rightly interpreted both the sudden crash and the ensuing silence as indicative of disaster in that direction. Unfortunately for that young person, the apple barrel had nails in it, nails that stuck inward. Ginger, bleeding on both arms, bruised on both knees, and altogether furious, was further annoyed by the fact that she was pinned into the barrel by the inturning nails. At every slight motion to extricate herself, there were ominous little sounds of tearing cloth spelling ruin for the summer frock. With Miss Jenkins' help, however, she managed at last, slowly, not without pain, to get herself out of the barrel with only a few minor rents and stains of blood upon the precious garment.

Some two hours later, Hiram Buckworth, with his most ingratiating smile, stepped out onto the rambler-shaded veranda, where his eyes fell upon a pleasant picture. Miss Jenkins sat in a low rocker, carefully mending a torn new summer frock, while Ginger, in a plain flame-colored smock, sat on a stool shelling peas. And in the hammock, one slim foot crossed over the other, both white arms over her head, lay Marjory, so still and lovely that Hiram Buckworth caught his breath at sight of her.

"I beg pardon," he said pleasantly, "may I come out? I don't have to stay in my room until supper, do I?"

Marjory sat stiffly upright in the hammock. Ginger shook the dust of the garden from her hands, and set the pan of peas on the floor at her side. Miss Jenkins flushed and fluttered anxiously.

"Of course not," she stammered. "I mean, by all means. Come right over. I was going to introduce you to the girls, anyhow."

Hiram Buckworth joined the small group in the shadowy corner.

"This is Marjory, Marjory Tolliver," fluttered Miss Jenkins. "Not the oldest—Helen is the oldest, but she's married—Marjory is one of the twins. And this is Ginger Ella. Ellen, I mean. We just call her Ginger. She's the baby."

Marjory indicated the other rocker with a graceful gesture of a white hand. "Do sit down," she said.

Hiram Buckworth looked hard at Marjory.

"Twins," he said. "It doesn't seem possible."

Marjory's lovely eyes questioned him mutely.

"Does she, the other twin, look like you?"

"Oh, no, no indeed, not a bit," chattered Miss Jenkins. "Just the opposite, you might say. Miriam is still and dark and—"

"Miriam is very brainy," interposed Ginger quickly.

"I thought there couldn't be two," he said, in a tone of great relief.

They talked together in the comradely fashion of parsonage people the world over, as a family, one in spirit.

"I wish I could see your father today," he said. "I should feel more at home in his pulpit if I knew him personally. Don't you suppose we could rent a car tonight, and drive out to see him? If it is not too far?"

"Eddy Jackson would come for us," said Ginger.

"Tub Andrews would take us," suggested Marjory.

"Mr. Tolliver would be so pleased—such a nice man," said Miss Jenkins.

"Can't we just rent a car? I hate to bother your friends—and it wouldn't cost much."

"But when you take out ten dollars for board," said Ginger warningly.

"Or perhaps Miss Jenkins here forgot to tell you about it," Marjory added.

"I don't recall that she mentioned it," he said pleasantly. "It seems very reasonable indeed."

"But when you consider that you only get fifteen—" Ginger's voice trailed off to a significant silence.

"But we decided that if you objected, we would keep you for eight," encouraged Marjory.

"I shouldn't think of objecting," he said. "Quite the contrary. I am sure putting up with me is worth even more."

"And I will do your laundry with the girls'," added Miss Jenkins. "And there really isn't much to spend money for in Red Thrush."

They told him of their father, of his patience, his faith, his sense of humor. They told him of Joplin Westbury, and the new church. They told him of Eddy Jackson, at Pay Dirt.

"And whose boy-friend is Eddy Jackson?" he asked, reflective eyes on Marjory, sitting stiffly erect in the hammock.

"Nobody's. Eddy Jackson isn't that kind," said Ginger indignantly.

"I may as well explain Ginger, I mean Ellen, right at the start," said Marjory, laughing. "She is against boy-friends. She thinks they are simply disgusting. And she thinks the rest of us—even Miss Jenkins—are simply man-mad. Ginger thinks a man who 'paws' should be shot at sunrise, if not sooner."

He smiled understandingly. "And who, then, is Eddy Jackson?"

"Eddy Jackson," exclaimed Ginger with one of her broad sweeping gestures, "is father's best and dearest and most intimate friend, a genuine character, and no base pretender."

In the early evening, answering their meek request over the telephone, Eddy Jackson, busy with his experiments, sent one of the college students in his car for them and they drove out to the farm. Eddy was still busy in the laboratory, but Mr. Tolliver waited on the porch for them, with Miriam, and—this to Ginger's speechless fury—Alexander Murdock. Without a word to any of them, she marched into the laboratory, completely spoiling a delicate experiment.

"Eddy Jackson, you double-crossed me."

"I did not," he denied, quickly following her line of thought. "I didn't invite him. He came out by himself this afternoon, and he looked at Miriam, and stayed. I don't think he'll ever go home again. And besides, you didn't tell me to keep him away from anybody but Marjory."

This Ginger could not deny, so, with her usual sang froid, she dismissed the entire subject, and led Eddy out to meet the new minister.

Hiram Buckworth shook hands with him cordially. "I am glad to meet you," he said, "and I am looking forward most keenly to knowing your father. I have heard nothing but the recital of his rare virtues since I reached Red Thrush."

"My father?" Eddy was nonplused. "You must be mistaken. I have no father, my father is dead—"

"Oh, I beg pardon. I see I am mistaken. I inferred that it was your father—they merely spoke of him a Eddy Jackson, Mr. Tolliver's particular friend and crony."

Eddy looked unutterable things. "Oh you mean me. I am Eddy Jackson. The only one."

"You? But, gracious, they said—Well, I understand— My mistake, I see, excuse me."

"I know." Eddy Jackson laughed. "You mean Ginger Ella. Sure. She puts me, and her father, and Moses in the same class. We're all arch angels together."

Seam of Burning Coal Keeps Mountain Warm

A unique Australian phenomenon is the "Burning Mountain" at Wingen in northern New South Wales, which scientists say has been on fire 1,000 years.

According to a party of geologists, who have just returned from an exploration of the mountain, says an Associated Press dispatch from Sydney, there lies below the surface a burning coal seam. Long before European settlement in Australia "Burning Mountain" was known to the aborigines, and to them it owes its name, Wingen, signifying "fire."

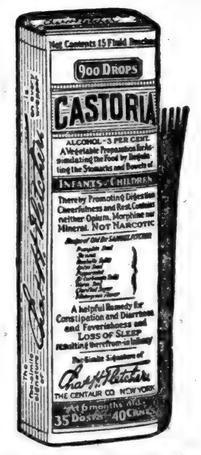
The geologists report that the summit presents the appearance of the debris of a vast block of buildings consumed by fire with an explosion or two thrown in. Smoke and steam continuously are issuing from different points, and there are numerous deposits of alum and sulphur.

The burning seam probably is 30 feet or more in thickness, say the geologists, and is being consumed at the rate of from 120 to 130 yards each century. The warmth of the mountain in winter time attracts cattle, horses, and wild animals.

"Debentures"

The word "debenture" means a customhouse certificate given to an importer—or an exporter—of goods to the effect that he is entitled to a drawback on the duty assessed.

When Babies FRET



There are times when a baby is too fretful or feverish to be sung to sleep. There are some pains a mother cannot pat away. But there's no time when any baby can't have the quick comfort of Castoria! A few drops, and your little one is soon at ease—back to sleep almost before you can slip away.

Remember this harmless, pure vegetable preparation when children are ailing. Don't stop its use when Baby has been brought safely through the age of colic, diarrhea, and other infantile ills. Give good old Castoria until your children are in their teens! Whenever coated tongues tell of constipation; whenever there's any sign of sluggishness that needs no stronger medicines to relieve. Castoria is pleasant-tasting; children love to take it. Buy the genuine—with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper.

Home Has More Danger Than Savages of Brazil

John J. Whitehead, explorer and lecturer, with a Jungle Warrior

JOHN J. WHITEHEAD, explorer and lecturer, has just returned from eight months in the jungles of South America, where he was searching for traces of the lost Colonel Fawcett and his son.

Dangerous as he found the jungle, he encountered a worse danger at home. But let him tell it.

"One of the great problems of a trip of this kind is keeping in healthy condition. When we started, some of the members of the party had laxatives with them, but made wise by experience I carried Nujol. All too quickly my stock ran out. Soon I was in bad shape—what with a diet of rice and beans, lacking vitamins and green vegetables.

"When we finally got back to civilization, entertained first in Brazil and later in the United States, I became positively ill. Severe stomach pains and poor elimination made me realize that Nujol would again prove the reliable, trusty keeper of health. Sure enough, with the first bottle the trouble disappeared.

Don't think Nujol is a medicine. It is as tasteless and colorless as clear water. It brings you, however, what your body needs like any other machine—lubrication. Just as a good bath washes our bodies clean, Nujol sweeps away, easily and normally, those internal bodily poisons (we all have them) that make us feel dull and headachy and sick. Nujol cannot hurt even a little baby; it forms no habit; it contains not one single drug. Doctors and nurses use it themselves and tell you to use it, if you want to be well.

Take Nujol every night for two weeks and prove to yourself how happy and bright and full of pep you can be, if your body is internally clean. Get a bottle today at any drug store. It costs but a few cents, and makes you feel like a million dollars. Start traveling the health-road to success and happiness—this very day!

Costly Proposition

Jackie—There! I knew there was something I had forgotten!—Passing Show.

Needless Pain!

Nowadays, people take Bayer Aspirin for many little aches and pains, and as often as they encounter any pain.

Why not? It is a proven antidote for pain. It works!

And Bayer Aspirin tablets are utterly harmless. You have the medical profession's word for that; they do not depress the heart.

So, don't let a cold "run its course." Don't wait for a headache to "wear off." Or regard neuralgia, neuritis, or even rheumatism as something you must endure. Only a physician can cope with the cause of such pain, but you can always turn to Bayer Aspirin for relief.

Bayer Aspirin is always available, and it always helps. Familiarize yourself with its many uses, and avoid a lot of needless suffering.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

LIFE'S LEVELS

AN ARTIST who never sees the work of other artists is unconscious of his own defects. To live and work within a world of one's own imagination may give one a comfortable feeling of self-satisfaction, but fails to produce any work of permanent value. The machine man, or automaton, is not alive. He is quite dead. The dead level in a world of life values is caused by the absence of contacts. The rock is dead because it has no power within itself to cause it to grow; it remains the same year in and out. The absence of contacts in either the natural or moral world means death. The dead level in the world of mental and spiritual values has been reached when growth or development is impossible.

L. A. Barrett.

The flowers suggest a higher level. They make contacts with the sun, rain and the moisture of mother earth. The living level is a higher realm of experience, in which environment has a very important influence.

Science may create a living level, but heart values create the aspiring level. On this level character, ambition, purposes, ideals rush for expression. On the aspiring level no problem is too difficult to encounter and no situation too dangerous to meet. The spirit of the aspiring level is to conquer, succeed and achieve. You may teach a dog a trick, but the trick dies with the dog. He cannot teach it to other dogs. Upon the mere living levels nothing more than that can possibly be accomplished, but the urge upon the aspiring levels is to bequeath to other generations the results of the best thought and experience of our own day.

The spirit of the aspiring level impelled Commander Byrd to attempt his 1,600 miles of aerial travel and to be the first man ever to have flown across both the North and South poles. It is the spirit of discovery and adventure; the spirit which creates, investigates and takes great risks in pursuit of permanent life values. The dead level is indifference; the living level is selfishness; the aspiring level is service.

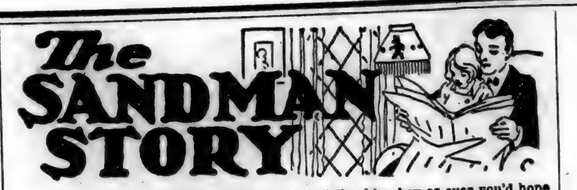
The SANDMAN STORY



THE LITTLE CHINA BOY

THERE he always stood in the kitchen—that little china boy.

Perhaps it would be more correct to say that he hung in the kitchen. For a nail kept him safely upon the wall, looking down over the kitchen stove.

He wore a big yellow hat—a hat such as fine old gentlemen wore many years ago.

It was of a nice yellow shade.

His suit was of blue, and around his neck was a white ruffled collar.

He wore white socks and little bright-red shoes. And he sat upon a pale-yellow basket.

He sat in the center and on either side were placed matches.

On one side were matches which had been used, and on the other side were matches which would be taken for lighting the stove.

He Sat in the Center and on Either Side Were Placed Matches.

And all of him was china. His shoes and his ruffled collar and his suit and his hat and his face and the basket upon which he sat were all made of china.

He had been in the family for many, many years. But he still was only a little boy.

Of course he was only china and so he never grew up.

There had been the little girl, Dolly. She had grown up and was a lady now, and there was another little girl who called Dolly "mother."

This little girl loved the china boy as Dolly had loved him. He had always been a favorite.

And why wouldn't he be a favorite? He was just as pleasant and friendly a little china boy as ever you'd hope to see.

He had a most delightful expression which was something between a smile and a look of friendliness.

Perhaps it was a mixture of both.

Then he had seen other little boys and girls grow up. The boys had big, deep voices now. And they talked of things which he could not understand at all.

They talked of "business" and "the store" and "the office," and whether "business was good" or "not good."

Splendid things about which to talk the little china boy thought, only he could not understand them very well.

Still, it made no difference. No one expected him to understand. They did not seem to think any the less of him because he could not understand.

And when the children talked about arithmetic and spelling they did not seem to think he was stupid because he couldn't spell and because he couldn't do sums.

All his little china life he had heard about sums and spelling and lessons and business, but none of all that could he understand.

He knew that he was very contented in his little basket seat upon the wall.

He knew that when the match was struck and the fire lighted good things were made upon the stove.

Pleasant odors of good things to eat came up to his little china nostrils.

But that was what he cared about—the odors. He did not need food.

The little red cheeks he had would not become pale because he did not eat.

No, indeed, they would stay as bright as ever. He did not need food.

Once in a while he had a beautiful bath, for the smoke and the dirt from the stove had a habit of coming up and settling upon him as though he were their home!

But after a bath how shiny and lovely he did look. His clothes never became shabby. He had worn the same suit for many, many, many years, but there were no patches upon it, and it still looked as fresh and nice as ever.

Often the different members of the family praised him.

"What a comfort he is," they would say. "We always know where to get matches."

And the little china boy looked at them in his pleased china fashion.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

ACCIDENTAL RHYMES

IF IN talking you accidentally make a rhyme, wish before you say another word and you will get your wish.

This is a common superstition, generally half laughingly indulged in. Frequently some one standing by, noticing the involuntary rhyme, will say: "That's a rhyme; take it in time."

In one section they have a variation of this superstition which is that instead of wishing you kiss your hand before speaking and you will see your sweetheart before night.

The superstition originates from the fact that old-time word charms were generally in verse, blank or rhymed. Fragments of metrical charms and incantations have come down to us from remote ages and from many races. The word "charm" itself we get from the latin word "carmen," meaning both a song and a charm. Clodd says "As gods of healing both Apollo and Aesculapius were surnamed Praean after the physician to the Olympian deities, and the songs which celebrated the healing power of Apollo were also called by that name."

In Greece and Scandinavia magic formulae were uttered in verse. Read Scott's "Pirate" for a disquisition on the persistence of rhymed impromptu incantations among the descendants of the Norsemen down into recent times. From this northern source we probably inherit our idea that an impromptu, accidental rhyme is a "charm" and, therefore, of potency in the fulfillment of wishes.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE "MIDSHIPMAN"

THE "midshipman," or "middy," as he is sometimes called "for short" in the United States and British navies, is the seaman next in rank below a commissioned officer. That is, he is not a common seaman, and yet not an officer. It is not, however, from this "middle" position, as it were, of his rank or grade in the service that he takes his name, but from a circumstance in the quartering of men of his class more than two centuries ago!

The title "midshipman" in the British navy had its origin in the British navy over two hundred years ago. It was derived from the fact that the "young gentlemen" as contemporary records refer to them, who were under instruction on British men-of-war for the purpose of becoming officers, were given quarters "amidships" abreast on the lower deck!

With the organization of the navy of the American colonies, the practice of the British navy was followed with regard to this as well as other ranks. A few years after the Civil war the title of "midshipman" at the Naval academy and on probation at sea for two years afterward, was changed to "cadet midshipman." In 1882 it was changed to "Naval Cadet," but in 1902 the title of "midshipman" was restored. Today midshipmen no longer serve two years at sea after graduation, but are commissioned as ensigns as soon as they leave the academy.

Solves Problem of Good Bread Making

Uses New-Type Flour, "Kitchen-tested"

Mrs. Maggie Wilcox, Sacramento, Cal.

Mrs. Wilcox Puts Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Flour To The Test. Wins Blue Ribbon For Home Baking At California State Fair

"I feel that I put Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour to the test," says Mrs. Wilcox, "when I entered my bread at the recent California State Fair and won 1st Blue Ribbon Prize. Since good flour is essential to successful baking I use only 'Gold Medal' for baking bread, cakes or pie crust.'

Thousands Of Women Now Use Only This New-Type Flour

THEY have learned there is no "guess work" about perfect results—every time they get "Blue Ribbon" cakes and pastries, bread and biscuits.

They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that two sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Special "Kitchen-tested" Recipes In Every Sack
(Changed every three months)

Please accept (free of charge) simplified recipes for 12 of Betty Crocker's most delicious baking creations. Recipes for daintiest cakes, the finest cookies, the most popular pastries known. Each one is "simplified" until it is remarkably easy, too.

All 12 of these simplified "Kitchen-tested" recipes are inside every sack of GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour. You can get a full set today—simply ask your grocer for GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour.

Thousands Employed in Uncle Sam's Business

The official Register of the United States for 1929 shows 587,665 workers are now employed by the government through civil service. The register takes into consideration only employees in the executive branch of the government and does not include hundreds of thousands of others in the legislative, judicial or military services. In the federal executive service, 63,904 are employed in the District of Columbia and 523,761 in the field. Of the total number, 82,501 are women. The Post Office department has the greatest number of employees with 314,795 under civil service, while the Treasury department ranks second with 53,094 and the Navy and War departments rank third and fourth, respectively, with 50,575 and 47,267. In ten departments in Washington, more women are employed than men, but in the field service men predominate.

FIRE LOSSES IN INDIANA FOR 1929

Alfred Hogston, State Fire Marshal, has announced the fire loss statistics for Indiana, for the fiscal year October 1, 1928 to October 1, 1929.

The total number of fires in the State were 5,005; the total fire loss was $8,026,667; the total value of endangered property was $80,151,544.

The number of fires in cities of over 5,000 population was 3,187; the number of fires in cities and incorporated towns under 5,000 population was 913; the number of fires in rural districts, small towns and villages was 905.

The fire loss in cities over 5,000 population was $3,896,990; in cities and incorporated towns under 5,000 population was $1,740,641; in rural districts, small towns and villages was $2,389,036.

The total value of endangered property in cities over 5,000 population was $69,655,159; of endangered property in cities under 5,000 population was $6,484,912; and in rural districts was $4,011,473.

The average loss per fire in the State as a whole was approximetely $1,605; in cities over 5,000 population was $1,222; in cities and incorporated towns under 5,000 population was $1,906; and in the rural districts was $2,640.

Considering the value of the endangered property in relation to the fire loss, it is seen that in the whole State the "loss ratio" or the per cent of the endangered property that was lost was about 10%; in cities of over 5,000 population it was about 3.6%; in cities and incorporated towns under 5,000 population it was about 27% and in the rural districts about 59%.

The above indicates that the fire loss ratio in the country was twice what it was in the smaller cities, almost six times what it was in the State as a whole, and more than ten times what it was in the larger cities.

Sparks caused the greatest number of fires or 1,612. This was about one third of the total number of fires.

Defective flues caused 359 fires, defective stoves and furnaces 342, defective wiring 310, and explosions 323. Cigarettes caused 132 fires in the large cities, 12 in the smaller cities and towns, and only 2 in the country.

The greatest number of fires were in residences, or 3,280. Also the greatest fire loss was on residences, or $2,651,093. There were 133 factory fires with a loss of $1,727,990. There were 395 barn fires with a loss of $862,470, and practically all of this was in the country.

The outstanding things to be gained from the above figures are that we must construct roofs of fire resistive material and put more attention toward reducing fire losses in the country. Country fire losses can be reduced by being more careful and also by organizing fire fighting forces and maintaining fire equipment in the rural sections.

THINGS ARE NOT ALWAYS WHAT THEY SEEM

John Coburn's recent accident—so familiar to St. Joe, Lafayette, and Peru and, no doubt, read of in most of the large newspapers in the United States — tragic as it was, carries with it some very valuable lessons.

Kidnapping, although truly applied, sounds too harsh a name for the apparently innnocent prank of which John Coburn fell victim. I have no way of proving what I am about to say, but circumstantial evidence leads me to believe that the little trick started as "College hazing" (usually a harmless way of causing College Freshmen discomfort. Hazing of severe types are inflicted strictly against College orders, generally by Sophomores in order to get their own Freshmen humiliations out of their systems and for their animalistic satisfaction of having fun at the price of some one else's discomfort.)

In the first place, John was wearing his "Green" Freshman cap at the time the boys stopped him. It seems some friendly "razzing" was exchanged before John was blindfolded and pulled into the car. The very fact that he was merely taken for a long ride and put out in a strange place uninjured shows that the boys had no serious intentions and might even have been friends of his.

John, in turn, had to do some quick thinking when he wandered to the railroad track where the freight was taking water and, as is often the case, he chose unwisely with the result that his foot was smashed so severely that it had to be amputated.

It would be a shame, if the above suspicions are true, to ruin the lives of other promising youths by making John's abductors serve the severe penalties exacted for "kidnapping." If they are the "men" they should be, the result of their prank will be mental punishment enough to last a life time and the least they can do is use their own good hands, feet, and heads to earn money to help pay John's hospital bills and put him in a position, even though handicapped, to finish his college course and become an even more worthwhile citizen than he has ever hoped to be.

Boys and girls, take advantage of these two big lessons for the teaching of which John paid so dearly.

First, Be sure that your jokes are innocent and will not turn out seriously.

Second, Obey the just laws of your superiors—they know best. (Purdue would not approve of hazing and the railroad forbids trespassing.)

A TESTED RECIPE

Cream of Potato Soup

4 medium potatoes
2 slices onion
2 strips bacon

Wash, peel, cut in cubes, and cook potatoes in enough water to cover until tender. Rub through a strainer. There should be 2 cups mashed potatoes and liquid. Add this mixture (left-over potatoes may be used) to 3 cups of thin cream sauce, (3 c. milk, 3 tbsps. flour, 3 tbsps. butter.) Season to taste. Add 2 tbsps. chopped parsley before serving.

A different flavor may be obtained by adding catsup, leeks or celery instead of onion. Cut leeks or celery in very thin slices crosswise and cook in with the potatoes.

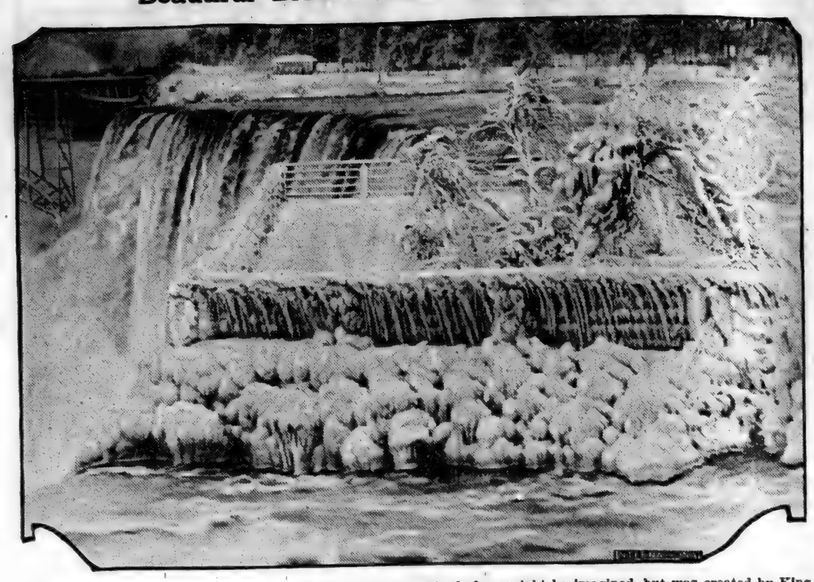
Beautiful Bride's Cake at Niagara Falls



This frothy concoction is not the work of a master French chef, as might be imagined, but was created by King Winter himself in one of that gentleman's more inspired moments. The richly decorated platform is none other than the prosaic iron and concrete stand from which honeymoon couples are wont to view the wonders of Niagara falls. The swirling torrents may be seen in the background together with one end of the famous suspension bridge.

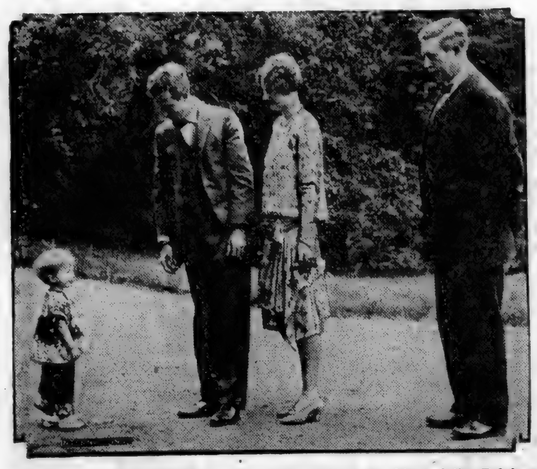
Queen's Photograph of Her Family



This exclusive intimate family photograph of the king of the Belgians, with the crown prince, the latter's wife and the little Princess Josephine-Charlotte, was taken in the gardens of the royal Laeken-Lez-Brussels palace by the queen of the Belgians herself. It is one of the few photographs of the sovereign taken in the royal family circle. The baby princess, who is two years old, is wearing a suit of Javanese pajamas brought back from the Dutch East Indies by her father and mother.

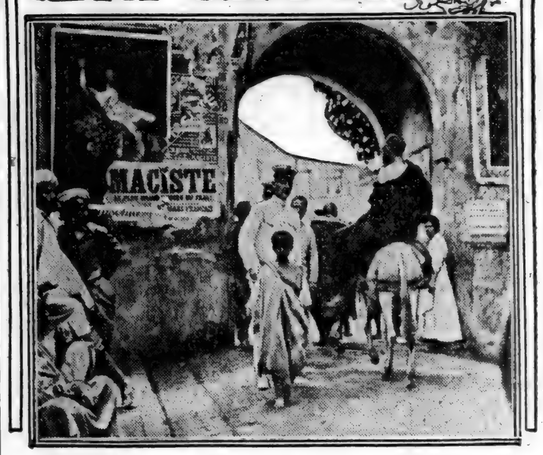
TANGIER and CEUTA



A Gate in Tangier.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

MOST of northwestern Africa France has taken for her own. But in this Gallic empire stand two enclaves little if any influenced by France: the territory of Tangier, and the Spanish Zone of Morocco. The chief cities of these areas, Tangier and Ceuta, are Europe's two nearest municipal neighbors in Africa. Only the narrow Strait of Gibraltar separates them from Spain.

Tangier, on the Atlantic side of the strait, is in a permanently neutralized and demilitarized zone, administered jointly by representatives of France, Great Britain, Spain and Italy. This arrangement was only arrived at in 1928. The Tangier question was of such delicacy that it was dodged by mutual consent for more than a decade.

The Moroccan crisis of 1911 between France and Germany almost set the World war off three years before its time, and when peace was preserved by the narrowest margin, the powers were glad enough to thurst the Tangier question hastily aside by stating that the city was "to be given a special regime to be agreed upon later." Meantime a temporary international commission administered affairs in the city and a territory of 140 square miles around it, and failed to please Great Britain who wanted permanent internationalization; France, who wanted the zone annexed to the French protectorate; or Spain, who wanted control herself.

Situated only a few miles from Europe, Tangier has been affected to a greater or less degree by Western civilization for centuries. Since the Moors set up their power in northwestern Africa, the Portuguese, Spaniards and English have at times held the place; but the English, the last of the three to have possession, abandoned it to the Moors in 1684. For a long time afterward it was one of the chief cities of the sultan of Morocco. But since the city has been in the hands of "infidels" it has been visited only on the rarest occasions by the sultans.

For many centuries it has occupied a reserved seat on the African side of the Strait of Gibraltar, in full view of the parade of commerce to and from Mediterranean ports, but today its unimproved harbor does not permit docking of larger ocean-going vessels.

No Wheeled Vehicles in Tangier.

From the sea, Tangier is the Arab city of North Africa par excellence, for the ugly dashes of yellow, green and red, with which scattered modern constructions have marred the otherwise glistening whiteness of the native city, are not distinguishable until the steamer lies close in.

The traveler from Europe will be struck at once by the total lack of the well-known rumble of city streets, for though the uneven thoroughfares are in most part paved with cobblestones, wheeled vehicles are practically unknown. The streets are nevertheless crowded with other means of transport. So narrow are some of them that at the oft-repeated "Balak!" "Look out!" one must again and again spring into some doorway in order to let donkeys, mules and horses, with their spreading burdens, pass by.

Camels have to be unloaded in the "Socco," or market place, outside the walls. Things too heavy to be carried by a single animal must be transported by men, and it is no unusual sight to see great stones five and six feet long slung on poles and borne by a dozen or more half-naked Moors.

In these narrow streets the little box-like shops, waist high, give the proper oriental setting to the whole. In them one sees the owner reclining and sedately reading, seemingly oblivious to the stirring scene around him, until he is "disturbed" by a purchaser for his goods, all of which are within arm's reach.

In the business section coffee houses offer the principal Tangier recreation. Patrons sit in groups on the floor, playing with odd-marked cards, or lean against the walls sipping a beverage, smoking their pipes, and sometimes singing to the tune of a native orchestra. Next door an unkempt shopkeeper, seemingly more interested in keeping his long-stemmed pipe lighted than in making a sale, presides over his shop displaying pottery, brassware and trinkets.

Beggars are most importunate. They beg for alms and often follow a "prospect" until he yields a coin.

In the Homes and Market.

An American's description of a Tangier residential district would be "more narrow winding lanes hemmed in by high white walls." The walls are blank except for doorway leading into courts. A peep through an open door reveals some of the city's garden spots—flower beds surrounding fountains, shaded by lofty palms. Some courts are also used as miniature farmyards where cattle and fowls are fattened for the market.

Most travelers agree that a visit to the large market, lying just outside of the city wall, is well worth a trip to Tangier. There city folk mingle with the rural folk from the fertile regions in the vicinity. Men, women and children, camels, horses, donkeys, dogs and fowls, all are huddled together in the dust amid piles of oranges, baskets of eggs, casks of olives and improvised stands for nuts, dates, candies, kitchen utensils and home-made shoes. The country women wear broad-brimmed straw hats. The stricter Moslems wear kerchiefs half covering their faces.

Around the edge of the market place letter writers and fortune tellers ply their professions; black, portly Sudanese negroes in tatters dance to the tune of metal cymbals and disks dangling about their bodies, and the fire-eater and snake-charmer amaze throngs with their clever tricks.

Of all the side shows, that of the snake-charmer, perhaps, is strangest. As his assistant beats a doleful tom-tom, he draws a hissing reptile from a sack, allows it to bite his tongue and wipes away the blood with a handful of shavings. After convincing his audience that he is really wounded, he rolls the wet shavings into a pellet which he places in dry shavings. Then he blows on the mass until it smokes and later bursts into flames. Your native guide will say "he is a very holy man."

The variety and congestion of life in Tangier give an impression of size which the estimated census does not warrant. The city has only about 50,000 people. It is spread over a half bowl opening into the straits of Gibraltar. Little is manufactured and the exports are slight. But there are heavy imports for points throughout Morocco.

Tangier's strategic importance lies in the fact that it is at the southern entrance to the Strait of Gibraltar and as a fortified naval base might prove almost as effectual in blocking that exceedingly important passage as the famous rock itself. The city is only 35 miles southwest of the Rock of Gibraltar and is barely 25 miles from the nearest point on the Spanish mainland.

Ceuta Is a Spanish City.

Different is Ceuta, on the Mediterranean side of the Strait of Gibraltar, and in the Spanish zone. Modern Ceuta is a military and penal station for Spain. The architecture and atmosphere of the town are predominantly Spanish. For several hundred years the mosque has been used as a cathedral. The cathedral and the governor's palace are the only buildings of architectural interest. The medieval fortifications, with their ancient moat and drawbridges, have have been partly modernized.

The town is peopled mostly by the Spanish garrison and the civilian convicts. There are a number of Moors resident there, and colonies of Jews and negroes.

Lying behind the southern "Pillar of Hercules," Ceuta has the same natural strategic position as has Gibraltar, opposite the strait. Neighboring Spanish towns and Gibraltar are kept in regular communication with Ceuta by steamers and "faluchos," small rowboats equipped with one lateen sail.

Originally a Carthaginian colony, Ceuta was brought by various sieges under the control of the Romans, Vandals, Goths, Arabs, Berbers, Portuguese and Spanish. For a short time during the Nineteenth century Ceuta was even occupied by British troops but it was restored to Spain by Britain at the close of the Napoleonic wars.

Pretty Things that are made at Home

FANCY PILLOWS

SEEING that the holiday rush is a thing of the past, the good housewife wisely sets to work to take inventory of the house furnishings, preparatory to a campaign of household replenishing. New curtains for the guest room, more bed linen needed, damask runner for the library table, and, oh yes, sofa cushions! Several of them! Thus runs the list along.

A "picture pillow," such as is shown at the top of this illustration should prove a very timely suggestion, for embroidered pictures are the rage, whether framed or used for footstool or pillow tops. It was Madame de Maintenon, who, during the days of Louis XIV made tapestry needlework so popular among the ladies of France. Now as in days of old this form of handiwork holds an irresistible charm for the woman who loves to do fine stitchery.

The fancywork departments make it easy for the would-be embroiderer in that they carry picture-pillow outfits which include the stamped canvas done in colors indicating the exact colors of yarn to be used, also a supply of woolen yarn in selected colors, also the satin foundation, cut proper size for the pillow. It does not take long to embroider one of these pictures, for the work is simple, proving a fascinating pastime for leisure hours.

It comes somewhat as a surprise, no doubt, to learn that the round pillow is made of crepe paper. And if you think they are not durable, make one and see for yourself. The trick is that the paper cushion top is covered with sheer chiffon in this wise. First, flowers are cut out of fancy patterned crepe paper and pasted on crepe paper in any chosen solid tint—pale blue, pink, rose, light green, yellow as will accord with the furnishings in the room. Next, a layer of chiffon in neutral tint, flesh color or ecru, is basted over the flower-bordered crepe paper circle. This is then basted on a layer of cotton batting, just as are usually prepared for quilting. The pillow top is then quilted exactly as one does ordinary quilt-work. The quilting is not worked through the bordered part. When finished the flower design, veiled as it is with the chiffon, gives the appearance of exquisite hand-painting. Of course, the pillow need not necessarily be round, for square and oblong shapes are equally as effective. The quilting may be done by hand or machine.

LONG, LONGER HEMLINES

THE tulips that bloom in the spring tra, la! will be no more gaily colorful than are some of the flowered chiffons and silks which Paris is featuring for midseason and winter resort evening wear. For that matter, huge tulips in colors "real as life" are outstanding among newest floral patternings.

This trend to large flowers—motifs done in intensified colorings—is very noticeable in fabrics intended for formal wear. One cannot but compare these bold flowery designs, so fashionable for party and opera gown, with the prim carefully spaced tiny motifs printed in pastel colorings on black or dark colored backgrounds, which are so smart for daytime dresses and ensembles.

The velvet brocaded chiffon which fashions the handsome frock in the picture is enlivened with bouquets done in vivacious multi-colors. The dress is styled with a view to accenting the elegance of its fabric.

As to present and coming events in evening modes, this gown is quite revealing. Perhaps the most conspicuous detail in the styling of this ultra evening robe is its sweeping length. All the discussion about "four inches below the knee" or "fourteen inches from the floor" which centers about daytime hemlines, has no bearing upon evening frocks. The question of skirt lengths for the formal evening gown is admirably settled by the model in the picture.

Not only are evening chiffons flaunting flowery prints, but stiff silks, especially taffetas and moires, are gay with design. The vogue for sprightly silks which "stand alone" is quite pronounced. In handling these formal weaves, designers emphasize fabric manipulation, stressing tiers, flounces, bustle effects and flaring hemline in endless variation.

Later on lovely printed cotton nets are scheduled to appear. Even now they are gracing the style scene in the milder Southern climes. For these picture frocks delectable nets are employed, which include a patterning of spaced bouquets of realistic violets, or perhaps the design will feature poppies printed in high colors. Short puff sleeves, and capelets which veil the shoulders are exploited in the styling of these picturesque modes.

STANDARDS OF THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 5:1-4f (Print vv. 3-9, 17-20, 43-48).

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God.

PRIMARY TOPIC — How Jesus Teaches Us to Live.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Standard of Life and Service.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Accepting and Following the Highest Ideals.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Christian According to Christ.

I. The Characteristics of the Subjects of the Kingdom (vv. 1-12). These characteristics are set forth in the nine beatitudes.

1. The consciousness of spiritual poverty (v. 3).

"Poor in spirit" means to come to the end of self in a state of spiritual beggary.

2. A profound grief because of the spiritual insolvency (v. 4).

The mourning here is because of the keen consciousness of guilt before a holy God.

3. A humble submission to God's will (v. 5).

This is the outgrowth of mourning over spiritual insolvency.

4. An intense longing to conform to the laws of the kingdom (v. 6).

The one who has received the righteousness of Christ as a free gift follows after the purity of character which expresses itself in deeds of righteousness.

5. Merciful (v. 7).

The subjects of the kingdom now take on the character of the King. Because of the mercifulness of Christ, His followers will be merciful.

6. Purity of heart (v. 8).

Since the King is absolutely pure, the subjects who enjoy fellowship with Him must have heart purity.

7. Peacemakers (v. 9).

The subjects of His kingdom not only have peace, but follow after that which makes for peace.

8. Suffering for Christ's sake (v. 10).

The world hated Christ, the King; therefore those who reflect His spirit in their lives shall suffer persecution (II Tim. 3:12).

9. Suffer reproach (v. 11).

To have all manner of evil spoken against us for Christ's sake is an occasion for glorying.

II. The Responsibilities of the Subjects of the Kingdom (vv. 13-16).

The world is in utter darkness because of its corruption. The subjects of the kingdom are to live such lives as to purify and enlighten. Their responsibilities are set forth under the figures of salt and light.

1. Ye are the salt of the earth (v. 13).

The properties of salt are (1) Penetrating, (2) Purifying, (3) Preserving. Since salt only preserves and purifies in the measure that it penetrates, so Christians only as they enter into the life of the world can preserve it from decay.

2. Ye are the light of the world (v. 14).

This world is cold and dark. In this darkness the devil has set many pitfalls, and the subjects of the kingdom should so live as to prevent the unwary from stumbling.

III. The Laws of the Kingdom (vv. 20-48).

1. As to deeds of righteousness (v. 20).

The deeds of the subjects of the kingdom must spring from Christlike natures.

2. As to sanctity of life (vv. 21-26).

The duty of the subject of the kingdom is to conserve and sustain his own life and the life of others. Rash anger is heart murder (v. 22).

3. As to organized life (vv. 27-32).

The family is the unit of society. The two awful sins against the family are (1) Adultery, (2) Divorce.

4. As to oaths (vv. 33-37).

Whatever is more than the simple form of affirmation or denial comes of evil.

5. As to behavior toward those who do not recognize the laws of the kingdom (vv. 38-48).

(1) Not revengeful (vv. 39, 40). Turning the other cheek after being smitten, means, after one insult, permit another without revenge. (2) Willingness to do more than is required (v. 41). If compelled to go one mile, go two miles with the one thus compelling you. (3) Be charitable (v. 42). Our hearts should always be open, ready to give to all. (4) Love enemies (vv. 45-48). Love to them consists in: a. Blessing them that curse us. b. Doing good to them that hate us. c. Praying for those who despitefully use us.

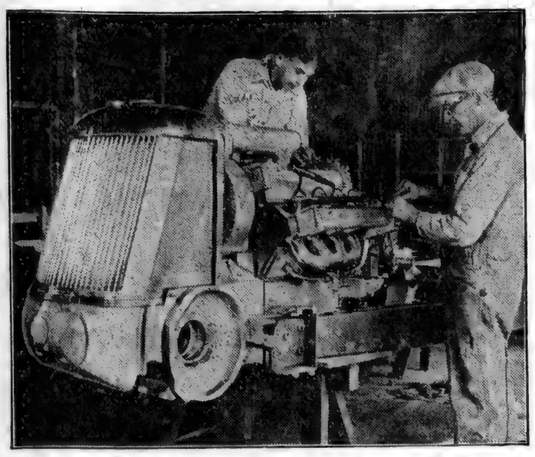
Consciousness of Duty

In every heart there is a consciousness of some duty or other required of it; that is the will of God. He that would be saved must get up and do that will—if it be but to sweep a room or make an apology, or pay a debt.—George MacDonald.

Entering Heaven's Gates

Heaven's gates are not so highly arched as kings' palaces; they that enter there must get upon their knees.—Daniel Webster.

FINAL TOUCHES ON FRONT DRIVE ENGINE



Plenty of speed and power will be obtained from this $25,000 roadster according to Harry A. Miller, famous racing expert of Los Angeles, who is building it for Phillip Chancellor. The roadster will have a front drive and its eight cylinders will be capable of giving it a normal touring speed of 125 miles an hour. The automobile will have a 300 horse power motor.

MOTOR TRUCK NOW BIG FARM FACTOR

Hard-Surfaced Roads Facilitate Marketing of Wheat in Ohio.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In Ohio, after hard-surfaced highways have become common, the use of the motor truck in taking wheat from the field to the country elevator has become a very important factor in the tremendous after-harvest congestion at country and terminal elevators, says Charles M. Fritz, grain exchange supervisor of the Chicago office of the grain futures administration of the United States Department of Agriculture, following a survey of the development of recent years in harvesting and marketing the Ohio wheat crop.

Permit Use of Trucks.

"The hard-surfaced highways which have been built throughout the countryside," says Mr. Fritz, "permit the use of motor trucks for hauling wheat from the farm, which not only shortens the time required for hauling but also permits taking larger loads. Perhaps the longest haul now required at various Ohio points to move the farmer's wheat is about eight miles. With a horse-drawn vehicle this trip would have required the greater part of a day, and the average load would have ranged from about 50 bushels in hilly country to about 100 bushels on good level roads. Under those conditions the weather was an important factor in the movement, as wheat was hauled to market generally in fair weather when the roads were dry. Under present-day conditions the trip is made by motor truck in about two and one-half hours, and loads ranging from 85 to 145 bushels are hauled regardless of weather conditions."

Trucks for Delivery.

Mr. Fritz has observed a growing tendency among Ohio farmers to sell their wheat f. o. b. the farm, and to make purchases of fertilizer, lime, and mixed feed on terms including delivery at the farm. In order to make such deliveries, Ohio elevators have equipped trucks for delivery purposes, charges being fixed on a cost basis and incorporated as a part of the sales contract, at rates less than the farmer can transport such commodities from elevator to farm. The farmer can now arrange with a local elevator relative to date of threshing and the elevators will supply motor trucks which will be in the wheat field at the beginning of operations. By this method the entire lot of grain is moved to the local elevator in less than a single day. Commercial trucking companies also participate in the wheat movement in the rush season, and wheat is carried until midnight, and receiving and elevation taken care of. "Obviously such an extremely rapid movement of grain from country to elevator," says Fritz, "is a severe strain upon the equipment and storage facilities of the local elevators. The speed at which the railroads today transport wheat during the 'new crop' movement is also a substantial factor in the enormous accumulations of wheat at terminals during the after-harvest rush movement.

"In years past," Mr. Fritz reports, "the railroads' box-car equipment was based on a 60,000-pound capacity car. The present car has a capacity of either 80,000 or 100,000 pounds. The use of the 60,000-pound capacity car established a custom among shippers and receivers of loading 1,100 bushels of red winter wheat for a carload. Receivers and mills are being urged by the railroads to use the larger units, for very few 60,000-pound cars remain that can be used for grain shipment. Consequently, the carload is increasing from 1,100 to 1,400 and 1,600 bushels. This increase in car capacity has a tendency to increase the total number of bushels in the daily receipts at terminals, while the number of cars received may not denote a material increase over the daily carlot receipts of former years."

The Motor Quiz

How Many Can You Answer?

Q. What is done with a reckless driver in China who kills a person?

Ans. It is said the driver is placed against a wall and shot.

Q. How many American motorists and cars toured Canada this year and approximately how much money was spent by the tourists?

Ans. About 12,000,000 motorists in 3,700,000 cars toured Canada, spending approximately $180,000,000.

Q. Why should a car be moved to level ground before jacking it up?

Ans. The car may roll off the jack, and run over anyone unable to get out of the way. It also may run away. If it is impossible to move the car to level ground it is a very good plan to securely block the wheels that remain on the ground.

Q. Why is it necessary to renew the oil filter at 10,000 miles?

Ans. Because the filtering element becomes filled with foreign matter at this mileage.

Stop Light Indicator Very Handy Accessory

The common method of hooking the dash light in series with the tail-light, using three-volt bulbs at each point, works nicely with the tail-light, but the system does not work with the stop light, which uses a much more powerful bulb, for no one wants a large bulb shining from the dash. The wiring arrangement shown eliminates this difficulty. A one-and-a-half-volt flashlight bulb is connected across the wire that leads to the stop light from the stop light switch. When current flows through a wire, there is a loss in voltage which can be read by means of a voltmeter connected at both ends of the wire. The flashlight bulb requires very little voltage to make it glow, and the drop in voltage in the wire leading to the stop light is sufficient to operate it. The beauty of the system is that if the stop light bulb burns out the flashlight cannot light, but if the flashlight burns out it will not affect the operation of the stop light. If the flashlight does not glow brightly enough add a few feet to the wire marked X in the diagram. —Popular Science Monthly.

AUTOMOBILE NOTES

The value of a highway is measured by the quality of its feeder roads.

• • •

Chinese roads are about four feet wide. Not much chance for auto accidents.

• • •

Be prepared for bad weather by having the skid chains in good condition and ready for use when needed.

• • •

An average of 2,000,000 motor cars pass out of existence every year. The average length of their service is seven years.

• • •

It is advisable to drain the carburetor occasionally to clean the fuel line of water which is forced from the gasoline tank.

• • •

The total highway costs in 1929 for county, state and federal roads in the United States will approximate $1,675,000,000, of which the federal government's share is but $75,000,000.

Transferring Game

Deer have been brought from the West to replenish the big-game population of eastern forests, but without marked success. However, transfer of game from parts of the country which are overstocked to places where it is wanted is being done wherever practical.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

DeKalb County Purdue Short Course

Management Expect High Attendance Record; Enthusiasm Developing Fast

On Monday, January 27th an inspection of the work of the various committees handling preparations for the approaching short course was conducted in the office of the County Agricultural Agent's office, by a representative of the Agricultural Extension Department of Purdue University. This inspection revealed a very promising state of affairs and a likelihood that the short course will stand up well in the record of short courses for the year. The local short course management is even optomistic enough to feel that there is a good chance of a new high attendance record being made here. Little is known by the people of the county as a whole how much time has been given during the last two months by the two hundred men and women who constitute the short course machinery, and how much pains has been taken to have everything arranged in such a good way that our people will find the short course exceedingly interesting, inspiring and profitable. There will of ccurse be considerable expense involved in putting on the short course, but this is all provided for so that when folks attend the instruction sessions during the three days, February 11, 12, 13, there will be no charge of any kind or description, likewise it will be found that the two grand home talent concerts of the first and second nights will be wholly free.

The management feels that there is so much of real worth and quality in the program in all its parts, that it actually merits the attention of the people of this county who care about agriculture and the home. Programs with all the details of procedure on each of the three days are being sent out over the county this week. A careful study of this program will show that it is the most elaborate, the richest and most fruitful program of the kind ever offered in the county. A large piece of Purdue has been brought to our very doors, and combined with talent and ability among our own people puts on a genuinely practical and inspiring program of instruction, entertainment and goodwill development. It would seem plain that throughout the county, folks should so arrange home work and business as to be in a position to attend all or many of the sessions of this great short course.

These are times when it is difficult to make both ends meet, and a little help here and a little there should be eagerly grasped and doubtless will be when the three days of the short course come. Those who come from Purdue are capable friendly, courteous folk, keenly alive to their responsibilities eager to serve, well trained and fitted to serve effectively. They are prepared to make class demonstrations interesting, understandable and helpful. The state furnishes some of the very best available, men and women who have amply proved their worth at many a short course and who may be counted upon to prove the real thing in helpfulness and courtesy here.

Tickets for the big "Goodwill Banquet" of the DeKalb County-Purdue Short Course went out to the various township committeemen today. The banquet will be held in the Commercial Club dining room in Auburn on the evening of February 13th with Howard Mountz of Garrett as toastmaster. Mayor Brinkerhoff of Garrett will conduct the singing between courses. Mr. Ward Jackman, Dr. M. E. Elinger, heads of the banquet committee were very fortunate in securing the famous Pennsylvania quartet for this occasion. After the quartet Dr. J. Raymond Schutz of North Manchester will give his inspiring Good Will address.

There has been a big demand for these banquet tickets and all those who want tickets should see the banquet committee for your town or township as he will be the only one that will be able to supply your wants along that line. The committeemen are as follows: Butler township, Earl Beaber; Keyser, Ralph Yarde; Richland, Elmer Foote; Fairfield, Spencer Ringler; Smithfield, Frank Adler; Franklin, Author Loutzenhiser; Troy, Geo. Blaker; Stafford, Lester Casebeer; Newville, Guy Platter; Spencerville, O. E. Convention of Sunday Schools at Garrett

Program for Annual Meeting of DeKalb County Association, Feb. 6, 7 Nearly Complete

The program for the convention of the DeKalb County of Religious Education which will be held in the Garrett M. E. Church, February 6 and 7 is complete and is being mailed today to all the schools of DeKalb county.

Ward Jackman, the county president and his program committee have secured some exceptionally fine talent for two days. One of the headliners will be Dr. Ezra Flory of Huntington, Ind., who will have charge of the young people's work.

Dr. Joseph B. Rosemurgy, pastor of Irvington M. E. Church, Indianapolis, another great worker will have charge of the adult work of the convention sessions.

Miss Nellie Young of Indianapolis, state worker for the Indiana Council of Religious Education will be in charge of the division for children.

Rev. Lynn Young, pastor of the Garrett Christian Church will superintend the singing during the sessions and a number of other local workers will have part in the program.

SPENCERVILLE YOUNG PEOPLE WEDS

Janice Audrey Wade, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. O. Wade and Gale Bowser, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. U. Bowser, were married on Wednesday afternoon by the Rev. W. W. Lindstrom of Pleasant Lake, at 4 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents. Miss Mary Wade, sister of the bride sang the song, "I Love You Truly," followed by the wedding march which was played by Mrs. Catherine Bowser of St. Joe. The bride wore a yellow crepe dress and carried a bouquet of yellow roses. The groom wore a dark blue suit. The ceremony was performed under a canopy of yellow and white paper. About fifty guests were served to the delightful dinner. The young folks left immediately, with a plenty of rice and old shoes and will spend their honeymoon in the southern part of the state. They will be at home at Spencerville. The groom is in business with his father, conducting a general live stock exchange and sale barn.

THE GOUNDHOG AS WEATHER PROGNOSTICATOR

American life has its continuous touches of humor. One of the most noted midwinter whimsicalities relates to the ancient groundhog tradition. On the famous second of February, when the little brown beast of the field makes his annual weather observation, sober citizens compare notes about his excursions, as seriously as they do about the state of business and the markets.

If animals ever smile, surely the little groundhog must do so. He is one of those few creatures that succeed in living without working. Despite the insistence of all philosophers that all creatures must work for their living, he eats at an abundant table, to which he contributes nothing but idleness.

While the farmer and his hired man toil laboriously to create their fruitful garden, the groundhog anticipates the coming feast. He smiles as he thinks that it will be his without labor on his part. He toils not neither does he spin, but the farmer's choice vegetables are produced for his benefit, and he laughs and grows fat.

It was perhaps natural that the rural folks for many generations observing how this wise little critter laughed at their efforts and defied the best human philosophy and the best strategems aimed to capture him, should conclude that he had superior insight, and could foretell the weather. Hence many of them have believed that some power of insight enabled him to forsee the coming of spring or the persistence of winter. So they used to await his annual excursion as a real event.

Today we laugh at the quaint old myth. Yet we have to admit that this little beast of the field is a wise old bird, who may know some philosophy that is hidden from our best science. Possibly he does know something about the weather after all. Who can tell?

DON'T FLIRT WITH A COLD

A "little cold" is a dangerous thing. You may neglect one, two or a dozen of them, but sooner or later find that one has gotten the better of you.

One of the most important things you can do, both to prevent and to correct colds, is to take action against acidosis—which merely means that the body is less alkaline than it sould be.

At the first sign of a cold, go home as quickly as possible. Take a hot bath and get into a warm bed at once. Then drink a full glass of hot lemonade. The "sweat-out" that follows will eliminate poisons. In the morning, pour the juice of one lemon into a half-glass of water. Stir in a half-teaspoon of baking soda. Drink it while it effervesces. Repeat three times a day until all cold symptoms disappear. Also, see your doctor before colds become serious.

HOME BUREAU MEETS IN TOWN

The Home Bureau met Thursday Jan. 23rd at the home of Mrs. Ora Baker. Club opened by singing a selection of songs led by Mrs. Laura Washler, following was the business in charge of the president, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick.

The secretary's report was read and approved and thirty members responded to roll call with responses "My New Year's Resolution for the Children of the Community." We were then favored with a piano solo by Mrs. Thelma Baker. Mrs. Katy Storer gave a reading "Always Room for One More. Select reading "Land of Beginning Again," by Mrs. Cora Curie, followed with a musical reading by Mrs. Millie Shull. These numbers were very good and enjoyed by all present.

The president then gave a report from Purdue Conference, which was very interesting.

We were pleased to have with us as guests Mrs. Don Washler, Mrs. Gillespie, Mrs. Fred Keller and Mrs. Thelma Baker. Two new members were added to the roll, Mrs. Gillespie and Mrs. Don Washler. Delicious refreshments were served by the committee.

TWO SUDDEN DEATHS MONDAY

Heart trouble caused the death of Mrs. Snyder, mother of Mrs. George Walter, who lives 2½ miles north of town. While she has been ailing, yet she was about the home Sunday ,and at 10:30 she yielded to a severe attack. The funeral announcement states that services will be held from the Harlan M. P. Church Thursday afternoon at 1 o'clock with Rev. B. W. Mayfield, officiating. Mrs. Snyder lived in the Harlan community many years and was a member of the above mentioned church.

Minnie Thompson's death Monday morning shocked the entire community, which resulted from an attack of indigestion. Mrs. Pluma Houser, of Waynesboro, Pa., arrived Wednesday forenoon but the funeral announcements are not made known at time of going to press.

Miss Thompson had kept house for Harvey Kimes for years and was indeed a friend to everyone, and she will be greatly missed, not only in the home but in her section of our little town where she has resided the past few years.

The obituary will appear next week.

The postponed meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Blanche Leighty and all members are urged to be present.

BABY BORN IN AMBULANCE

A baby daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Fullmer, of North Main Street, Sunday forenoon, while the mother was being taken to a Fort Wayne hospital in an ambulance.

Mrs. Fullmer was not getting along well and convulsions had set in, it then being determined to take her to Fort Wayne.

Before arrival at the hospital the baby, a daughter, was ushered into the world.

Late word from the hospital states that the condition of the mother remains very serious, but the babe bids fair to get along nicely.

Mrs. Fullmer was still unconscious Tuesday morning.—Hicksville Tribune.

Mrs. Fullmer is a sister of Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick north-west of town.

Bert Jackson and Carl Perkins were at Fort Wayne Tuesday on business.

F. R. Leighty left Friday for a two weeks visit with his family at Wymore, Nebraska. A card says the weather there is about the same as we have been experiencing and about the same amount of snow prevails.

Pretty Things that are made at Home

WHAT with movies, bridge parties and a thousand-and-one other allurements "long winter evenings" have almost become a tradition of the past Assuming, however, that time does hang heavy on yet a few of the feminine clan, we submit suggestions of decorative things for the home, which, to make, provide fascinating pastime for leisure hours.

One of the most popular artcrafts of the moment is illuminating or hand-painting on glass. The very attractive silhouette panel at the top of this illustration is an "illuminated glass picture." Seen in the original it is very colorful. The work involves several very interesting processes which can merely be suggested in this brief space. However, the materials and instructions are easily available in departments where art materials are sold or wherever fancy crepe papers, sealing wax and such are sold for flower making and other ornamental knick-knacks.

The various steps include the cutting out of figures from decorated crepe tissue paper, also painting these in with opaque paint (dissolved sealing wax) on the reverse side of the glass. To give color to the scene the foliage and ornamental details also sky effects are painted in with transparent effects.

The final touch is achieved with very thin silver, gold or bronze paper worked in so as to illuminate the entire in a brilliant way. As valentine gifts small pictures worked in this way would be most unique and highly prized by those so fortunate as to receive them.

Sprays of flowers, made to look like thinnest glass through painting cellophane paper foundations with transparent dissolved sealing wax, give an exquisite touch of color to any room. The structure of the flowers begins with forming the petal—shaped of wire. These are then covered with cellophane paper to simulate glass or with crepe tissue in desired colors for opaque majolica effects. In either event as a final touch the flowers are painted with transparent sealing wax paint.

A bas relief of sealing-wax painted flowers or other motifs transforms the simplest parchment lamp shade into a "thing of beauty" from the standpoint of the interior decorator. Sealing wax, molding clay and pictured crepe paper are essentials for this fascinating work. The idea is to cut the flower or figures out of the fancy crepe paper. Pictures can also be used from magazines and the like. The motifs are then pasted smoothly on the parchment shade. To gain the "relief" effect, the designs are then built up with molding clay. After all is thoroughly dry, paint with melted sealing wax.

DECORATIVE THINGS FOR THE HOME

Frocks for Girls.

Contrasting materials for little girls' frocks is a call of the advance mode. A popular idea is to button or sew a skirt of one color to a blouse top of a different color and often a different material.

The dress in the lower picture carries out the idea well. It is a French model, for which the designer chooses a cherry red wool for the skirt, the upper portion of the frock being made of eggshell colored silk which is dotted with red. In this instance the skirt is buttoned onto the blouse, the usual straight around effect being varied with a clever point at the front waistline.

A favorite style for younger girls is the button-on skirt with a contrasting tailored blouse. The skirts can be made of most any material such as challis, poplin, broadcloth or lightweight tweed, all of which are suitable for spring. The blouses are usually of faille, satin or silk crepe, these being simply trimmed with ruffles of self fabric at the collar and cuffs and down the front closing.

This idea of using two materials for the making of a frock should be kept in mind by mothers who are entering in upon a prespring sewing campaign. For this styling remnants can be used to advantage. So often lengths of goods are left over from the makings of grownups' frocks, which are not quite enough to make little daughter of the household an entire garment. It needs but a little contrasting material added to develop one piece frocks which have cunning blouse tops like the one pictured.

AN INTRIGUING FROCK

An excellent feature about the button-on types is that one can with different blouses change the entire appearance of the frock. Then, too, later on lingerie blouses can be substituted for those of lightweight woolen.

IN JAMAICA

Home, Sweet Home, in Rural Jamaica.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE fertility of rural Jamaica affords such abundant food for slight exertion, and the mild climate requires so little shelter, that this area is a typical region of little work and much rest.

The Jamaica negro can exist and subsist with slight exertion—and he does. In the rural sea-level districts in particular there is no need for steady exertion the year round.

House rent demands no place, generally speaking, in the rural dwelling Jamaican black's budget. He can build his own home of heavy grass and thatch it with banana leaves, or he can make it of mud and thatch, with cobbled floor. The more prosperous among the natives build wood houses out of old packing cases, scraps of cast-off corrugated roofing, flattened kerosene-can tin, and the like. Tropical vines soon hide the patchwork, for Dame Nature is a great healer of scars.

Nor is clothing a pressing problem with the rural blacks. The children may run naked during the tender years. The womenfolk dress in cotton gowns, which they wear as long as there is a piece left, barring Sundays, when they appear neatly and becomingly attired, and those occasions when they go into the city to market. The men wear long cotton drawers or the remains of trousering, shady shirts, and battered, frayed straw hats; but, in good sooth, who cares?

Now and then in passing along the roads one has a flash of a turbaned figure of the East, or his shy womankind in head scarf with silver ornaments on arm and ankle and now and then a nose jewel, giving a touch of oriental atmosphere to the mellow scenery.

Earned Money in Panama.

The building of the Panama canal afforded the Jamaican negro an opportunity to earn some money, and at the same time to see what he thought was quite a bit of the world. During the construction period almost every ship that sailed from Kingston to Colon had its quota of workmen bound for the Canal Zone.

On the whole, the rural Jamaican negro is a likable individual; quite as irresponsible as a child, usually as much given to exaggeration; indifferent enough to modernity to be picturesque, respectful and retiring enough to be interesting; and one retains pleasant memories of the natives, content to be what they are, and as a class, law-abiding in major matters, however much they may indulge in petty misdemeanors.

One may charter a sturdy automobile at a really reasonable price for a tour around the island, leaving Kingston over a road that follows the coast almost its entire length. Presently, at Harbor Head, one comes to the Naval Watering place established by Admiral Vernon, under whom served Lawrence Washington and for whom our shrine on the Potomac, Mount Vernon, was named. The old conduit is still visible.

A little farther on is Albion, one of Jamaica's historic sugar estates, and beyond lie Yallahs and Morant bay, the latter with its reminders and memories of the Rebellion of 1865, in which Gordon essayed to be the John Brown of Jamaica.

Swinging along a road over which you can comfortably make 25 miles on hour isn't a hardship, by any means, especially when the roadway passes through a beautiful country dotted with quaint villages and Old World scenes.

About 40 miles from Kingston, in the parish of St. Thomas, is the little town of Bath, and nearby certain mineral hot springs that are justly famous for their curative properties and made this beautiful spot a gathering place for Jamaican aristocracy as far back as two hundred years.

Port Antonio Worth Seeing.

Beyond, on the eastern extremity of the island, is Manchioneal, the scene of some of the exploits of Scott's "Tom Cringle." And then, as you motor along the foot of the John Crow mountains, past the Blue Hole, which so well deserves its name, eye-filling vistas of unrivaled beauty in the great bays and mountain side are unfolded, and in a very few hours, that all too quickly pass, Port Antonio looms into view, with its splendid two harbors, the westernmost of which is the best in the island.

In 1721 strenuous efforts were made by the Jamaican government to establish a settlement there. Thirty acres for every white person were offered and five acres for every slave imported, provided some part of each tract should be cultivated. This failing to bring enough immigrants, in 1723 two barrels of beef and one barrel of flour were added as a bonus. Later four barrels of beef and 400 pounds of biscuit, or bread, were offered to each white newcomer, and one barrel of herrings and 400 pounds of bread for each slave.

It is worth while to linger a day or more at Port Antonio to enjoy the glorious scenery and creature comforts with the winter tourists who flock to the charming Titchfield hotel, twin of the Myrtlebank at Kingston; then to head westward along the coast to Annotto bay.

Here Columbus Had to Land.

You ride along past Annotto bay and Port Maria, the center of the north side banana industry, and where an additional annual treasure is gained by a bumper coconut crop, which is, perhaps, reflected in the well-being of both the homes and dress of the native workers; and just ahead lies St. Anns bay, where "Still there walks the ghost of one that ate his heart in exile here—Don Cristoforo Colon, 400 years ago."

As one stands on the shore at St. Anns bay and looks out across the Caribbean, he fancies he sees approaching again two weather-beaten, worm-eaten caravals, the Capitana and the Santiago de Palos. They fly the flag of the Great Discoverer.

In June, 1503, he had bidden his last farewell to the mainland of the New World he had added to civilization, and had hoisted his sails for Spain. Passing the Cayman islands, which he named Las Tortugas, 180 miles off Jamaica, Columbus encountered a great storm. He was forced to run before it. Hoping to find shelter at Jamaica, he finally reached what is now called Dry Harbor. He found no fresh water here, so went on to St. Anns bay, which he called Puerto Santa Gloria, and there ran his ships on the beach in one of its coves.

Finally the food aboard and that supplemented by the near-by Indians gave out, and after the last ration of biscuit and wine had been issued the admiral's faithful follower, Diego Mendez, started out through the jungle on a trading expedition which netted a scant fare, but enough to keep away starvation, even if not sufficient to appease hunger.

Columbus then called for volunteers to try for Haiti, some 200 miles away, in search of succor. All were silent but the gallant Mendez. He stepped into a small ship's boat and rowed away!

Sickness and Mutiny.

Then sickness and body ills brought despair and mutiny. The brothers Porras (Francisco, captain of the Santiago, and Diego, the accountant) led a revolt in which Juan Sanchez, the pilot Ledesma, barba the gunner, and some fifty others joined.

Though so ill with gout that he could not stand, Columbus endeavored to go out and quell the mutiny, his log tells us. But his adherents begged that the mutineers be permitted to go.

They took most of the scanty stores, the ten canoes and started for Haiti; but, cowards that they were, they gave up the trip after forcing the Indians who accompanied them to swim ashore.

A caravel heaves into sight! Is it the long-looked-for relief sent by Mendez? Alas, no! Only a sorry jest by Ovanda, who sent for Escobar in the hope he would find Columbus dead, and, if not, to tell him there were no ships available to carry them to Spain.

Hearing that Porras and his mutineers were going about making enemies of the natives, Columbus sent the adelantado, Bartolome, either to pacify or to conquer the deserters. Bartolome took 50 loyal men and going against them captured the mutineers. Yet Columbus, with his usual clemency, granted pardon to all except the brothers Porras, whom he kept in chains.

Finally, a full year after he had landed there, the eyes of the admiral saw another sight—two caravals, one sent by the faithful Mendez, and the other by Ovanda, who had repented his previous sorry attitude.

So it was, on June 28, 1504, after 12 months and 4 days of a wretched, stranded existence at Jamaica, Christopher Columbus sailed home again, never more to look upon the world he had discovered.

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE OLD LION

HE WAS an old, old lion, and he had lived in the zoo for many years.

His mate had been in the zoo, too, though he had met her in the jungles.

How well he remembered that time.

What a beautiful young lioness she had been, and how wonderful it was to walk by her side through the deep, dark forests and thick underbrush.

Oh, how lucky he was to have had her say "Yes" when he had asked her the most important question in the world.

Then he had been lucky, too, that both of them had been brought to the zoo.

They had been very well and very contented here, though at times there were longings for that great, free, wild life. Of course there were dangers there and there were no dangers here.

How Wonderful It Was to Walk by Her Side.

Accidents which happen there which could never happen here.

One day a visitor came to the zoo. The visitor came and looked at all the lions, and he stopped and looked at Old Lion for a long time.

There was a sign saying how very, very old, Old Lion was. And the visitor was amazed.

"But he looks like a powerful old brute still," the visitor said.

That pleased Old Lion. And a shadow of a smile came into his great, thoughtful eyes.

"But I'd hate to meet him anywhere. He looks cruel and terrible as though he cared for no one," the visitor added.

Old Lion did not look at the visitor.

He would not do the visitor that honor. No, he looked over his head.

He looked far out beyond and he seemed to see straight through the cages at the other side of the lion house and he seemed to see even beyond—far, far beyond—through to another land.

The visitor had gone. The other lions were asleep. But Old Lion was wide awake.

His mate was asleep.

But he did not feel like sleeping.

"He said I was cruel and terrible, and that I cared for no one," Old Lion repeated.

"That shows how little he knows," he added. "Maybe I have been cruel to my enemies and maybe I have been terrible.

"Maybe I have my faults and maybe he thinks all lions are alike.

"That is the great mistake people make about animals. We are not all alike.

"We have many similar ways—we build and market and we wander and we act along the same family lines (that is not supposed to be a joke, I hope no one will take it as such) as others do.

"But each creature is just a little different from the next one.

"Lions are almost all devoted mates. But above all, I think I am the most devoted mate.

"I do not say this because I wish to praise myself. I say it because I think it is due my beautiful lioness—because she is so beautiful and lovely and she deserves great devotion.

"I loved her when I first saw her.

"I have always loved her. And the man had no right to look at me and say that I looked as though I cared for no one.

"What does he know of the love that is in my lion heart?

"What does he know of the affection and the devotion and the admiration I feel toward my dear lioness?

"She is not so young as she once was, but she is still so wonderful. Her charm, her superb lioness charm, is greater today than ever it was.

"Her roaring voice is more lovely to my ears. Her wild, wild eyes more beautiful.

"Oh, he should not have said I looked as though I cared for no one when I care so deeply for my beautiful lioness mate."

"Did you speak to me?" the lioness said as she awoke.

"I simply said I cared for you," answered Old Lion.

Joan Bennett

Dainty Joan Bennett of the "talkies," is the youngest of three sisters. She was born at the Palisades, New Jersey. Like her sisters, Constance and Barbara, she turned to films. Her slender and blonde beauty attracted the attention of motion picture executives, resulting in a contract for her at Hollywood. She was popular as leading lady in the all-talking film "Broadway Vagabond."

Susie's Forgotten Book

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

USUALLY Susie wasn't the least bit subtle, but for the moment she most certainly was engaged in the mapping out of a subtle line of action.

In the corner of the tea room sat Eric Moore, whom she wished very much to meet. Moore wrote very beautiful little essays that appeared with flattering regularity in various distinctive magazines. His very work sent him among other people, that he might watch and cull choice bits of understanding. Therefore, instead of having his black coffee alone in his den, he came regularly to the tea room and sipped it slowly at the same table each morning.

As a matter of fact it was the motherly instinct in Susie that prompted her initial interest in Moore. He seemed underfed, a bit weary, and smoked a shocking number of cigarettes. Afterward she found out from the tea girl just who he was and forthwith bought a few of his artistically bound volumes and consumed them greedily.

After realizing the great soul caged within that frail body Susie was more keenly bent than ever on knowing him. She wanted to feed him porridge with lots of cream, fresh eggs and goodness knows what all. Susie didn't know that sometimes the poetic output is completely swamped out by too much material feeding, but still there was always a happy medium.

Therefore she bought a soft petunia leather copy of Richard King's "With Silent Friends," and then the subtlety that was not a part of the real Susie had its innings. She agreed with nearly all that the young English essayist had to say, but she deliberately made pencil notes all along the margins in direct and antagonistic contradiction to those wonderful thoughts.

This being done, Susie wrote her name distinctly with her address on the front page, and before Eric Moore came in for his daily coffee she left the book on his table as if it had been forgotten by a hurried customer.

Susie had not the slightest idea that Moore had ever so much as looked at her. She did not know that the poet's fancy is often held captive by personality that reaches out even across a coffee room. And even deep-thinking poets can hardly fail to notice an extraordinarily dainty some one who wears softest shades of fawn from head to foot and has lovely tendrils of reddy gold hair that escape the confines of a becoming wide-brimmed hat.

So Susie watched Moore from under her wide hat brim. She smiled as she saw the sudden interest leap into his eyes at sight of a Richard King volume. Susie then smiled outright when she saw him reading her pencil notes and the scowl that swept across his face. She rejoiced to see him angry, for it showed his entire admiration of Richard King, and therefore a common interest and minds attuned to the same ideals. She was glad that the sentiments she had scratched down were not her real opinions.

Moore evidently contemplated tossing the book aside, then looked for an owner first. He found the name of Susie Wentworth and her address. After that he set his lips rather firmly and put the book in his pocket. Evidently he was intending to write Susie about her lack of ideals.

Susie slipped out after that and Moore watched her exit with longing in his eyes. He was in no way connecting his fawn girl with the name of Susie Wentworth.

Five minutes later he looked up and saw the girl returning breathlessly. She went up to the kindly matron who supervised the tea room, held conversation with her and indicated the table at which Moore sat.

Mrs. Cooper approached his table and he arose.

"Miss Wentworth left a small book on this table this morning, and wonders if anyone has seen it." She questioned with a peculiar twinkle in her kind eyes.

"Mrs. Cooper," laughed Moore. "I have had coffee in your good house now for about three years and have never asked an introduction in all that time. Am I respectable enough now to ask one?" He smiled winningly. "I have the young lady's book, and I would like to meet her. Please."

The introduction being over, Susie accepted Moore's invitation for a cup of coffee.

She looked across the table at him and her eyes were so wonderful that Moore could hardly begin his lecture. He scolded her roundly, and told her that Richard King knew men and women as a master fiddler knew his fiddle. His essays were among the best of the moderns.

"I know it," said Susie with wide-open eyes. "He is quite, quite wonderful. I simply love his thoughts."

"Then why—?" Moore could get no further for Susie's eyes were veiling themselves and he waited breathlessly for the lifting of the lashes.

"Because," Susie told him, and that was all he got by way of answer until long after the meeting.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

WHY WE WORK

THE motive with which we discharge our daily duties is either love or money. The choice we make between these two motives determines our happiness and contentment. In his Modern Painters, John Ruskin argues at length against the monetary motive. He tells us that nothing ever endures that was created for the mere purpose of receiving a fee for services rendered. Is he not right? Could any person imagine Saint-Gaudens creating the statue of Lincoln for the sake of the price the city of Chicago was willing to pay him for his work? Something metallic creeps into a painting when it is done for the sake of financial remuneration. That wonderful "something" that draws an audience to a singer, and which is the secret of success, is lost the moment the evening's fee is a more important consideration than the self-expression of the artist, which love for his work makes possible. A successful business man recently remarked that he went to his office in the seme spirit as he would go to a party. With real pleasure and anticipation he discharged his daily responsibilities. He thought of the annual financial returns as rewards for services faithfully rendered and not as pay for work done. The millions who are driven to drab toil for a mere existence are worse than slaves.

L. A. Barrett.

The spirit of love for one's work occasionally demands the great sacrifice. The air mail route from Cleveland to New York is reported to be extremely dangerous. In fact it is the most dangerous of all the mail routes in the country. During the ten years it has been in operation one pilot lost his life each year. The very interesting thing is that the moment a place thus becomes vacant, another pilot offers his services. Why does he do it? For the sake of the monthly wage? Scarcely would so small a compensation urge one to a task involving tremendous risks. No. He is urged on by the love of adventure. He loves his work.

Why do we work? It must be a very humdrum and monotonous world to any person who works for wages alone. Such a motive sacrifices the spirit which brings true success. Failure is most likely to be the result of such efforts. If we work for the love of it, we are actuated by a motive which assures us happiness and contentment. Success is bound to crown the efforts of all whose work is motivated just for the love of it.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

TRIBULATIONS

WE MAY have disappointments, losses, trials; they are all in the game. We meet them, get over them, and the smoke goes up the chimney just the same.

But tribulations—they are the deep sorrow, the harrowing anguish of bereavement, the flailing afflictions which, though time may heal the wound, leave indelibly their mark.

The wealth in language of history of the world and its changes in heart and mind, the story that, to the prying eye of thought often one word can unfold, is revealed to us by "tribulation."

The "tribulum" was the horraw or thresher employed by the Romans to separate the corn from the husks. From this "Tribulatio" was to represent the threshing itself.

With the advent of Christianity its deepening and ennobling influences were reflected in the language of the day. Words as well as things began to be interpreted in the larger sense. A deeper insight superseded the worldliness of the classical age.

Sorrow and adversity were believed to be but a means of purging, of separating in man the trivial from the true, the chaff from the wheat. And because they were the instrument of this threshing, though of the soul, the sorrows were called "tributations."

Till from the straw the flail the corn doth beat
Until the chaff be purged from the wheat—
Till those corruptions which do misbecome us
Are by Thy sacred spirit winnowed from us.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

GROUND-HOG DAY

THE woodchuck or ground-hog, comes out of his hole on February 2. If he sees his shadow in the sun he goes back to his hibernation, and there will be six weeks more of winter. Whereas if it is cloudy and he sees not his shadow he stays out, and spring comes early.

This is a pet American superstition. The woodchuck is of the squirrel family and is peculiar to America. In Europe there is the same superstition with the substitution of some other hibernating animal. There is evidence that it was originally always some member of the squirrel family, probably the ground-squirrel, though in modern times in some parts of Germany the badger is designated. There is a saying that a German farmer would rather see a wolf enter his barn on February 2 than the sun.

From early Roman times February 2 was the festival of the goddess Februa, the mother of Mars. The Latin Mars was originally not a god of war but of agriculture. As god of agriculture a sun goddess was his appropriate mother. Each year on February 2 the votaries of Februa appeared with lights, endeavoring by the homeopathic magic of "like causes like" to help the sun to a renewal of its beneficient power. Pluto, the lord of the dark underworld, was the natural enemy of the sun. His story shows him to have been an active one. Those members of the squirrel family who disappeared into holes in the ground at the coming of winter were evidently gone to keep tryst with Pluto in his dim realm. On the day when the votaries of Februa were trying to assist the sun Pluto sent his creatures forth to work a counter spell. But if thick, protecting clouds intervened they could not see the sun to work their magic; the magic of the votaries of Februa took effect, the creatures of Pluto knew that "the jig was up" and there would be an early spring. Had they succeeded they would have returned for a further enjoyment of Pluto's hospitality. Having failed they stay above ground to look after their own affairs. This, in brief, is the "Why" of the ground-hog superstition. There is material enough extant for an interesting monograph on the subject.

Any COLD

That cold may lead to something serious, if neglected. The time to do something for it is now. Don't wait until it develops into bronchitis. Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin as soon as you feel a cold coming on. Or as soon as possible after it starts. Bayer Aspirin will head off or relieve the aching and feverish feeling—will stop the headache. And if your throat is affected, dissolve two or three tablets in a quarter-glassful of warm water, and gargle. This quickly soothes a sore throat and reduces inflammation and infection. Read proven directions for neuralgia, for rheumatism and other aches and pains. Genuine Bayer Aspirin is harmless to the heart.

How A College Athlete Keeps Himself Well

BOB DEMING of Colgate, claims that a sensible method of health has really made life a pleasure for him. Mr. Deming writes that at first he could not believe this simple thing was the cause of his buoyant spirits. Finally, however, he had to admit that it was Nujol which was keeping him well, besides giving him, as he says, "five times the vitality."

"Believe me," he says "having free and regular bodily elimination makes all the difference in the world to a diver as well as to any other athlete. I can't afford to be nervous, sluggish, or depressed while diving. It just isn't donel I would like to urge any one, whether they think they are in good health or not, to give Nujol a try-out. It certainly can't do any harm, and I'll bet it would make them feel a hundred per cent better. It's worth trying!"

Mr. Deming has just about told the whole story. He is right in believing that Nujol contains no drugs, no medicines of any kind. It is tasteless and colorless as pure water. It is simply harmless internal lubrication, which your body needs as much as any other machine. Regularly as clock work, Nujol cleans out of your body those poisons which we all have, and which make us low in our minds, tired, headachy, and below par.

Robert O. Deming
fancy diver on Colgate University Swimming Team.

The way for you to find out how much better Nujol will make you feel is to try it for a few days. You can get a bottle in a sealed package at any drug store. It costs only a few cents, but it makes you feel like a million dollars. Do you know how many thousands of people keep themselves well and happy just by using Nujol? Why shouldn't you feel well all the time? You can! Get yourself a bottle of Nujol today!

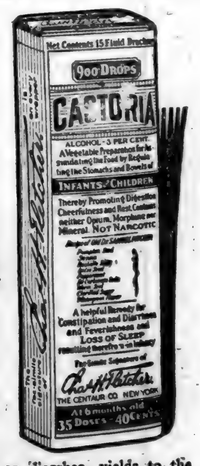
The upsets of Children



All children are subject to little upsets. They come at unexpected times. They seem twice as serious in the dead of night. But there's one form of comfort on which a mother can always rely; good old Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation can't harm the tiniest infant. Yet mild as it is, it soothes a restless, fretful baby like nothing else. Its quick relief soon sees the youngster comfortable once more, back to sleep. Even an attack of colic, or diarrhea, yields to the soothing influence of Castoria.

Keep Castoria in mind, and keep a bottle in the house—always. Give a few drops to any child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is bad. Continue with Castoria until the child is grown! Every drugstore has Castoria; the genuine has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

Why We Do What We Do

by M. E. THOMSON, Ph. D.

WHY WE FALL FOR FLATTERY

THE story of the fox and the crow is one of the best known of Aesop's fables. A crow, having stolen a bit of meat, the fox spoke to the crow thus: "How handsome you are! And I have heard that the beauty of your voice is equal to that of your form and feathers. Will you not sing for me, so that I may judge whether this is true?" The crow was so pleased that she opened her mouth to sing and dropped the meat, which the fox immediately ate.

From ancient times it was known how human beings fall for flattery. This trait has been the subject of much satire. Now and then we find a person who flatters himself into the belief that he is not subject to flattery. It is very doubtful if any normal human being is entirely immune to flattery. It is all in the way the dish is served.

Flattery coming from a superior or from one whose opinion or affections we cherish will be that much more effective for the simple reason that we like to believe the statement as true even when we know that it is false and mere flattery.

We like flattery for the same reason that we hate to be scolded or have our faults spread abroad. It is quite significant that we speak of a conceited person as having a swelled head or of "swelling with pride." Pride and flattery are expansive. They "blow up" the individual, just as the opposite "takes the wind out of one's sails" and the ego collapses like a toy balloon with a hole in it.

We fall for flattery because of innate conceit, because we like to hear nice things about ourselves, because we are only too eager to believe good things concerning our own personality, because we are self-centered, and being social animals we like to get the praise of our fellows.

KIND OF FOODS
THAT THE BODY NEEDS

Dear Mothers:

Have you been wondering at all how it is that we know the body needs certain foods to make it go rightly? I expect you have. Well there are many men and women, scientists we call them, who spend much of their time experimenting with certain foods to see how they affect the body. They have found out that the things we eat like meat, potatoes, cabbage, milk, etc., contain certain things and they have found that bone and teeth and muscle and blood have some of these same things in them. This led them to experimenting on the values of these foods when eaten.

They have experimented on animals, chiefly guinea pigs and rats because their life time is short, they grow rapidly, bear young soon and several generations can be watched in a comparatively short time. You know yourself how soon you could have great grandmother, grandmother, mother and baby rat all in one small pen if you were to raise rats. These scientists have been able to produce soft, crooked teeth in a rat by keeping from him certain foods that he knows are lacking in the thing that is needed to build strong teeth. He proves his point by feeding another rat, just the same age and from the same family, foods that he knows do contain tooth building material and this rat has hard straight teeth. He also feeds a pregnant female rat on foods that he knows are lacking in tooth material and another one rich in them and finds later that the young of the first mother have soft crooked teeth while the young of the second mother have hard teeth. They have done this over and over again, proving to us the effect that a mother's food during pregnancy has on the young.

This is not to be wondered at either when we remember that the little buds of a child's first teeth are beginning to form in the jaws at about the end of the second month of prenatal life. You know too that at birth the buds of the first permanent teeth are developing. Food for them comes from the mother.

Bone, muscle, blood, nerves, etc., are all thus affected by the food of the mother. The condition of a child's teeth pretty well tells the tale of his whole physical makeup at birth. So very much depends on you mothers—not only in feeding your family but in feeding yourself—especially if you are still in the child-bearing period. I shall write more of this later.

Sincerely,
EDNA GRABIEL.

A Cordial Welcome Features The Rexall Store

St. Joe, Indiana, Jan. 25, 1930

To The Editor of The St. Joe News:

The picture in The St. Joe News is that of the Mapes Drug Store at Hicksville, Ohio, known to the public as the "Rexall Store." And I must say it is one of the most modern up-to-date drug stores in a town of its size.

They carry a complete line of the finest wall paper, paints, drugs, etc., along with their first class soda fountain.

Their low prices on well known standard drug store merchandise saves you money every day in the week.

So that is why one should patronize a store that caters to the best of everything in its line. You will always receive a cordial welcome whether your purchase be large or small. Proof of the popularity of this store is the large crowds of shoppers that visit it especially Wednesdays and Saturdays.

They also carry a wonderful line of Beauty Creations, the congenial lady clerks will gladly aid the ladies in selecting the correct preparations for their individual beauty needs.

And when you enter this store you are greeted by the clerks with a smile and given such a hearty welcome you will sure go back. And you will never regret trading at Mapes Rexall Store when in Hicksville.

CARING FOR AUTO IN WINTER SEASON

Suggestions for Starting Car in Extremely Cold Weather.

During the recent subzero blast which swept over the greater part of the country, many thousands of automobiles could not be started after being parked in the open. The mechanical first aid department of the Chicago Motor club offers the following aids to starting in frigid temperatures.

Use Lightest Lubricants.

1. Ask the agency of your car or a reliable filling station the lightest lubricants, compatible with safe lubrication, in the crank case and gear box.

2. Before stepping on the starter see to it that the gear shift lever is in neutral and depress the clutch pedal. Open the hand feel throttle one-quarter of the way or more.

3. Step on the starter and use the choke sparingly.

4. If the starter cannot spin the motor, set the spark at full retard and pull sharply upward with the crank. This quick motion will frequently start motors when the starter fails.

Parking for Long Period.

5. When it is expected that the car will remain parked in the open for a long period, it is wise, when shutting the motor off, to speed it slightly and then shut off the ignition and choke it at the same time. This procedure causes a gasoline vapor to be present in the cylinders when the motor is next started. This practice should be used infrequently, however, as the gasoline drawn into the cylinders tends to seep past the pistons into the crank case, where it dilutes the oil. The oil should be changed frequently if this trick is resorted to repeatedly.

6. The ignition system and carburetor adjustment must be correct in order to enjoy easy starting.

Bad Brakes Responsible for Serious Accidents

Faulty brakes are responsible for more than one-third of the serious automobile accidents in the United States attributed to defective equipment, according to a survey made public here by the American Research foundation.

"Analysis of accident records in 13 large cities and 5 states," says the survey, "disclosed that of 4,899 motor vehicles involved in accidents in which defective equipment was reported, 39 per cent had defective brakes. For all localities investigated, improper lights account for 34 per cent of the defects reported, defective steering mechanism for 15 per cent, and other defects for 11 per cent.

"With faulty brakes classed as the commonest type of defective automobile equipment, the necessity of care in correcting variations and testing brakes at frequent intervals if automobile accident totals are to be reduced. With the speed of modern driving and the necessity for quick stops in traffic, reliable brakes spell the difference between safety and disaster."

AUTOMOBILE NOTES

The life of a car can be greatly lengthened by keeping it tightened.

Be considerate at all times. Other users of the road have equal rights.

Rusty rims should be cleaned with a wire brush and then painted with red lead.

• • •

The first tourist camp for motorists in Norway is to be established on the main highway into Trondhjem.

Stop—when in doubt—at railroad crossings, behind street cars taking on or discharging passengers. Better to cause a delay than an accident.

• • •

The battery should be kept at its maximum charge at all times, and never permitted to stand in a discharged state.

THE MOTOR QUIZ

How Many Can You Answer?

Q. Under what conditions is horn blowing useless and when should liberal use of the horn be made?

Ans. Horn blowing is useless in traffic jams because it not only fails to clear the jam but causes confusion and many times angers others concerned. The proper place to make liberal use of the horn is when passing other cars, driving on curves, mountain roads and blind intersections on country roads.

Q. What three bad practices shorten the life of tires?

Ans. Turning corners at high speed, thereby shifting the weight of the car to one side; sudden stepping on the accelerator, causing the wheels to spin; rushing up to corners and slamming on the brakes.

Q. If spark plugs are missing what particular trouble would be likely to develop?

Ans. Owing to incomplete combustion gasoline may go by the pistons and rings and into the crankcase, with consequent oil dilution, causing excessive wear to moving parts, bearings, cylinder walls, and pistons. It is also accompanied by loss of power on hard pulls, hard starting, slow pick-up, and generally speaking it produces a sluggish engine.

Q. What was the increase of gasoline consumption and exports for the first seven months of 1929 as compared with the same period for 1928?

Ans. Consumption increased 14.6 per cent and exports 13 per cent.

Powder Coated Rag Will Prevent Short Circuits

A short in the high tension wires leading to the spark plugs, caused by moisture, usually occurs where the wires are clustered together.

When this happens, dry the wires, one at a time, with a cloth on which is placed a generous amount of either soapstone powder or face powder, preferably soapstone. In drying the wires entering the distributor cap be careful not to remove more than one wire at a time unless it is well understood how to replace them.

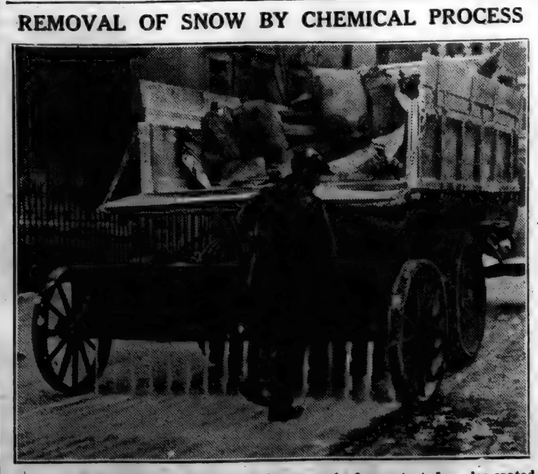
Keeping the wires and the outside of the distributor cap exceptionally clean and using soapstone in the manner described will result in keeping the rubber insulation in good condition and no trouble will be experienced from rain. Of course, this suggestion applies only to ordinary rubber-covered high tension wire. Special high tension wire covered with varnished fabric should not be treated in this way. Such wire should be wiped with a clean dry cloth only.—Popular Science Monthly.

Commandments Made for Those Who Drive Cars

Just what motorists should do to promote safe driving has been given by the Automobile Club of Southern California in a list of "Ten Commandments." They are:

Keep your car in sound condition; keep your car under control; keep your eyes on the road; never fight for the right of way; go along with the procession; be courteous; know your local traffic rules; take pride in your driving skill; don't mix liquor, worry or anger with gasoline; study local maps and experiment for shorter and less congested routes.

REMOVAL OF SNOW BY CHEMICAL PROCESS



The removal of snow by chemical process is demonstrated on ice-coated Brooklyn streets. The pellets of calcium chloride used are spread on the snow and in a short time a brine is formed which melts the snow and forms a slush which may be easily washed away.

CHAPTER VI

Life is no bower of roses for the schemer of schemes. Ellen Tolliver was not the first to make that discovery in actual experience. There could be no possible question but that she had figured the family future along the most pleasant as well as profitable lines, and yet it grew increasingly difficult to hold her recalcitrant subjects to the designated stars. Take Miriam, the sensible twin, for instance, frivoling away the precious hours of her life out at Pay Dirt in the company of a mere can grocer. And it was not merely that she did those things, she enjoyed the doing. That was the painful side of the situation.

And there was Marjory. Hiram Buckworth remained a pleasant and comradely member of the household cheerfully paying ten of his fifteen dollars into the general coffer every week, and obviously counting this not so much a hardship as a privilege. Miss Jenkins liked him, Mr. Tolliver liked him, the members of the church liked him. All the young daughters of all the influential members developed a strange assiduity along lines of religious activity. On the surface, things seemed to progress with a sweet serenity which should have been highly satisfactory to everybody concerned.

But Ginger Ella, casting about her with keen eyes that saw everything, and a keen mind that suspected even more, knew intuitively that all was not well, not in the church, where were heard vague murmurings, indefinite suggestions, and were seen strange and significant looks, nor in the parsonage itself, where Hiram Buckworth looked too often, and too long, upon the slender white hands of Marjory Tolliver. This was a bad sign, one of the very worst. Hiram Buckworth was good looking. Marjory had always been man-mad. The situation held all sorts of horrible possibilities. Ginger renewed her vigilance.

Hiram Buckworth, good looking, brilliant young student, had deliberately chosen the ministry as his life work. She tossed him a scant respect for that choice, which, although it accorded him a high mark for character, in no way entitled him to a permanent place in her plans for the family's future. Being a seminary man, with special study at Oxford, he would begin perhaps at a thousand dollars, or twelve hundred if he was lucky, and would progress upward, slowly, perhaps as far as two thousand, twenty-five hundred, possibly—he was so very good looking. If he married, he would instantly, according to time-honored Methodist parsonage statistics as figured by Ginger, become possessed of a minimum of three children.

Small good would be one of his estate to the impoverished and needy Tollivers. Encouraging him was a deliberate throwing away of their one resource. It was the willful choking of their oil well. It was the burning of their liberty bonds. Ginger reconnoitered carefully. She did more than reconnoiter. She hounded. She was all-present, all-pervasive, all-observing. If Marjory and the young minister inclined for a stroll in the moonlight, Ginger inclined also. If they sat in the shade of the ramblers on the veranda, Ginger sat with them, bored, but unyielding.

Had she washed dishes all these years merely to save the fair hands of Marjory for the dishes of Hiram Buckworth and a minimum of three? The attic saw little of Ellen Tolliver during these days. She met the postman, thanked him warmly for the letters he gave her, and flew to the attic. The dimes crashed into the dolls' trunk, and Ginger returned to her veranda vigil.

In a way considerable disappointment attended the accumulation of funds for the blind. Rarely did she receive more than five contributions in a day, a stingy fifty cents. Lovely daughters cannot be sent to finishing schools, shabby parsonages cannot be done over, suffering eyes cannot be operated on by expensive surgeons, upon a paltry five dimes a day. Not that Ginger frowned upon her receipts, far from it. It was only that she had hoped so greatly.

In the three weeks of Mr. Tolliver's idleness in the country, he had acquired a thick coat of unaccustomed tan, and five full pounds in weight, with such an increase of strength, enthusiasm, and ambition, that he was inclined to feel ashamed of his continued idleness. Word from town that a special committee from the official board wished to meet him at the parsonage on Thursday evening for a discussion of important church matters, gave him real pleasure.

Eddy Jackson drove him in, with Miriam, and feeling, with his usual tact, that the family would like to be alone for a few hours of intimate reunion, he pleaded important business, and left them, promising to return for them at eleven o'clock. And after their modest supper, they sat, the three girls and their father, in the pleasant old living room and waited for the coming of the committee.

"They want that last two thousand raised," said their father, smiling, "and so do I. But I am sure the people will contribute it of the own free will, in gratitude, on the day of the dedication."

Presently came Joplin Westbury, alone, ill at ease, but obviously a man with his mind made up.

"Well, Brother Tolliver," he said, "it's good to see you again. You are looking better. Eyes any stronger?"

"I think so, yes, I am sure of it. I feel much better. What hour was appointed for the meeting? Isn't the rest of the committee late?"

"Well, as a matter of fact, the rest of the committee is not coming. Brother Dawes was called out of town on business—late this afternoon, and Brother Macklen is in bed with an attack of acute indigestion. Not that I believe a word of it myself. They just backed out, that's all."

"Is the meeting postponed, then?"

"Well, no. You see, I was the chairman anyhow, and I can do as well without the committee. We'll just have it out by ourselves."

The girls rose quickly. "We'll run upstairs if you will excuse us," said Miriam.

"No, don't go," said Joplin Westbury quickly, evidently not at all desiring to be left alone with his gentle, unseeing pastor. "You stay right here. It's a family matter, as you might say, and we'll just have it all right out in the open."

Mr. Tolliver sat very still, a rigid figure against the faded blue velvet of the big chair, his head bent forward.

"You see, we had a meeting of the official board Monday night."

"You did! Why, I could have come in for it."

"Well, we just had it by ourselves, in fact we've had several. Well, there's no use beating about the bush," continued the embarrassed official. "You see, Brother Tolliver, that while all our people like you, and like your work—like your whole family, in fact —still— Well, you can see that a blind man can't run a church—not rightly—not a fine new church like this one of ours. Now that we've put so much money into this new church, we've got to get in the crowds to fill it up, and help pay the expenses. And a blind man—"

Mr. Tolliver did not move. "Yes, Brother Westbury. Go on," he said gently.

"Well, you see how it is. And since the Congregationalists have started to hold meetings of their own in the Odd Fellows' hall, they've taken about a dozen of our good payers, and we've got to get in others to take their places. Now you see how we're fixed. We like you, first-rate, but we've got to work for the church, first and last. Well, we waited, and hoped you would get over it. We wrote to the doctors, and they say you've not got much chance—not one in a hundred. You're all run down, and you need a long rest—maybe a year, maybe two years —to build you up."

"But perhaps an operation—it would be expensive, but—"

"We asked about the operation. They just talked about that to cheer you up. An operation wouldn't do any good. Your eyes are just plain worn out. You'll all worn out—that's the straight of it."

"I see."

"Well, we talked it over with the district superintendent, and he hadn't a word to say against you, Brother, nor any of us either for that matter. But you see how it is. The new church and all. So he said he would fix it up at the conference this fall, and they'll retire you according to the books—I don't know just how it is, but they pay you right along, and—it's all down in the 'Discipline.' And you'll get a good long rest, and we'll get in some fresh young chap to draw the crowds and fill up the new church."

"But—but it's father's—the new church is," gasped Ginger, unable to endure the dead silence that hung so blackly over the little group.

Joplin Westbury turned on her sharply, evidently glad of a chance to switch the tide of his talk from the stricken minister. "No, Ellen, it's not your father's church. It's not our church. It's God's."

Ginger wilted suddenly. "Yes," she assented. "Yes, of course. I wish we could let God run it."

"Ellen," reproved her father gently.

"I'm sorry—I didn't mean—" she stammered nervously.

"Yes, never mind. We know you meant nothing wrong. You are quite right, of course, Brother Westbury. It is all true. A blind man would only be an encumbrance—in a new church like that. I should have resigned before—but I kept hoping I would recover. And I had my family—"

"Oh, you'll be taken care of, Brother Tolliver, don't you worry. You won't be allowed to suffer, you nor your family either. Just you remember that. It's all down in the 'Discipline.' The conference will take care of you."

"How soon— When do you—"

"Well, now, Brother, we figured we would just keep you right along until conference, on full salary and everything. And you can just rest up in the country, and let this young Buckworth do the preaching. We like him first rate. And we want you to preach the dedication, we're absolutely unanimous on that—nobody but you for the dedication, for as you might say, it's your church. That is, you understand, you raised the money and all."

"Yes, I see. Thank you very much."

Awkwardly, the trustee made his good-bys and hurried away. He did not look back. Miriam walked with him to the door, shook hands with him. She even smiled. Then she slipped back and joined the hushed little group.

"F-father," begged Ginger, in an anguished tone, "don't be shocked—please don't. Remember what the doctors said."

He put out his hand to her, with a sad smile, and she crushed it between both of hers.

"You see, there is no hope," he said. "They were only pretending that I had a chance."

"No, father," contradicted Miriam sweetly. "No, they were not pretending. They said you had a chance, and they meant it. They said the only way was for you to become so strong and well that your eyes also would grow strong and well. They did not deceive you. You did have—you have got a chance. I asked them a dozen times, and they told me honestly."

"And as far as money goes," cried Ginger, more cheerily, "I have quite a few little secrets of my own. It is two months till conference. By that time, old darling, I shall probably be able to take care of you myself."

He smiled at her again. "Dear Ellen," he said gently. "If only these slim little hands could carry out the kindly projects of that eager little heart we should never want for much in this world."

"Oh, but this time I really mean it —I mean—I am quite sure—" The disclosure of her hopes trembled at the tip of her tongue—her eyes grew rapt and luminous. But her sisters, so used to her daring dreams, and her extravagant promises, paid small heed. Their thoughts were upon the sordid reality of the present moment and its disappointment.

"It's a good thing the wedding is over," said Marjory. "Helen would never have gone, if she had suspected this."

"Boarding Mr. Buckworth will help out quite a little," said Miriam. "As for us, as long as we stay at Pay Dirt, we're simply gorging ourselves among the fleshpots of Egypt."

Ginger shook the rapture from her eyes, closed her teeth firmly upon her secret. The time had not come for her triumphal pronouncement.

"Well, as Old Jop says—" she began.

"Ellen!"

"I mean Brother Westbury. Eddy Jackson calls him Old Jop. Well, as he says, the conference will take care of us. What will we get, father? Where is the 'Discipline?' Let's look it up."

She ran upstairs for the book.

"I should have resigned," said her father drearily. "I knew I could not minister to them properly. But I did keep hoping."

Historic Buildings in Finnish Town of Turku

Turku was Finland's first capital. Christianity was first taught there, and the first Christian converts were baptized in the River Aura. The oldest cathedral and the oldest castle in Finland are to be found in Turku, and nearly all the historic homes of the Finnish nobility are in or near the city.

With the exception of the cathedral and the castle, modern Turku has been built since the disastrous fire of 1827, when the old town was almost entirely destroyed in a blaze that burned for five days. Both the castle and the cathedral are grim structures with little exterior ornament. The cathedral has a long, narrow vaulted interior and most of the immense treasure which was once kept there has disappeared.

Part of the castle is now a museum and is furnished with pieces of old Finnish furniture. Visitors can still see the dungeon, six fathoms deep and black as pitch, where prisoners were kept. In the great central hall is a high gallery from which a cruel ruler once had unruly subjects hurled to the floor below. One cell in the castle is still known as the malefactor's resting place.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

It's hard for a woman to forgive another for having done her a favor.

Lesson for February 2

PUTTING GOD'S KINGDOM FIRST

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 6:1-24

(Print vv. 5-13, 19-21, 31-33).

GOLDEN TEXT—Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Being True to Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Being Loyal to Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Being Loyal to Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Putting First Things First.

Having set forth in the previous chapter the standards of the kingdom, Jesus now exhibits the underlying principles which control the subjects of the kingdom.

I. As to Giving (vv. 1-4).

Alms were not to be given before men to be seen of them. Doing alms before men is not condemned as that would contradict Matthew 5:16, but the doing of them before men to be seen of them. To seek publicity in doing our alms is to miss the reward of our heavenly Father. The true child of the kingdom will seek privacy in doing righteousness, that he may have the open reward of the Father.

II. As to Praying (vv. 5-15).

1. False prayer (vv. 5, 7).

This consists in (1) Praying to be seen and heard of men (v. 5). Many of the prayers uttered in public are false, for there is more thought of what the people think than of what God thinks. (2) Using vain repetitions (v. 7). This does not mean that we should ask but once for a given thing. We have examples of Christ and Paul praying three times for the same thing (Matt. 26:39-46; II Cor. 12:7, 8). It means the using of meaningless repetitions. The reason is, "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him."

2. True prayer (v. 6).

Since prayer is a transaction of the soul with God, there should be a real desire for fellowship with Him which moves one to meet Him in the secret place.

3. The model prayer (vv. 9-15).

This involves (1) Right relationship —"Our Father" (v. 9). (2) Right attitude—"Hallowed be thy name" (vv. 9, 10). (3) Right spirit—"Give us our daily bread, forgive us our sins, lead us not into temptation" (vv. 11-13).

III. As to Fasting (vv. 16-18).

The true reason for fasting is to be found in the opportunity it gives for a clear vision of God. Those who have thus seen God will make it manifest in a joyful countenance.

IV. As to Earthly Riches (vv. 19-24).

The Lord knew the temptations which would befall His children in their earthly pilgrimage and the anxiety to which it would lead; therefore He set forth the proper attitude toward them.

1. The nature of earthly riches (vv. 19-21).

(1) Uncertain (vv. 19, 20). Earthly treasures corrode, or are taken from us, therefore we should lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven where they are absolutely safe from corruption and from thieves. (2) Seductive (v. 21). Christ called riches deceitful (Matt. 13:22). It is not wrong to possess earthly treasures, but when earthly treasures possess us, they become a snare unto us. Excessive attention should not be given to earthly treasures.

2. The effect of earthly riches (vv. 22-24).

(1) Blunt the moral and spiritual perceptions (vv. 22, 23). Those who become enamored of the things of this world soon become irresponsive to spiritual things. When the heart is upon earthly treasures, it is taken from God. The double eye is disastrous to spirituality. (2) They render null and void all service (v. 24). As soon as one's heart is stolen by riches, he is rendered unfit for spiritual service.

V. As to Faith in the Heavenly Father (vv. 25-34).

1. Be not anxious about food and clothing (vv. 25-34).

Because (1) It shows distrust of God (v. 30). God is able to supply His children's needs. (2) It is useless (v. 31). Anxiety can bring nothing. While bringing us nothing, it weakens our service. (3) It is heathenish (v. 32). Those who have not learned to trust God may worry over temporal affairs, but those who know Him as a loving Father, will be free from care.

2. Be anxious to seek the kingdom of God and serve Him (vv. 33, 34).

This means that worldly affairs should be subordinated to spiritual affairs.

Seed Thoughts

How often do we sigh for opportunities of doing good, whilst we neglect the openings of Providence in little things, which would frequently lead to the accomplishment of most important usefulness.—Crabbe.

Anywhere

The grace of God can make believers live the Christian life anywhere; and if they cannot be Christians everywhere, they cannot be anywhere.—Prophetic News.

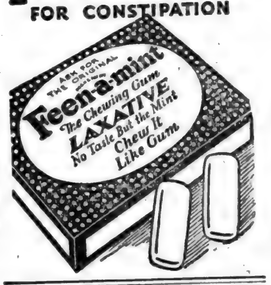
Get poisons out of system. . . .

Doctors know that this modern scientific laxative works efficiently in smaller doses because you chew it. Safe and mild for old and young.

Feen-a-mint
FOR CONSTIPATION



It is unfortunate that a youth has to sow wild oats before he can learn how worthless the crop is.

Don't neglect a COLD

DISTRESSING cold in chest or throat—that so often leads to something serious—generally responds to good old Musterole with the first application. Should be more effective if used once every hour for five hours.

Working like the trained hands of a masseur, this famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other helpful ingredients brings relief naturally. It penetrates and stimulates blood circulation, helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by doctors and nurses.

Keep Musterole handy—jars and tubes.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

MUSTEROLE
BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

As some men see it, our national game is any kind of skin game.

Helped at Change of Life

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a wonderful medicine at the Change of Life. I would get blue spells and just walk the floor. I was nervous, could not sleep at night, and was not able to do my work. I know if it had not been for your medicine I would have been in bed most of this time and had a big doctor's bill. If women would only take your medicine they would be better."—Mrs. Anna Weaver, R. F. D. No. 2, Rose Hill, Iowa.

THE EXCUSE, USE AND ABUSE OF EDUCATION

Not as a high hat attainment, not as an advertiser of self, not as a business getter, not as a purchaser or seller of friends, not as a dollar raiser or a nickle nurser, not as a fore flusher, not as an ornament, not as an enemy of the poor, not as an inspiration to defraud, not as a depressor of good in the community, not to create despisers of good judgment, not to license deceivers, not to license a few to privileges and to the damnation of the many to poverty BUT as a medium of exchange by which one man can befriend another, IS the excuse for education.

Education has no need to plead for its existence. What it has done has furnished its excuse or its alibi. In other words, education is known both by its name and by its face. Education is the mother of all things good in modern civilization, why try to name any of them for they are too many. Only one will we name. Education made possible the entrance of the Christian Church into this world through its gift known as the Renaissance, since that time there has been great strides in the inventive and religious world moving to some great destiny over the road to progress.

But since so few people disbelieve in education as a friendly and benificent institution there is no occasion to shoot any cannon to advertise the fact of its great contribution to the earth or even to dig around in the grave yards of the past to let the bones of "all great men remind us, that we can make our lives sublime" etc. Education has but one lesson to teach us for the present. Learn the difinition of your self. What do you stand for, standing alone? Are you what people say you are or are you what you think you are? A man must find this out before learning of any sort would be a safe thing for him to acquire.

The abuse of education is usually done by two different ways. By using education with evil intent against your neighbor or by failing to use it at all for any good whatsoever, commission or omission. One of the best ways to insult self or neighbor is to use or fail to use education in the edification of both self and friends. If an individual knows not how to be a definitive American, there are histories that will tell him how it is done. If an individual knows not how to be a Christian, there is a bible that will tell him how, "a book that guarantees fools not to err therein." If an individual knows not what tolerance, faith, hope, and charity means, there are fraternal institutions in the land that will obligate him into a full knowledge of their meaning.

The idea that we mortals are expected to go through three or four colleges before we can learn fundamentals necessary to a little common sense and good behavior among our friends and neighbors, meeting out of them kindness and a square deal, is one place that education is needed now. If a man or woman can be a Christian or a patriotic American in its recognized meaning, without spending all or most of his time in college, they have made a short cut and a saving of time. After all the noise is over and the book has been read and closed, there will be found three words that will name all the duties of mankind in a nutshell. These are those and those are these. A SQUARE DEAL. If there be a person who knows not how to do this thing, the world is full of learning, find out, find out, find out.

Ignoramus.

Success in the Sunday School business comes through a thorough knowledge of what constitutes the various details of the business.

Successful ideas constitute the milestones of advancement.

No one has a monopoly on ideas; ideas may be shared. The County Convention and its Conferences provide a medium for the sharing of ideas which have and are being successfully applied in our schools.

The speakers are well qualified to handle their subjects. By word of mouth and illustration, they will bring concrete, practical messages, which can be applied to your Sunday School.

Good speakers, plus a knowledge of their subjects, plus your presence, equals Better Schools.

MORTUARY

Place

Reed F. Place was born in Tarrytown, Bradford County, Pa., September 30, 1862. He came to this community in the early part of the year 1883, and has lived here since that time.

He was united in marriage to Miss Della Bevington, by Elder Westner, at Hicksville, November 4, 1886.

In 1886 he accepted Christ as his personal Redeemer and united with the U. B. Church at Logan. He became a member of the Church of Christ at Coburn's Corners 28 years ago, and two years ago transferred his membership to the Church of Christ in Hicksville.

To this union seven children were born, Earl, the eldest, died in infancy. Bertha Dermott, Alvey, Mewin, Gladys, Glenn and Roscoe, who died eleven years ago at the age of 19 years.

The living children and Mrs. Place, together with two brothers, James and George of Hicksville, many relatives and a host of friends are left to mourn their loss.

Mr. Place was a willing servant of his Lord, and it can be said of him, "He was glad when we said unto him, let us go into the House of the Lord." He was a true friend, a loving husband, and a father beloved by his children, a man of good judgment, loyal to every principal of right and truth. The esteem in which he was held by the church was made a part of record one year ago when he was made Elder Emeritus of the congregation at Hicksville. Two weeks ago he was at his accustomed place at the Lord's table and breathed forth a prayer for God's richest blessings upon the church. We shall miss his pleasant smile, his hearty handclasp, his words of helpful encouragement, and the rich blessings of a true and tried friend.

Funeral services were held in the old home church at Coburn's Corners, in charge of Dr. S. E. Brewster, his pastor, assisted by Rev. J. O. Rose, of Angola, and Rev. J. N. Scholes, of St. Joe.

BREAKS ARM WHILE DOING HER CHORES

Mrs. J. D. Fetters is now in the home of her son, L. G. Fetters, where she is being nursed, as the result of falling while feeding her cattle, tripping over corn stalks, and breaking her left arm in two places.

Last week she experienced a fire scare. Getting up early she proceeded to kindle the kitchen fire and the blaze ignited the nap of her cotton gown which spread rapidly. She was successful in extinguishing the blaze without serious results.

Mrs. Fetters is very active and her last misfortune will retard her very much in taking care of her home, even when able to again go to her self.

Mrs. B. E. Widney was taken to the hospital Wednesday morning for an examination.

More Heat In Every Shovelful

Our coal costs no more—in fact it costs less for it burns longer. It has more heat units per ton.

You'll notice the difference when you observe your ash can. Our coal leaves a pure ash with no unburnable pieces for which you pay merely to throw away.

There's no question about the quality of our coal. Try a ton and be convinced.

Down the Old State Road

By request of Miss Marie Goldsmith we publish this poem written by George Weeks, on April 22, 1906. It will be appreciated by our older readers as the state road in those days was the "Main Street" of the county, and the names will recall some pleasant and some sad memories.

Why, here you are, dear Old State Road!
I had no thought I'd meet you here
Since last along with you I strode,
I've wandered many a weary year.

How glad I am, good Old State Road,
To see the kindly smile once more
Light up your well remembered face,
Just as it did in days of yore.

O, lead me back along your way,
To view the old familiar scenes,
Show me the countless things today
I've seen so long only in dreams.

Take me to each beloved home
I had along your ample side,
And wait awhile for me to roam
O'er each, before you farther guide.

Show me old Twenty-six Mile Creek,
Where, 'cross your track from side to side,
In such short space, thrice by his freak,
His waters neath your bridges glide.

Midway between two homes I had;
Wait while I stand, then, at his brink,
Just as you did when I, a lad,
Tossed pebbles in to watch them sink.

And please don't hurry me away,
But let me linger on your bridge,
To watch once more the minnows play,
Before we climb the sandy ridge.

Up to the beechen forest's shade,
And might I not still longer stay,
And in his cooling waters wade
Again, and list his rippling lay?

Kind Old State Road, show me the same
Log house that was my childhood home;
The one where Baby Brother came—
Where mother swung her weaving loom.

Where little sisters helped me play,
While father plied compass and chain;
Show me there, just across your way,
The old Lounsberry home again.

Where dwelt poor little Cousin May
Who lost her life in cruel flames.
Help me to recall again today
Old scenes, and old familiar names:—

The old Meese homestead on the hill;
And old Mount Hope, there let me stop;
Methinks I see the grove there still,
With "Grandpa" Coleman in his shop.

And lead me by the Goldsmith grove;
Past Swineford's farm; the Wingard place;
'Twill tire me no, though far we rove,
Recalling each familiar face.

Let's pass along McGowan's farm,
And those of Ingman, Brown and Grim;
And when we reach the Cosper barn,
Please wait for me, while I go in.

That barn, when new, in war-time days,
Had dedication sad, you know;
And always, when it meets my gaze
My thoughts back to that sorrow go.

Within its walls the funeral rites
Were held for Cosper's soldier son,
Who sought the thickest of the fights,
Until his brief career was run.

He helped to win as fierce a fight
As ever waged beneath the sun;
Then waved and cheered with all his might,
Mounted upon a captured gun.

The routed saw him, thus, a mark,
And aimed a fatal rifle shot,
It made his flaming life quite dark:
His glory, though, it dieth not.

On reaching Auburn from the east;
Past Shreeve's, Showers' Corners on Past Ashelman's, McClellan's, Ford's,
All pioneers, and all now gone.

Proceeding on your westward way
I should rejoice and praise the Lord,
If we, once more, might meet today,
The kind and good old Elder Ward.

Then, lead me back to old Newville:—
Through William Thomas' dairy place,—
Past Wyatt's, Nelson's Murray's hill;
Recalling each familiar face.

At Newville, ere we farther go—
(I always prize the privilege)—
We'll walk across the old St. Joe,
Upon your long, roof-covered bridge.

Beyond, we'll pass the homestead old,
Where lived and died Colonel Delong;
And those of Fuller, Imhoff, Blood,
And that of Nichols farther on.

Come memories reach me thick and fast
To urge me on your eastward way,
Along the scenes my childhood passed;
Take me to Hicksville yet today.

ANOTHER CUSTOMER IS SATISFIED

A few days ago we received a letter from the "Etna Breezes," a monthly publication in the ineterest of Etna Green, Indiana High School, and coming from our presses, containing the following words of appreciation:

"Find check enclosed. The paper came O. K. and every one is pleased with the looks. I am sure glad, as it will go now and I know the other would not."

The editor of The Breezes is Wylan Snider and the last phrase of the letter refers to the two issues put out by other printers.

The kind words of appreciation are apreciated by The News force.

OBITUARY

Minnie Louise Thompson, daughter of John and Margaret Thompson, was born at Quincey, Franklin County, Pennsylvaia on May 1, 1869, where she also spent her girlhood days. At about the age of twenty-nine years she came to this section of Indiana, and for the past forty years or so had assumed the duties of the home of Harvey Kimes, formerly of Spencer township and at the present time of St. Joe.

She had been for many years a member of St. Peter's Lutheran Church at Spencerville, until moving to St. Joe where she was transferred to St. Mark's Lutheran Church.

She departed this life suddenly on January 27 at the age of 60 years, 8 months and 26 days.

She is survived by one brother, D. W. Thompson; three sisters, Mrs. Catherine Houser, Mrs. Barbara Houser and Miss Mary A. Thompson all of Quincey, Pa. Three neices survive: Mrs. Blanch Stroudand, Mrs. Margaret Wasmus, of Detroit, and Blanch Thompson of Iowa; one nephew, Allen C. Houser of Quincey.

OBITUARY

Anna Eliza Detrick Snyder was born in Mahoney County, Ohio, August 21, 1850, and departed this life January 27, 1930 at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George Walter near St. Joe, Indiana, at the age of 79 years, 6 months and 25 days.

In early childhood she moved with her parents to Allen County, Indiana. When quite young she united with the English Lutheran Church at Springfield Center, later moving her membership to Harlan M. P. Church.

In 1869 she was united in mariage to Ferdinand Snyder. To this union one child was born, a daughter. Her husband and one grandchild having preceded her in death. She leaves to mourn her departure one daughter, Mrs. Geo. Walter of St. Joe, four grandchildren, one sister, Mrs. C. H. Snyder of Milan Township, and a host of friends and relatives.

The funeral was conducted from the Harlan M. P. Church Thursday afternoon by Rev. B. W. Mayfield. E R. Kinsey funeral director, and burial was made at Harlan.

LOCAL NEWS ITEMS

Mrs. C. A. Woodcox and daughter, Mary Louise, are visiting relatives in Garrett.

The P. T. A. has been postponed until February 18th when a Citizenship program will be given with Attorney Henry C. Springer as guest speaker.

Dr. Sheffer continues in a very critical condition, getting weaker each day. Miss Martha George is also in the Craig Sheffer home and is quite poorly with heart attacks. She took sick at the Mrs. Virginia Lawson home and was moved to the Sheffer home four weeks ago.

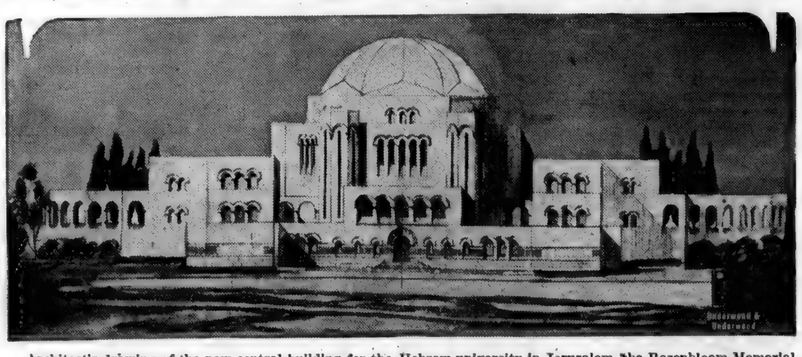
Police Dispersing New Bedford Communists

Communists attempted recently to stage a demonstration before the textile mills in New Bedford, Mass., but the gathering was quickly dispersed by policemen who used their clubs freely. The scene in the street is shown above.

Beautiful Building for Jerusalem University



Architect's drawing of the new central building for the Hebrew university in Jerusalem, the Rosenbloom Memorial, designed by Julian Clarence Levi of New York. This magnificent structure, combining the modern setback style with the ancient ideas, will be erected on Mount Scopus, overlooking the Valley of Kedron and the old city of Jerusalem, the Dead sea and Jordan valley. It will cost a half million dollars.

Indian Chief Accuses Custer

Charges that the battle which ended in the famous Custer massacre was deliberately provoked by Gen. George A. Custer, were sworn to in Washington by Chief Iron White Man, one of the survivors of the famous battle. The chief's affadavit was made in connection with the filing of suits for $800,000,000 by members of the Sioux tribe as compensation for land lost as a result of Custer's invasion. The photograph shows Chief Iron White Man (left), who made the charges, and Chief Standing Bear.

Going After Treasure of the Incas

Left to right: Robert C. Jackson of Detroit, Mich.; Albert V. Rosell, a descendant of the Incas of Peru, and Gideon A. Lasley, also of Detroit, photographed as they sailed for Peru, where they will seek the vast hidden wealth of the once powerful Incas. Rosell claims to have knowledge of the whereabouts of the wealth buried by the Incas during the conquest by Spain in the Seventeenth century. Jackson and Lasley are backing the expedition, whose goal is said to be a spot about twenty miles from Cuzco, Peru.

The invitation has been extended by Doctor Donath of Budapest, Hungary, secretary of the International Swimming Federation.

Community Building

Trees That "Make Good" on the Home Grounds

Elm and oak trees are ideal for the home grounds, not only because of their beauty and long life, but because their shade is not so dense as to kill plants and grass beneath them.

Oaks are considered to be slow growing trees, but they will grow almost as readily as the elms. The burr oak, which grows with a widespread head and rugged branches, is the finest for the yard and the pin oak for parkways. Red oaks do best in light, dry soils. Oaks are not difficult to transplant if one buys nursery-grown trees of the small sizes and prunes them back severely at planting time. If this is neglected the oak is quite likely to die even after it puts out leaves.

Black walnuts are fine shade trees and grow readily. They produce nuts whose merit is recognized by all good cooks and their wood is the most expensive of native woods.

The gongko bilboa or maiden hair tree, which has a leaf shaped like that of the maiden hair fern and which grows in a perfect cone, is much used for parkway planting in eastern cities. It is especially immune from insects and disease attacks.

Opinions Vary Greatly Concerning Model City

Inspired by talk about a "model" city, the question arises, What is a model city? It cannot be answered, for the reason that the answer depends on the cultural viewpoint, with reference to the word "culture," in its dictionary application to "refinement of mind, morals or taste."

To say that a city is great or opulent or beautiful conveys a meaning more or less satisfactory to every one. But a "model" city in the sense here understood raises a conflict of opinions. Your model city may, for instance, be either too puritanical for some tastes or too wicked for others.

One man's meat is another man's poison. My model city may not be your model city.

New Orleans would not suit Boston as a model city.

Washington, as a model city, may not please Wayback or Hickville.

The model city of a Washington, a Jefferson, or a Lincoln might be to others Sodom or Gomorrah.

And so it goes. What we should do is to make our city a better city, not a model.—Washington Post.

Water Supply Important

Of the thousands of privately owned water supply companies, a few hundred have been brought together in the last few years into holding companies which were able to give each individual unit up-to-date management. Able engineering brains were introduced. Improvements and extensions were scientifically planned, and, in this way, the needs of the communities were anticipated in advance, so that the growth of the communities was, in many cases, furthered instead of retarded by lack of water facilities for industries, home developments, fire protection, sanitation, street cleaning, etc. The importance to the communities of a progressive water company can scarcely be overstated because an adequate supply of pure water is the basis of a higher standard of living, greater comfort, better fire protection and industrial progress.

Wooded Setting Effective

Consider a wooded setting for your brick house wherever it is possible. Nothing is quite so effective in enhancing the charm of a richly colored common brick wall as the constant change in the play of sunshine and shadows. This is especially appealing where the color tones are varied and sharply defined.

A ray of sunshine focusing suddenly upon a single brick of unusually vivid coloring, searching it out as a branch is swayed in the breeze, endows it in a twinkling with a flash of new and startling beauty akin to the glow of a firefly in the dusk.

Unpainted Building Decays

The recent authoritative estimate that the weathering of unpainted buildings and implements costs American farmers $800,000,000 a year leads the Farm Journal to point out what is really happening to a building while the owner thinks he is saving money by delaying the needed coat of paint. It is decay, but the actual wearing away of the exposed surface that makes a ruin of the neglected building long before its time.

Brick Veneering Pays

Many old houses have sturdy frames despite the shabby and old appearance of the exterior. Given a veneer of face brick, these houses will put on an appearance of new and will give service that compares well with an entirely new home, for the brick exterior provides protection against the elements and takes on added beauty with the years.

Two Billion Remodeling

The home modernising bureau of the National Building Industries expects that during the next 12 months $2,000,000,000 will be spent for remodeling.

Needless Suffering

The next time a headache makes you stay at home—

Or some other ache or pain prevents your keeping an engagement—

Remember Bayer Aspirin! For there is scarcely any pain it cannot relieve, and relieve promptly.

These tablets give real relief, or millions would not continue to take them. They are quite harmless, or the medical profession would not constantly prescribe them.

Don't be a martyr to unnecessary pain. To colds that might so easily be checked; to neuritis, neuralgia; to those pains peculiar to women; or any suffering for which Bayer Aspirin is such an effective antidote.

For your own protection, buy the genuine. Bayer is safe. It's always the same. It never depresses the heart, so use it as often as needed; but the cause of any pain can be treated only by a doctor.

When Babies CRY

Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

"Always in Good Humor" says Bill "and my Folks, too"

YOUNG BILL FREEMAN, Jr., of 707 South Street, Key West, Florida, has started in early telling the world his secret of health. "I don't know that I would have been the cause of divorce," writes Bill, through his mother, "but certainly the first three months of my life my mother was a nervous wreck, and so was I. I never saw father because he didn't like my disposition—and every day it was a fight at our house—either castor oil or an enema, and I was just about ready to quit home.

"Finally, they started in giving me a half teaspoonful of Nujol night and morning. I am five months old now, and I take Nujol every other night, which keeps me so well regulated that I am always in good humor, and so are my folks."

How simple it is, after all. No drugs, no medicines, no irritating cathartics. Just simple and natural lubrication which our bodies need as much as any machine. Nujol is not absorbed by the body. It is non-fattening; it can form no habit; it cannot hurt the smallest baby. What it does is keep our bodies internally clean of the poisons we all have and which, unless they are swept away as regularly as clock work, give us headaches, make us feel sick, low in our minds, blue, down on the world.

Nujol is as tasteless and colorless as pure water. Start this very night and see how different you will feel after a few days. It costs but a few cents and it makes you feel like a million dollars. You can buy it at any drug store in a sealed package. With millions of people all over the world keeping well with Nujol there is no reason why you, too, should not be joyous, full of pep, with the happiness that comes of good health. Get a bottle today.

PARTY FROCKS FOR TINY TOTS; SMOCKS FOR HOME AND OFFICE

DAINTY PARTY FROCK

TO BE very sheer, to be very, very, yes, very short, to be effectively lace-trimmed, to be exquisitely hand-worked, to be daintily colorful, thus does fashion outline the future for tots' party frocks.

While dresses for very little girls are to all appearance exceedingly simple, when it comes to decorative detail they are exquisitively wrought. To appreciate to the full the beauty of the frock in the picture, it should be seen in the original. This little affair of chiffon is accordion plaited, falling straight from the neck. Rows of fine lace edge the collar, the hemline and the tiny puffs which make a pretense of serving as sleeves. Sleeveless or with mere suggestions of sleeves in the way of shallow puffs or tiny capes, also interpret latest trends in modes for the diminutive fair sex.

The shower of pretty narrow ribbons falling from the left shoulder of this lovely chiffon frock, stresses another characteristic style feature of the newer lilliputian modes. All sorts of ribbon furbelows will beautify little girls' dresses this season.

Another point in the styling of wee frocks is the presence of yokes, some round, some pointed, many inset into the dress, others achieved by smocking, shirring and tucking. Collar treatments also, as observed in the little model pictured are repeated again and again.

Considerable elaboration is bestowed upon hemlines, not only are they scalloped and pointed but they are embroidered and handworked in all sorts of original ways. At times insets of contrasting color are interworked with hemstitching or hand-embroidered motifs accent their presence. Amusing animal and figure designs are frequently appliqued on the hems of play frocks. Many little frocks are hemmed with contrasting bands, such as pale blue, pink or maize organdie bordering white swiss or printed dimity or other patterned fabrics.

Very cunning are the ensemble costumes which designers are styling of crepe de chine for youngsters. This ensemble idea offers no end of fascinating possibilities. A particularly interesting costume consists of frock, coat, and bonnet of pale green crepe de chine, the same braided in vermicelli patterning carried out in self-coloring. Mothers who make their little folks' clothes will do well to make a note of the ensemble vogue. The thought applies to wash materials for playtime hours as well as to dress-up silks.

Little girls' dresses developed in white dimity, lawn, or batiste, display delicate hand embroidery, such as is usually associated with infants' wear, which all goes to show that what with such a quantity of ornate handwork to be done on clothes for the little folks of the household, mother's leisure hours will turn out to be a myth and a delusion.

Colorful Smocks.

Buy 'em or make 'em, smocks are the things for home and office wear. The new smocks are as gay as the flowers of spring and as modern as "lines" that are different can make them. And their materials! Well, here's mentioning a few of the swankiest—wide wale pique in pastel colors, also printed pique, basket-weave cottons, washable flat crepe, rayon alpaca, printed broadcloth as well as plain, printed batiste, rayon pique, honeycomb weaves, eponge, cotton reps, printed dimity, rayon shantung both printed and plain, cretonne, of course, and there are others too numerous to mention in one brief paragraph.

However, if you insist on a lengthier list compile it yourself by putting this and that together, for fabric combinations make up a considerable part of the smock program this season. That two materials are better than one, is evidently the idea of the designer of the smock pictured below. In this instance pale green rayon pique is trimmed with printed shantung. A slightly fitted-in waistline, double-breast fastening, a flared hemline, are three outstanding style items which enter into the fashioning of this charming model.

It seems that solid colors in pastel tones are preferred for smocks this season with flowery and modernistic prints used in a trimming way. It is along these lines of using contrasting materials that the most novel and charming smocks are being developed.

Refreshing style appeal also creates a new interest for washable daytime frocks. Such intriguing details concern dresses made of fascinating cottons and rayons as capelet collars, short-puff sleeves or no sleeves at all, sashes of self material tied in big bows at the back, tiers of circular flounces, peplum flares at the hipline, and so-on and so on.

Very smart indeed for daytime wear is the suit of black cotton or rayon pique. These are made up with as much care and observance of style detail as the more pretentious woolens or silks. A highly colorful printed pique tuck-in blouse adds the final touch of chic.

OUT OF THE MOLASSES KEG

Most of us think of molasses as an old fashioned sirup which was used in grandmother's day to sweeten the ginger bread, cookies and juicy pies, that gave an aroma to her pantry which we never forget.

However, molasses goes back much farther than grandmother's pantry, for our Puritan grandparents used molasses in all their cookery, and the full molasses keg was a large part of the food equipment. It was eaten with mush and cereals, on griddle cakes and all kinds of bread, sweetened dried apple pies, baked ham, cakes and puddings, as there was no sugar in those days, such as we commonly use now.

The children enjoyed the molasses candy pulls in those days just as they do today.

Molasses being the product of the South, has its delectable dishes which have been handed down to us from generation to generation. The following are a few worth keeping, as they are choice:

Louisiana Pudding.—Take one-half cupful of well washed rice, four cupfuls of milk, one-half cupful of raisins, one-half cupful of New Orleans molasses, one-half teaspoonful of each of cinnamon and salt. Mix well and bake two and one-half hours, stirring often during the first hour of baking. On the last stirring add two tablespoonfuls of butter.

Southern Waffles.—Sift one pint of flour, with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, then add one and one-fourth cupfuls of milk, two eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, mix and beat well, then add two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Add more milk if the batter seems too thick. Serve with New Orleans molasses.

Creole Sauce.—Cook one cupful of molasses and two tablespoonfuls of butter together for five minutes. Take from the fire and add the juice of two lemons. Serve as a sauce for cottage pudding.

The Best Gingerbread.—Take one-half cupful of melted shortening—lard is good—one teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of ginger, one cupful of sugar and one cupful of molasses, one scant teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in one cupful of boiling water. To three cupfuls of flour add the dry ingredients. Beat one egg, add the sugar, then all the other ingredients and mix well, add the boiling water in which the soda has been stirred at the last. Bake in a sheet or in gem pans. This is always good.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Serve crushed peanut brittle over ice cream, it adds to the flavor and is most appetizing.

Glorified Rice.—Whip one cupful of cream, add a pinch of salt and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Just before serving, toss two cupfuls of boiled rice into the cream mixture and serve topped with a teaspoonful of raspberry or other fruit jam for each serving.

Ginger Waldorf Salad.—Fold together one cupful each of diced tart apple celery, one-half cupful of broken nut meats, one-half cupful of mayonnaise and one-fourth cupful of candied ginger. Marinate with french dressing and rub each salad leaf with a cut clove of garlic. Serve at once after adding the nuts.

Cheese Sticks.—Slice six slices of bread and dip into melted butter, then into grated parmesan cheese. Toast on both sides and serve after draining on a paper. Nice with a lettuce salad.

Lobster Newburg.—Put three tablespoonfuls of butter into the blazer of chafing dish or in a saucepan, add one cupful of mushrooms, cook five minutes, add four tablespoonfuls of flour and a pint of milk. Add one and one-half cupfuls of lobster meat or shrimps or crabs. Mix two egg yolks with a little of the sauce and stir into the lobster. Cook just long enough to set the eggs. Season with lemon juice, a bit of nutmeg, cayenne pepper and salt.

Oxtails en Casserole.—Cut the tails in sections and cook in boiling water to cover; cook five minutes, then drain, dredge with flour, fry in fat with a small minced onion. Season well, place in a casserole with two cupfuls of strained tomato juice, one teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of worcestershire sauce and one finely minced carrot. Cover and cook in a slow oven three and one-half hours, adding more water as needed. Ten minutes before serving add a cupful of cooked peas. Add flour to thicken if needed, and serve the gravy with the meat.

Credits Success To New-Type Flour

This New-Type Flour Brings Baking Success to Thousands of Women

THOUSANDS of women now know how to get baking success every time—prize cakes and pastries, bread and biscuits—there's no "guess work" about perfect results.

They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe... it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Special "Kitchen-tested" Recipes in Every Sack
(Changed Every 3 Months)

Please accept, free of charge, simplified recipes for 12 of Betty Crocker's most delicious baking creations. Recipes for the daintiest cakes, the finest cookies, the most popular pastries known. Each one is "simplified" until it is remarkably easy, too.

All 12 of these simplified "Kitchen-tested" recipes are inside every sack of GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour. You can get a full set today—simply ask your grocer for GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour.

Woman Saw Five Kings

Luigia Caselli, the oldest woman in Italy, is reported to have died at Milan at the age of 108. She was called "the grandmother of Piedmont," and lived under nine popes, from Pius VII to Pius XI, and five sovereigns. The old woman was very well preserved, and could thread a needle without glasses. She had never taken medicine in her life, and to the many who visited her she was in the habit of saying, "The good Lord has evidently lost sight of me."

OLD DOCTOR'S IDEA IS BIG HELP TO ELDERLY PEOPLE

In 1885, Dr. Caldwell made a discovery for which elderly people the world over praise him today!

Years of practice convinced him that many people were endangering their health by a careless choice of laxatives. So he began a search for a harmless prescription which would be thoroughly effective, yet would neither gripe nor form any habit. At last he found it.

Over and over he wrote it, when he found people bilious, headachy, out of sorts, weak or feverish; with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy. It relieved the most obstinate cases, and yet was gentle with women, children and elderly people.

Today, this same famous, effective prescription, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is the world's most popular laxative. It may be obtained from any drugstore

Saved White Settlers From Indian God's Wrath

The great Pacific coast would yet be a red man's playground had it not been for the intercession of Jack Woodman, an Athabascan Indian, now a tottering old man. He recently told the story to a student who is looking up various matters of interest concerning the Indians of the Pacific coast. Jack says that tanbark is sacred, or rather was considered so, in the old times, to the god Negechu, and it was the habit of the early settlers to tear the bark from the trees and ship it away. Jack says that one day he encountered the god with fire in his eye, and he told Jack that the white men had offended him by their wanton ways in the forest, so that he said he was going to cause a great flood and wipe away all the white people on the Pacific coast. Jack says that he begged Negechu to refrain from this and explained that the whites were ignorant and did not understand what they were doing. He finally convinced the angry god of his error and appeased him in behalf of the white people so that the flood never took place.

Kills Self While Asleep

That Isaac Hyman, thirty-four, who was found with his throat cut, "acted in his sleep, in other words, unconsciously," was the verdict of a coroner's jury at Douglas, Isle of Man, recently.

Hyman was found dying in his parents' home with a bread knife in his hand. His brother said Isaac's health was good and he had no worries. The brother heard him mumbling in his sleep before he went down to the dining room, where he committed the act.—Los Angeles Times.

Retain Your Good Looks

How frequently a woman thinks, "Am I still attractive?" How much thought and study she devotes to her looks! That's natural. A woman hates to think she is growing day by day less charming and attractive. DR. PIERCE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION helps to preserve in a woman the charm and health of youth. It contains no harmful ingredient. This splendid herbal tonic is sold by all druggists in both fluid and tablets.

Write to Dr. Pierce's Invalids Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., if you desire free medical advice. For 10c Dr. Pierce will send you a trial package of tablets.

"Air Rights"

Air isn't free any more. In this era of vertical cities "air rights" command a respectable sum. Only recently the 38-story Harriman building on lower Broadway paid $742,500 for a 33-year lease on the air above an adjoining five-story structure. This is to insure tenants of the Harriman structure air and light for that length of time.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Mothers . . . Watch Children's COLDS

COMMON head colds often "settle" in throat and chest where they may become dangerous. Don't take a chance — at the first sniffle rub on Children's Musterole once every hour for five hours.

Children's Musterole is just good old Musterole, you have known so long, in milder form.

Working like the trained masseur, this famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other ingredients brings relief naturally. It penetrates and stimulates blood circulation, helps to draw out infection and pain.

Keep full strength Musterole on hand, for adults and the milder — Children's Musterole for little tots. All druggists.

Members of the Federal Radio commission at Washington, D. C, held a public hearing last week on the petition of radio station WOWO Fort Wayne for an increase in the station's power to 50,000 watts. The station is now employing 10,000 watts. The keen rivalry between Fort Wayne and Indianapolis for a radio supremacy was expected to be manifest at the hearing by objections from interests at the state capital.

SPORTING NEWS

Last week was a full week for the fans around here—four games here and two away from home. Between the church, lodges, clubs, athletic events and other social events, they just about had us run ragged. But we figure that it was all worth it. Living cowards or dead heroes, by gum, we are going to see the games.

INDEPENDENTS BEAT HICKSVILLE IN CLOSE GAME

The second benefit game proved to be a real game on last Wednesday evening, between the local Independents and the Hicksville Merchants. A large house turned out to see Hicksville make a noble effort to defeat the Independents on their own floor. Hicksville intentions were alright, alright, but of course, the home team had some thing in mind besides getting beat and the result was a 31 to 29 score in favor of St. Joe.

The game was, according to many of the fans, one of the fastest ever played on our floor. No players were eliminated because of fouls. Air tight guarding was the feature of the game and the game was as busy as an ant hill on a slice of water melon.

The first half ended 15 to 10 in favor of the Merchants. But the locals came up from behind tied things up at the 17 to 17 period in opening of the second half. The score was tied twice afterward and at the end of the game the score stood 27 to 27. In the five minute overtime period, the Merchants led out with two baskets and the crowd thought that the game was over but the home team tied things up at the 29 to 29 station and then scored another and the whistle blew. The Merchants played a good game but they simply did not know their calico this time.

SPENCERVILLE SWAMPS ST. JOE IN RAPID TILT

One of the best exhibitions of scholastic basket ball of the season was seen here Friday night between Spencerville and the local High School teams. A large crowd came out, as usual, between these two schools, to witness a close fast game and as a rule the fans are never disappointed.

Wade, of St. Joe, started things off with a side delivery basket and the game was on. St. Joe led in scoring during the first half, Spencerville following 3 points behind, the half ending 13 to 10.

The second half was full of snap and vim and within five minutes of the end of the game the score was 19 to 19. Wade and Morr were eliminated on fouls which weakened St. Joe's lineup. During the last five minutes Spencerville got two field shots and one foul throw which ended the game 19 to 24 in Spencerville's favor. Keen guarding on both teams made scoring difficult and most of the points were made from far out.

INDEPENDENTS DEFEATS PAYNE

The Independents romped over the fast Payne team here Saturday evening in a good game. At the end of the first half the score was 10 to 14 in St. Joe's favor, but Payne opened the throttle and tied the score at the end of the third quarter 18 to 18. In the last quarter the locals tightened things up and piled up a lead that the Payne crew could not overcome and the game ended 27 to 24 in St. Joe's favor.

ST. JOE HIGH SCHOOL MEETS THEIR WATERLOO

The St. Joe High School played one of the best teams in the county Saturday evening known as the Waterloo High School team. The score was 42 to 11. The girls team accompanied the boys team and were defeated 57 to 15. Anyway, Gang, that's the way to learn to play the game. Get a few good grubbings and they will learn to play basket ball with the emphasis on the basket.

Thoughtfulness

The distinguishing quality of the successful funeral director is thoughtfulness. This thoughtfulness is shown not only in his actions at the time of the funeral service, but in the facilities he has prepared in advance. Every desire of his clients must have been foreseen long before, and provided for.

But such preparation is only possible against a background of long experience. Years of service must have taught the funeral driector these little ways of adding to the comfort of those he is called upon to help.

Our service has such a background of experience. During the many years that we have ministered to the needs of the community, we have acquired a fund of sympathy and understanding which enables us to fulfill the unspoken wishes of our clients.

RED CROSS ISSUES STATEMENT TO MOTHERS

Dear Mothers:

More about those rats! To me, it was most interesting to learn of all the things the scientists were finding out about the food needs of human beings thru working with families of rats and guinea pigs. They have found out a lot about the need of those spark ignitors or vitamins of which I told you. Really their findings have almost revolutioned completely the opinions they have on what was adequate food for human beings. They found that when the diet lacks these vitamins it effects appetite. The animals eat well for awhile but later they seem to lose appetite. They fail to grow. The hair becomes rough and loses its gloss. The eyes become dull and even go sometimes so far as to lose sight. Legs become twisted. The animal becomes listless and finally ill. That this is caused by the absence of these vitamins has been proven by the fact that when foods that are known to be rich in vitamins are given to the animal, it begins to improve and usually overcomes the condition altogether unless in too advanced stage Interesting, isn' it?

But why do I tell you this? Because it means something to us as human beings. We need those vitamin foods even more ourselves. And the story of those animals shows just what is happening to us, to our children, if our diet is lacking in these spark ignitors month by month, year after year. 'Tis true that conditions may not become as serious in a child or the adult, as we often find in the experiments on rats, but anyway they are running way below par. It may manifest itself in that child only through a lack of appetite, retarded growth, in a nervous, irritable child, physically below par, who easily "catches" every disease that passes the neighborhood, has many colds and in adult life usually finds himself the victim of some serious disorder or lacking in vitality.

These same scientists have shown us too that a body lacking in these food essentials ages sooner than another. The skin becomes wrinkled, the hair is effected and the posture is aged. Every mother wishes for her daughter, lasting beauty and youth—for a son too. There is no better beauty parlor than your own dining table.

Elephants to Tango

Dancing elephants that will stage a tango contest will be one of the many big features of the Shrine Circus in Fort Wayne the week of February 10 at the Shrine auditorium. Two performances will be given every evening at 7 and 9 o'clock, with matinees at 2:30 on Wednesday and Saturday only. In addition to the big circus, a merchants' exhibition and free shows will be offered in the exhibition hall.

In addition to the act mentioned above, other big features from the John Robinson shows to be seen in the Shrine Circus this season will be the Famous John Robinson four military elephants; three Larconians, comedy acrobats; the Aerial Kellys; Edna Curtis' animal athletes; the Great Shubert, world's greatest aerial contortionist; the Shannon trio, featuring the youngest kiddies in acrobatic circles; Keyo Namba and Prince DeHoshi, Japanese performers; Melvin Hollis and Troupe of Riders, five in number; Ben Tahar, Arabian acrobat; Upton-Whiteside troupe of wire walkers and Bert Clinton of movie fame who will perform funny stunts on parallel bars. The clown section will be headed by the popular favorite, Billy Lorette, that comical policeman.

So that the kiddies from surrounding towns can take in the Shrine Circus, the various traction lines will carry the little ones to Fort Wayne, Saturday, February 15 from any point for a round trip rate of 50 cents.

WINTER JELLIES A ND MARMALADES

(By Betty Barclay)

"How about some strawberry preserves mother?"

"You ate the last bite yesterday, John!"

This is the season when the above dialogue, varied in a hundred ways, takes place in thousands of homes.

Even an immense stock of pickles, preserves, conserves, jellies and marmalades, has an uncanny way of disappearing long before preserving time comes along again. Gifts to sick friends, guests, and the constant demand of the family males that they be given "something to dip their spoons into," see to it that the preserve closet is depleted very early in the year.

The wise housewife decides promptly to restock that closet immediately. Naturally she does no have an opportunity to prepare many of the delicacies that are put up in August and September, bu she still has the opportunity to put up many goodies—far more than you would imagine.

Marmalade may be made—for the citrus fruits are always obtainable. Apples may be turned into a dozen tasteful delicacies Prunes and other dried fruits may also be called upon. Even the humble carrot may be turned into a marmalade that is extremely delicious and very unique.

Best of all, most of these winter fruits call for a considerable quantity of sugar, so that winter jellies and marmalades furnish an important source of energy and interior warmth during the cold winter months.

Here are several very simple recipes that may be tried without digging very deeply into a pocketbook that may have been strained during the holiday season that is not so far behind us. Try them and see how much more comfortable it is to preserve in cold weather than it is when the mercury is flirting with the top of the kitchen thermometer:

Winter Apple Jelly

Wash the apples, cut them up without peeling or removing the cores, cover them with cold water and cook until very soft. Strain juice through a cloth, without pressing, and cook very slowly for about 25 minutes—using 12 ounces of granulated sugar for each quart of juice. Pour into glasses, cool, and then place in refrigerator for several hours until it thickens.

When making apple pies or cooking apple sauce, the peels and cores may easily be turned into several glasses of this delicious jelly.

Carrot Marmalade

A dozen raw carrots, four cups sugar, three lemons and one teaspoon each of ground cloves, ground cinnamon and ground allspice will make this unusual winter dish. Grate carrots, add sugar and let stand one hour. Add lemon juice and spices. Cook slowly for one hour. Turn into sterilized jars and seal when cold.

Orange Sweet Pickle

This calls for four oranges, two cups of sugar, one and one-third cups vinegar, one teaspoon whole cloves and one teaspoon stick cinnamon. Peel oranges, removing all white membrane; cut into thick slices; steam until clear and tender. Boil sugar, vinegar and spices for 25 minutes. Add fruit and simmer slowly for one hour. Place in sterilized jars and seal.

1930 Prune Jam

This is very economical. Two cups prunes, four oranges, one cup sugar and half a cup of water are the only ingredients. Wash prunes and cut, pulp from pits. Put pulp through food chopper. Peel oranges and cut in small pieces. Cut rind of two oranges into small pieces. Mix all together, add sugar and water; cook slowly until thick. Turn into sterilized glasses and when cool cover with paraffin.

Silver Hoard Put Away by Romans Unearthed

At Caerleon in Monmouthshire, where, a Roman legionary fortress stood to keep the Welsh marches for the Caesars in the Third century, excavators digging there unearthed some interesting secrets.

The one that is the oddest is that of the three centurions of the Second Augustan legion whose names, Quintinus Aquila, Vibius Proculus, and Vibius Severus, have been newly found. One of them must have been a hard-faced man who had done very well out of the war (like some men of a later day).

Whether it was hidden by Quintinius Aquila or by one of the two named Vibius we may never know; but beneath the floor of the quarters of one of these three centurions was a hoard of 280 silver coins. They may have been wrung from the neighboring Britons. Perhaps they were part of the military chest of the soldiers.

Some of the companies of the legion about that time appear to have been given marching orders for the north, where they were to take part in the work on Hadrian's wall.

Untimely End to Lives of Brave Adventurers

It is remarkable how few of the eminent men of the discoverers and conquerors of America died in peace. Columbus died broken-hearted, Roldin and Robadilla were drowned, Ovando was harshly superseded, Las Casas sought refuge in a cowl, Ojeda died in extreme poverty, Encisco was deposed by his own men, Nicuessa perished miserably by the cruelty of his party, Vasco Nunez de Balboa was disgracefully beheaded, Narvaez was imprisoned in a tropical dungeon, and afterward died of hardship, Cortes was dishonored, Alvarado was destroyed in ambush, Almagro was garroted, Pizarro was murdered, and his four brothers cut off, and there was no end to the assassinations and executions of the secondary chiefs among the energetic and daring adventurers.

Floral Barometers

The sturdy marigolds which enliven our gardens are splendid weather prophets. If the flower is tightly closed in the morning, you may rest assured that there is rain to come, but with true intuition they seem overbold just now in spreading their petals. The scarlet pimpernel is also sensitive to rain, and even an approaching shower will send its petals curling in. From this peculiarity the pimpernel takes its name of the "poor man's barometer." Contrary to these flowers, when the dandelion closes up its petals in the morning, a fine day lies ahead, because it does not like too much sun.

Cause of Hailstorms

The stones which fall during ordinary hailstorms measure from one-eighth to one-half inch in diameter, their size depending upon the violence of the upward columns of air that produce them. Hail, like rain, is caused by the vertical circulation of the air. Rain is formed by the condensation of drops of moisture in cooling air which grow larger as the air rises until they are heavy enough to fall. Each of the drops rises and falls at least once. Hail, which is frozen rain, is caused by the drops being tossed higher.

Electrons in Atom

Physicists of today state that there is evidence that all atoms known have in them a certain definite number of negative electrons and exactly the same number of positive electrons. For instance, the lead atom consists of a positive nucleus charge of 82 units about which 82 electrons revolve; zinc, a nucleus charge of 30 units with 30 revolving electrons; helium, a nucleus charge of 2 units with 2 revolving electrons; sulphur, a nucleus charge of 16 units with 16 revolving electrons; platinum, 78; gold, 79; radium, 88, etc.

Magnetic Poles

The geographical poles are the points at the imaginary ends of the earth's axis of rotation, lying 90 degrees north and south latitude. The magnetic poles are the points on the earth's surface where the lines of magnetic forces are vertical. They are the ends of the axis of the earth's magnetic polarity. First Milk Bottle

The earliest milk bottle known was the hide of a goat, with the openings tied up to prevent the escape of the fluid. It is said that butter was first made accidentally when milk in a goatskin bottle slung across a camel's back was bumped and sloshed during the weary miles across the desert wastes. It is a long process of evolution from this crude churn to the modern motor-driven churns in our up-to-date creameries.—Burdette Service.

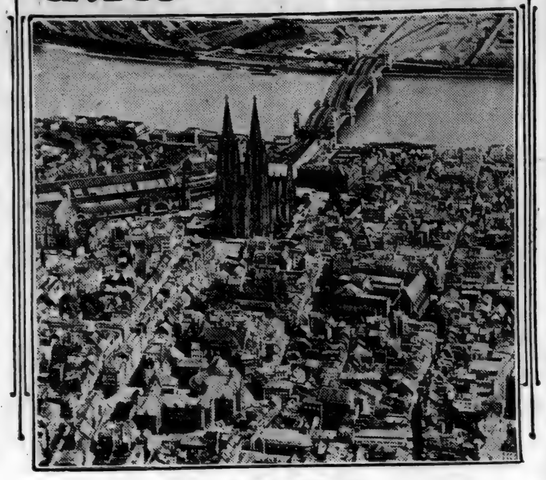
Cities on the Rhine



Koln Seen From the Air.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE varied group of towns and cities linked together by the Rhine form a New England of Germany, of prime importance in the republic's drive for international trade. Barely 50 miles inside the German border lies Duisburg, gateway to the busy Ruhr, premier mining and manufacturing district of Germany and one of the chief industrial regions of Europe. Duisburg has a population only a little below a quarter million.

Ruhort, the part of Duisburg situated where the Ruhr river meets the Rhine, far from being an unimportant town, takes at least one world honor. It is the most extensive river port in the world. When the quays of the older part of Duisburg and those of the little town of Homberg across the Rhine are added, the wharfage facilities of the Duisburg district are fairly staggering in extent. They stretch for more than five miles along the Rhine; and many branched basins have been constructed leading from that river and the Ruhr as though giant hands had been pressed into the earth again and again, leaving a channel for each finger.

A constant stream of tugs, barges and larger vessels moves in and out of the channels under normal conditions, and the craft of Ruhort are to be found in all parts of the Rhine. Down the Ruhr valley come coal and some iron, though the larger part of the iron needed in this great industrial region is shipped in from German Lorraine, Luxemburg, Sweden and Spain. A considerable part of this is brought in on the Rhine. Other raw materials and food products are imported, adding to the commerce, and coal and manufactured products are shipped out in great quantities.

Near the water front in the Duisburg district are situated innumerable factories and industrial establishments—collieries, steel and iron plants, rolling mills, blast furnaces, foundries, machine shops, chemical works, saw mills, shipyards, and various other enterprises.

Old Duisburg dates from the dim past, being first mentioned in 430 A. D. By the Eleventh and Twelfth centuries it was a thriving river port.

"Village on the Dussel."

Cities are strewn thickly in heavily populated Germany. Dusseldorf is only 20 miles up the Rhine from Duisburg, and 24 miles down stream from Koln, where the British maintained a bridge-head after the signing of the treaty of Versailles.

Dusseldorf means "the village on the Dussel," and when first heard of in 1159 this name fitted it. Now it is a "village" of more than 360,000 population—a city with more inhabitants than Seattle and not many thousands less than Minneapolis. It is one of the handsomest cities in western Germany with commodious parks and some fine old buildings. The streets of the old nucleus of the city are narrow and crooked, but the newer sections have been laid out with wide avenues.

Ten years before the World war railroad tracks which were along the bank of the Rhine were moved and the space so obtained was made into an imposing thoroughfare overlooking the river, the Rhine promenade. There, British Tommies, French Poilus, and their Belgian comrades took the air.

Like Duisburg, Dusseldorf is an important industrial center and has capacious port facilities. But its industrial life is not so markedly dominated by coal and iron, and it is more than a city of factories and shipping. It takes additional toll from the thriving Ruhr region by serving as its principal banking channel. Its textile industries are of great importance.

Koln (Cologne) is one of the most popular stopping places along the Rhine. Its city officials are accustomed to welcoming an annual deluge of travelers.

Koln Is Prosperous and Handsome.

Although Koln is two thousand years old, it reflects its prosperity and modern development in wide, tree-lined boulevards, broken here and there by flowering gardens and parkways ornamented with monuments, and equestrian statues of celebrated German countrymen. Fine shops and imposing mansions border these thoroughfares, but now and then one wanders into a section where medieval Koln reveals itself in tortuous, narrow, cobbled streets, walled by ancient gabled house fronts and dimly lighted by antiquated gas posts.

The Roman wall that once surrounded old Koln has long since been destroyed and its foundation now forms one of the city's most beautiful boulevards and parkways—the Ring. Only the gate towers of the walls remain, marking the limits of the old city. Beyond them Koln has spread out, absorbing numerous suburbs until its population now is nearly 700,000.

As Germany's great river port and one of its major railroad centers, Koln is the St. Louis of the republic. Under the graceful arched bridge that connects the city with the east bank of the Rhine, pass long strings of barges, lumber rafts, barge steamers and palatial passenger boats.

Koln has a large trade in grain, wine, mineral ores, coal, leather, timber and porcelain. Some of the products of the city's industries are known by their names such as Cologne brown, a brown coal, or lignite, used as a pigment in paints; Cologne ware, a plain hard stoneware, mottled gray and brown, which is made into ornamental jugs; Cologne spirits, a rectified liquid containing 96 per cent alcohol; Cologne thread and Cologne blades.

The French could honestly claim that at least a portion of Koln's fame is due to good French advertising. The sweet-scented liquid known as cologne is said to have been first manufactured in Koln in 1709 by an Italian. Cologne is the French translation of "Colonia," (meaning colony) which was formerly the Roman name of the German city. The English adopted the French translation, but the Germans call their city Koln. While Cologne perfumes have been called "Kolnisches Wasser," in Germany, the Germans, too, have generally adopted the French "eau de cologne."

Fifty-seven miles further up the Rhine is Koblenz, where American troops of occupation were stationed. In prewar and war days it was a typical German military city.

When Augustus Caesar sent Drusus to conquer the people of the Rhine region, that brilliant general built half a hundred forts along the river, and around some of these sprang up cities. Thus Koblenz originated.

Koblenz Full of History.

Frankish kings lived at Koblenz. In the Eleventh century the city obtained a charter, and for 800 years it was ruled by archbishop electors. It flourished as one of the Rhenish league of cities, but after the Thirty Years' war it became less prosperous. French, Swedes, Russians and Germans occupied the town at various times until the congress of Vienna awarded it to Prussia. In 1822 it became the seat of government of the Prussian Rhine province. An historic old house in Koblenz is the birthplace of Metternich, that Austrian Machiavelli, who helped organize, and presided over the congress of Vienna.

Koblenz derived its name from its location, on the triangle formed by the confluence of the Rhine and the Moselle, a location similar to that of Pittsburgh, Pa., on the Ohio and the Allegheny. The Romans called it "Confluentes."

Frowning from a steep precipice of rock, nearly 400 feet above the Rhine, across the Moselle from Koblenz, is one of the most famous of German forts, the Ehrenbreitstein, over which for several years the Stars and Stripes flew. It formed the principal feature of the extensive defenses about Koblenz. That city was considered of prime military importance because of its navigation outlets on both rivers and its numerous railway lines.

Louis the Pious—not so pious, though, that he remained a monk when his sons coaxed him to a monastery in the hope of getting his kingdom—founded the church of St. Castor in Koblenz in 836. But the present building with its four towers dates back only to the Thirteenth century.

In front of the church is a monument which attests the easy-going Russian sense of humor. The monument, erected by the French, bears a glowing tribute to Napoleon's successes in Russia. When the Russians occupied Koblenz their commander inscribed a few lines which, translated, mean, "Seen and approved by me, commandant of the city of Koblenz, January 1, 1814."

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT BLACK PIG'S PARTY

LITTLE BLACK SQUEALER decided he would have a party.

"Will you come, squeal, squeal?" he asked Miss Ham.

"Thank you, grunt, grunt," said Miss Ham. "I'll be pleased."

"Will you come, Grandfather Porky Pig, squeal, squeal?" he asked.

"Ah, yes, grunt, grunt," said Grandfather Porky, "your dear old grandfather will do you the great honor of coming to your party."

"Will you come, squeal, squeal?" asked Little Black Squealer of Mrs. Pink Pig and Master Pink Pig and of his father.

"Squeal, squeal, grunt, grunt," they all said, "we will come with pleasure.

"Shall We Name a Date for You?" Asked Grandfather Porky.

"We will be with you, and you can count on us, as people say."

"Will you come, Sir Benjamin Bacon?"

"Grunt, grunt, I accept your kind invitation," said Sir Benjamin.

"Will you come, Sir Percival?" Little Black Squealer asked.

"I will come," said Sir Percival Pork. "Yes, yes, I will come, grunt, grunt."

"Will you come, Brother Bacon?" Little Black Squealer asked. "Squeal, squeal, will you come?"

Brother Bacon twisted his tail, and said:

"With delight, with delight. Grunt, grunt, with delight."

"Will you come, squeal, squeal, Sammy Sausage?"

"Indeed I will, grunt, grunt," said Sammy Sausage.

"And Pinky Pig, how about you?"

"I'm your pig gentleman when it comes to a pig party," he answered.

"But," said Miss Ham, "when is the party to take place? I'd like to know."

"Oh, yes, Little Black Squealer, when are you going to have your party?" asked Grandfather Porky Pig.

"You forgot to tell us the date," said Mrs. Pink Pig.

"You didn't mention that," said Master Pink Pig.

"We must know," said Master Pink Pig's mother.

"I hope it is to be soon," said Benjamin Bacon.

"That would be pleasant," said Sir Percival Pork.

"When is the big event to be?" asked Brother Bacon.

"Yes, when is the party to come off?" asked Sammy Sausage.

"I must keep the day free and not go to market that day," said Pinky Pig's mother, and Pinky Pig said:

"I'll come and bring my merry little appetite, But when is the date of your party?"

"Well," he said, "I decided I would have a party. But I haven't decided just when my party would take place."

"But that is the most important," all the pigs said.

"Of course it is the most important," said Little Black Squealer.

"Shall we name a date for you?" asked Grandfather Porky. "I think it would be nice to have it soon, then all the other pigs should return your charming hospitality—all save myself.

"For an old grandfather is doing enough of an honor to come to these functions."

"Well, I thought of having you all name the day for me," said Little Black Squealer.

"I thought you could all name the day which would be convenient for all of you to bring the food. I thought it would be one where everyone entered into the spirit of the thing, and each brought something—a regular picnic, in other words.

"But I'll be the chief one to plan the picnic party, and it will be in my part of the pen."

"Why, the very idea," said Miss Ham, "he was going to have us bring the party." And she walked off.

"Never have I heard of such nerve," said Sammy Sausage.

"Well, he can't do that sort of a thing with us," said Brother Bacon.

"The child has no manners," grunted Grandfather Porky. And he strutted off in his great fat fashion, but looked at Little Black Squealer out of his small eyes.

And his look said quite plainly:

"Of all the nerve—! Well—!"

Everyone had walked off now. And the party was off, too. Little Black Squealer's idea hadn't worked well in the pen.

SCISSORS CUT FRIENDSHIP

"I'LL give you a cent for them, or they'll cut our friendship," said the recipient of a pair of exquisite gold embroidery scissors. For it is written or rather cut into the pages of superstition that a gift of knife or scissors cutteth in twain the love or friendship between him that giveth and him that receiveth!

Such a gift was once as popular as it is now taboo! For among the middle classes during the reign of Elizabeth in England, a pair of scissors was a common, we might almost say the staple for wedding gifts! As the modern bridal couple receives vases and candle sticks, those who ventured then into the bonds of matrimony were bombarded with scissors! Let us hope they were good dodgers.

The purpose of this gift was to arm the prospective husband and wife with a weapon for severing the knot, should it become painful. In the language of the day:

Fortune doth give these pairs of knives to you.
To cut the thread of love if it be untrue.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

MAGPIES

TO SEE one magpie is not so bad, though you may expect no good luck for some time thereafter. To see two magpies is a sign that some enterprise you are engaged in is likely to have an unfortunate ending, or at least that its success will hang a long time in the balance. Three magpies seen together is a most unfavorable omen.

This is a common superstition in northern Europe, including the British Isles, and in this country. Sailors on shore have gloomy forbodings when they see three magpies. Sir Walter Scott tells of a seaman who said to him, "I never saw three magpies but twice. One of those times I nearly lost my vessel and the other time I fell off my horse and was badly hurt. All the world knows that one magpie is bad, two are worse and three the very devil."

Our superstition in this country regarding magpies is an inheritance from German and Scandinavian folklore. In the days when witches flourished they were accustomed to hold high carnival on Walpurgis night—the night before the first of May—and at that time the said witches used to transform themselves into magpies and—according to the Scandinavian mythology—fly to Blakulle to consult the devil. In fact these birds are suspected of having relations with the Spirit of Evil at other times and today when the magpies molt, the Swedish peasants will say that they have been to Blakulle to help the devil get in his hay and his yoke has worn the feathers off their necks.

Much water has passed over the dam since the magpies flew to Blakulle: of the thousands who view the omen of three magpies askance how many ever heard of the place of the legend? Yet this most reprehensible custom of the birds in the dim days of old has given them an evil reputation which, apparently, they will never be able to shake off.

THE ECONOMIC APPEAL

MANY suggestions have been made for the attainment of international peace. A warless world is an ideal condition devoutly wished for by every person. But just how to realize that ideal is a question now receiving astute consideration by men who hold responsible positions in the business and political world.

Organized efforts for the attainment of international peace might be divided into three classes, upon two of which much time and labor have already been spent, while the third is only beginning to receive serious consideration.

L. A. Barrett.

Of the two classes, the Moral appeal is doubtless the most important and effective. It seeks through voluntary peace organizations to create "a will to peace" through cultivating public opinion in favor of peace. That public opinion is a very vital factor, no one will deny. Such organizations, unattached to any political party, are free from governmental control. The legislative appeal endeavors through compacts, official documents, etc., to enter into peace agreements with other nations. Many of these take the form of agreements to reduce the size of the navy and war materials.

The third effort is comparatively new. It is the Economic appeal. The International Chamber of Commerce has now before it for serious consideration the permanent elimination of war through economic methods. It is claimed that it would be impossible to carry on war without the use of basic metals and minerals, such as steel, nickel, mercury, etc. The argument is that those in control of the markets for these things should agree together that any use of them for other than industrial purposes would constitute a violation of trust, and at no time should they be sold for war purposes. Mercury for instance is indispensable in warfare. If the sale of mercury could be so controlled as to make it unattainable for war purposes, the result would be self evident. The same may be said of iron ore, coal and other raw materials. May we not expect a very valuable contribution to be made through the Economic appeal for the abolishing of war?

His Turn

Saying grace at the table is still customary in the home of the M—s, as the following story illustrates: At a dinner recently, when the guests were seated, the host turned to the gentleman on his right and said, "Mr. B—, you will return thanks."

Billy, age five, remonstrated emphatically. "Call on me, daddy! Call on me! I haven't prayed for a week."

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

"You must keep on hoping," pleaded Miriam.

"They like Hiram," continued their father. "They evidently want him."

"Oh, no," gasped Marjory. "Not Hiram, father. Not in your church."

"I like him myself," said her father gently. "Better him than—some others."

But Marjory shook her head passionately. "No, no," she whispered. "Not in your church."

Ginger hurried back with the "Discipline."

"Find it, Miriam. You're up on indexes."

Miriam deftly turned to the index, referred to section 341, hurried down to paragraph 2, and read aloud.

"'The annuity claim of a Retired Minister shall be not less than one-seventieth (1-70) of the average salary, house rent excluded, of the effective members of his Conference who are Pastors or District Superintendents, multiplied by the number of his years of service in the effective relation, including two years on trial, as a member of an Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church—'"

"Mercy," interrupted Ginger. "It's geometry. We'll have to wait till Horace comes home."

"Why, it's very simple," explained her father. 'One seventieth of the salary of our conference—we are not a very rich one, you know—is twenty-one dollars. Multiply that by—"

"X—darling, you forgot x," interrupted Ginger again.

"X is the number of years one has been preaching. My x is twenty-three. Multiply twenty-one dollars by twenty-three years, and it comes to four hundred and eighty-three dollars. But we have not quite enough money in our treasury to meet the claims in full, so the pro rata reduction would allow me about three hundred and twenty dollars a year. Approximately twenty-five dollars a month. That will hardly support a family."

"Oh, dearest, you have supported us long enough," said Miriam. "It is our turn now."

"Why, father, with your twenty-five a month, and my—er prospects—Why, darling, we'll be—simply—jake."

At eleven o'clock, Eddy Jackson came with Hiram Buckworth and the two men listened in silence as they told them, as indifferently as they could, of the purport of the special meeting.

"So that's what it was," Eddy said soberly. "I was afraid of it."

"They needn't offer me your church," said Hiram Buckworth stoutly. "I wouldn't accept it for any consideration—either financial or spiritual." Marjory glowed at him. "Unless," he added reflectively, "unless they would make some arrangement to let us both work along together, and use me as your assistant—until your eyes are restored."

"You couldn't work as my assistant, Hiram. You are too good a man for that. And I couldn't even assist you—blind as I am."

"I don't believe the church as a whole will stand for it," Eddy Jackson broke out, finally. "Old Jop has just talked them into this. And I'll bet I can talk them out of it. I say we just walk out on them and start a church of our own. They might keep most of the money, but we'd take most of the religion."

"An affectionate thought," smiled Mr. Tolliver. "But not a very Christian one. No, Eddy, this is the thing a minister accepts, and does not fight."

"Put up your sword, Peter," quoted Ginger softly.

"Well, if worst comes to worst," declared the young man, "I'll move the whole gang of you out to Pay Dirt, and install you in the lab. And we'll start a farmers' spiritual union."

Laughing at that, they walked slowly out the flagstone path to the curb.

"How's the private business coming along?" Eddy asked in a low voice.

"Rather slowly, in the face of such an emergency as this." Ginger Ella sighed. "I may have to forge another link or so."

CHAPTER VII

A stricken silence prevailed in the sturdy little touring car that Eddy Jackson guided carefully along the country roads from Red Thrush to Pay Dirt. Not one word was spoken. But in the rear seat, Miriam, the sensible twin, sat with one of her father's hands crushed tightly between both of hers, and now and then she pressed it against her cheeks in a wordless passion of sympathy, longing to comfort. It was not until the car stood before the side porch of the big white house, and Miriam, with firm, light hand, had led her father up the steps, that Eddy spoke.

"Mr. Tolliver," he said awkwardly, "don't worry. It's a raw deal, all the way round, but honestly—they mean all right. We'll do something about it, that's all."

"There's nothing to do, Eddy. And they not only mean all right, they are all right."

"And if it goes through the way they have planned, we'll start something on our own account. We're right in the midst of the farming district here, and a lot of these people don't bother to go so far to church. Pay Dirt is big. We'll build a little chapel of our own, and run it to suit ourselves. I—don't want you to leave Red Thrush."

"You're a good friend, and a good man, Eddy," said the other gratefully. "But don't have me too much on your mind. It's all right. I will never do anything that does not completely accord with the policy of our church, you understand. Good night, my dear boy, and to repeat your own words, don't worry."

Silently, up the stairs to the right wing, Miriam guided his steps. She turned back the covers of his bed, carefully spread out the things he would need for the night, placed a fresh towel on his rack.

"Father, shan't I read to you a while?" she offered. "Until you feel tired enough to sleep."

"No, thanks, dear, not tonight. You're a nice girl, Miriam, but I don't want to be read to. I have many things to think of."

"How's the Private Business Coming Along?" Eddy Asked in a Low Voice.

"But, darling—they aren't nice things."

"Well, some of them are. You, for instance."

"Father," her voice was low, almost apologetic, "father, you know we are so used to each other, you, and we girls, living together all the time, and arguing, and quarreling, and making up. We—never say the real things that are in our minds. But father, in our hearts, we—all of us—think you are just wonderful, father."

His arm tightened about her shoulders. "And I tease you girls, and laugh at your little tricks, and your vanities, and what Ellen calls your man-madness. But all the time I know you are the very best girls in the world."

"Oh, father, we aren't. Well, Helen, she is awfully good. And Ginger is good, too, in her funny way. But Marjory and I are not much."

There was silence between them, as each smiled tenderly into the darkness, thinking of the thousand sweet, ridiculous, whimsical, pathetic happenings of the shabby old Methodist parsonage. But after a little while, he sent her back to bed, and to sleep. But Wesley Tolliver himself lay awake all night, thinking of many things.

When Miriam entered his room the next morning she found him standing by the window, fully dressed.

"Oh, father, you're getting too smart for me," she said regretfully. But when he turned to look at her, the expression on his face sent a swift glad brightening over her own.

"Oh, father," she cried again. "You've thought of something! Everything is all right again, isn't it?"

He laughed quite merrily at her young eagerness. "Perfectly all right again," he assured her.

"Oh, tell me all about it," she begged.

But this he denied her. "You must wait to share it with the rest of the family. How impetuous you are getting—why, you are quite another Ginger!"

So Miriam was obliged to content herself by straightening his tie, and giving a careful brush to his hair, before she led him down to breakfast. Here, apologetically, he asked an additional favor at the hands of Eddy Jackson.

"You have done so much, Eddy, and you are always so kind that I really hate to ask anything more of you. But I must go in right after breakfast to speak to my daughters. I shan't be gone long, but I must go. Now if you can't take me, or send one of the men, suppose I just telephone in for a taxi."

"Of course I can take you. Why, I haven't a thing to do," lied Eddy Jackson stoutly.

"Father!" ejaculated Miriam. "The way you talk of ordering taxis one would think you were a doctor or a lawyer at the very least."

So Eddy Jackson relinquished his experiments for another day, and after a few brisk instructions to the men, turned his small car toward town again. But he would not accompany the minister and his daughter into the house, said he had an errand uptown and would be back for them in an hour, realizing that this hour was to be a sacred one, and that even the presence of a friend as faithful as himself would be an intrusion.

It was Ginger who first caught sight of the touring car unloading its passengers at the end of the flagstone path, and her voice sent its summons ringing over the house.

"Margie, quit primping this minute. Come down. It's father! Father's come! Take off your curlers, Jenky. It's father!"
